A drug and alchol fact-finding committee has recently been established by the Interfraternity Council and the Panhellenic Association. The primary role of the committee is to discover if there is a serious drug and alcohol problem within the Greek system at Villanova, and if so, the extent to which such a problem exists.

The committee is comprised of six dedicated and concerned greeks. Jan Janosik, who is presently running a confidential drug and alcohol counseling center in the basement of Stanford Hall, is the committee's advisor.

"The findings of this committee will not be held against any fraternity or sorority, under any circumstances," assures Megan Jones, co-chairperson of the committee. Jones said that the nature of the committee is investigative, not punitive. The committee wants to discover if there is a problem, and consequently to offer solutions and assistance.

"We also want to make everyone aware that there are legal issues involved. There will be a problem with this because it [drugs and alcohol] revolves around social events," said Jones.

The first official action taken by the committee will be to develop a survey and deliver it to all the greeks. The survey, which will be distributed in the near future, will hopefully reveal existing problems related to drug and alcohol abuse. The committee is confident that the responses will be honest, since the results of the survey will only be used to provide a solution to the drug and alcohol problem and not to stifle the social activities of the Greeks.

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, commented, "It should not be misunderstood that the drug and alcohol problem exists only with the Greeks. The rationale behind the committee's being comprised of Greeks is that the Greek organization affords the means to reach out to the Villanova community as a whole. This being the case, I am in support of the actions of the committee."

Sigma Nu runs can drive

By RICH CREMIN

Once again a Villanova fraternity has proven that the Greek system is truly concerned about our community. On Homecoming weekend, the brothers of Sigma Nu engineered a very successful philanthropic project, "can-doo." The objective was to collect as many canned goods and cash donations for the needy in the Philadelphia area as was possible. Local food distributors and numerous members of the Villanova community contributed generously to the effort.

Sigma Nu reported that approximately 10,000 pounds of canned goods and over $500 were collected. Gary Bonas, assistant director of student activities, added, "It was a tremendous effort on the part of Sigma Nu and their alumni to plan and conduct this event. The whole Greek community is proud of their efforts."

Sigma Nu brother, Nick Worthington said, "We are glad Villanova students were generous enough to support this drive and would like to extend an appreciation to all those who participated. I feel there will always be a need for philanthropies and that the Villanova greek community will be there to help those who are less fortunate."

Fraternity observes Founders' Day

By ARIOCH GRIFFITHS and PATRICK DONAHOE

The Pi Kappa Phi fraternity was founded Dec. 10, 1904, at the University of Charleston in South Carolina, by seven dedicated young men. Seventy-eight years later, a similar group of men, 64 to be exact, founded the Epsilon Omicron Chapter of Pi Kappa Phi here at Villanova. This was the 100th chapter of Pi Kappa Phi founded in the nation. It was also the largest founding class ever for Pi Kappa Phi.

Epsilon Omicron was founded Dec. 10, 1982, under the leadership of Brendan Dalton, who became the first archon, or president, when the colony became a chapter. Dalton addressed the chapter this past weekend after the fraternity had a formal gathering with the alumni.

As the former archon put the past into perspective it was a sobering experience to realize the duty of continuing the fine tradition of this chapter. Brendan's younger brother, Terence, has now taken the reigns of fraternal direction and he is confident that he can surpass his brother's achievements as archon.

The entire Pi Kappa Phi fraternity at Villanova is looking forward to the future as Terence and other young visionaries will take charge of the executive council of the chapter in January.

Delta Gamma aids blind

By BRIDEEN GALLAGHER

"Send a flower to someone you like, send a weed to someone ... else." This was the theme of the Delta Gamma sponsored flower and weed sale held last week on campus. Approximately $500 was raised by the fund drive, with all of the proceeds to benefit Delta Gamma's philanthropy, sight conservation and aid to the blind.

Kim Zarkesh, foundation chairperson, ran the event which was held last Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday in Connelly Center and Dougherty and Donahue halls. Flowers and weeds were sold for a $1 donation, and delivery was offered both on campus and to surrounding areas. Delta Gamma borrowed the idea from a sorority at Indiana University of Pennsylvania.

As a relatively new chapter, Zeta Alpha wanted their first fund-raiser for their philanthropy to be original, as well as successful. Zarkesh said that there was great campus support, and added, "Every sister played an active role in the sale, which made it not only fun, but also very worthwhile."

Delta Gamma plans to hold the flower and weed sale annually and hopes to increase its success next year.

Order of Omega defined

By JILL DeFORTE

The Order of Omega is a national institution which honors those Greeks across the country, that excel not only in leadership within the Greek system, but in academics and community service as well.

Established at Villanova four years ago, the Order of Omega is comprised of roughly 5 percent of the Greek population. The selection process occurs twice during the year and membership is limited to well-rounded juniors and seniors in good academic standing.

Individuals are nominated by their fraternity and sorority chapters and are then reviewed by a six-person selection committee. The number of individuals chosen each semester is not based upon a numerical criterion, but rather on the amount of quality individuals that apply.

The main objective of the Order of Omega is to honor outstanding greeks and to establish a better understanding and a more positive relationship between Greek organizations and the Villanova community.

Alumnus weaves a murderous tale

By ROBERT DUGGAN

God's Children
Stephen F. Freind
Beech Tree Books

Kevin Murray, Pat Carney and Vincent Grosso were three friends, three classmates of Villanova's class of 1963, but now they have become three driven, powerful men whose goals and desires have set them at odds with each other in a battle not only for their careers, but also their lives.

These three men are the central figures in Stephen F. Freind's fine novel, God's Children. Freind is a 1966 graduate of Villanova. While at Villanova, he was student body president and the sports editor for the Villanovan. After graduation, Freind worked as an FBI special agent and later became an assistant district attorney. Currently, he is serving as a state representative in the Pennsylvania legislature while continuing his law practice.

Freind builds his entire novel around the three main characters, blending his own personal experiences as a Catholic, a Philadelphian and a state representative into the narrative.

Murray is a Pennsylvania state legislator who is the leader of the state's pro-life movement. He has made the fight for the unborn children of God his own — a mission he feels to be his destiny. With his blend of irreverent Irish Catholic humor and strong moral conviction, Murray is the most interesting character of the three.

Carney is a Catholic priest with an eye on a Cardinal's hat. He is more than willing to compromise the love of his friends if it will preserve his chances to rise in the Church hierarchy.

Grosso is the Don of the powerful Philadelphia Mafia. Putting "the family" above all else, he will do whatever it takes to get what he wants. When the obstacle to his plan becomes Murray, he faces the dilemma of choosing between his friend and "the family." His choice of "the family" puts not only Murray in peril but also all of Murray's work for the pro-life movement.

The greatest asset of this novel is the depth of its material. The author is obviously comfortable and confident with the detail he brings to the work. Too often, such familiarity is tarnished by excessive sentimentality, but not here.

As a fellow Philadelphian and fellow Catholic grade school product, I easily identified with his memories of stickball games, stuffy grade school, nuns and listening to Phillies games on the radio.

The feature which struck me even more so than these memories was the author's strong pro-life stance. Freind introduced the issue of killing the unborn into the story smoothly and argues his point persuasively and thoroughly. His argument, however, is almost too thorough, to the point of overshadowing all the other elements of the book. The conviction of the author's argument makes this an understandable flaw.

Of the few problems I had with the book, the greatest of these was with the passages dealing with the world of state legislature Murray is involved in. I found these sections hard to follow. Buzzwords, acronyms and lingo familiar only to someone deeply interested in the workings of state government are thrown relentlessly at the reader. Aside from this terminological blitz and a few rough spots of dialogue, this is a very well written book.

After weighing the many good features of God's Children against the bad, I would recommend it highly. Not only does it offer an interesting plot and characters but also a thought-provoking argument against the murder of God's unborn children. Any fan of popular fiction or any person concerned with the rights of the unborn (which, as I feel the author would agree, should be all people) should find God's Children to their liking.

Billy Joel disappoints fans with live album

By KEVIN HECHT

Kohuept
Billy Joel
Columbia Records

It seems that the idea of releasing live albums has become quite overused. These albums have their place, capturing raw energy and intensity not present in the studio, but this energy must be used to enhance the quality of the music performed, not to distort or hinder the quality of the original composition.

Billy Joel, a consummate live performer, used his 1981 release, Songs in the Attic, to rejuvanate some of his older material in a live setting. The album was crisp, clear, cohesive and presented its songs in a pleasantly original manner. Unfortunately, Joel's latest live release fails to capture these qualities on all counts.

Kohuept, recorded during Joel's 1987 tour of Russia, falls far short of showcasing the artist at his best. Many of the songs do not come across well when played in front of a large audience in a live setting and the musicianship is not Joel and his band playing at the level of which they are capable.

Classic Joel standards such as "A Matter of Trust" and "Uptown Girl" are huge disappointments when compared with the studio versions of the songs. "Uptown Girl" is played too fast and hindered by an annoying monologue. "A Matter of Trust" sounds distorted and unrehearsed.

It seems that the album was released to make some extra money on the strength of the heavy publicity surrounding Joel and his band during their tour in the Soviet Union and not to present the public with different, interesting versions of classic songs. Sadly, a great live band does not showcase its potential.

Thankfully, the album does have its moments. "Stilletto" sounds great live, but on this tune, as well as with "Prelude/Angry Young Man," one can detect some of the notes played off key. Of course this is usually the case with live music, but live albums should contain quality a notch above the usual in the music. The best cut on the album is a refreshing rendition of "Honesty," but this was really just a carbon copy of the original.

"Goodnight Saigon" works well live, as does "Allentown," but the versions on this album do not really add anything new to the songs. A fan might be advised to stick to listening to the songs on the studio album, The Nylon Curtain, then to spend the money for these live renditions.

Joel also attempts to cover Dylan's "The Times They Are A 'Changing,'" and the Beatles' "Back in the U.S.S.R." The idea for the songs is a good one, as Joel uses the Iron Curtain setting as a backdrop for these fitting renditions, but a live album should really focus the artist covering his own songs at their best.

While Billy Joel could have cleverly used Kohuept as a more modern version of Songs in the Attic, he rests on his laurels and the publicity of the tour to lazily put forth a double album that is not worth the money.

Has Baryshnikov lost his spark in 'Dancers?'

By ELANA ROSE STARR

"Dancers" directed by Herb Ross
Cannon Group, Inc.

In "Dancers," famed dancer/film director Anton "Tony" Sergeyev (Mikhail Baryshnikov) complains that his formerly electric footwork has lost its zing. He "dances without a spark," that he cannot seem to recapture. The same can be said about much of this film, which is predictable and lackluster. The script is particularly uninspired.

"Dancers" reteams Baryshnikov with director Herb Ross, with whom he made his film debut in the dazzling 1979 drama, "The Turning Point." (Ross' continued interest in dancers is because of the influence of his late wife, the dancer Nora Kaye, who served as an executive co-producer on "Dancers.")

In both films, Baryshnikov's roles are a twist on his real-life persona as an exiled Russian dancer extraordinaire and a relentless womanizer. Baryshnikov plays himself very well, but it would be wonderful to see him stretch more than his quadriceps by tackling a fresh cinematic guise.

No fault can be found with newcomer Julie Kent in the ingenue role opposite Baryshnikov. As Lisa, the innocent woman who falls in love with Sergeyev, Kent's corn-fed naturalness is delightful. Blessed with long reddish hair and luminous dark eyes, Kent bears a strong resemblance to Leslie Browne, the young dancer in "The Turning Point."

In fact, Browne appears in "Dancers," as well, in a supporting role as a ballerina who had a long-ago affair with Sergeyev (similar to the one chronicled in "The Turning Point"). Her experiences with men have left her embittered and "mean as a sack of snakes," and she provides a cynical foil for Kent's wide-eyed innocence.

The format for "Dancers" is a film-within-a-film, used so effectively in such cinematic treasures as "The French Lieutenant's Woman" and Truffaut's "Day for Night." Here there is a comingling of romantic entanglements within an international corps of dancers paralleled with the on-stage actions in the film the troupe is making of "Giselle," the classic ballet/love story. However, the dancers' backstage antics do not engage the audience because there is not enough character development to warrant our interest.

Baryshnikov plays himself very well, but it would be wonderful to see him stretch more than his quadriceps by tackling a fresh cinematic guise.

The film is set in Rome, and, outside of the ballet itself, the few segments that highlight the city are the most watchable. In on such scene, the middle-aged dancer portraying Giselle's mother rehearses — both dancing and emoting — on a sunlit balcony, as Roman housewives doing their chores look on appreciatively.

In another scene, the dancers gather in the nearby countryside for a sumptuous picnic. The scene is redolent of Fellini's pictures, which often feature outdoor banquets, but instead of Fellini's grotesque, heavily made-up faces, the screen is filled with laughing, handsome people.

The two segments are so visually appealing that the weak script does not intrude. Aside from those scenes, however, only the ballet itself, complete with Baryshnikov's legendary leaps, is exhilarating, for both dance enthusiasts and those who know nothing about ballet.

"Dancers" was produced by Menachem Golan and Yoram Globus, best known for such marginal films as "Bolero." Lately, however, the two have been involved in more worthwhile endeavors, such as the arty "Maria's Lovers." While such a stance is commendable, let us hope that their future efforts at quality are illuminating rather than enervating.

Sting releases second jazz-based album

By KATHRYN QUIGLEY

Nothing Like the Sun
Sting
A&M Records

Sting has released his second jazz influenced album, titled Nothing Like The Sun. He uses the same musicians on this album (Manu Katche-drums; Kenny Kirkland-keyboards; Mino Cinelu-percussion and Branford Marsalis-sax) that he did on his Dream Of The Blue Turtles album.

When Sting released Dream Of The Blue Turtles, critics were surprised by the jazz sound. It was a radical departure from the reggae pop for which Sting and The Police became famous.

This album is very good. It does not disappoint, for the most part, either musically or lyrically. However, it is very easy to make comparisons to Dream Of The Blue Turtles.

Sting is an intelligent musician; his lyrics reflect this. To do a review of his album is almost to do an English literature term paper. However, the lyrics of his songs and explanations for them are on the liner notes of the album.

Shakespeare is the inspiration for the title of the album. The words "nothing like the sun" are a line from one of Shakespeare's sonnets.

The first song on Side 1 is "The Lazarus Heart," and it features fellow Police member Andy Summers on guitar. The inspiration for the song came from a vivid dream Sting had.

Musically, the best part of the song is Branford Marsalis' sax weaving through the melody.

The next song is also a "heart" song. Sting asks, "Why does tradition locate our emotional center at the heart?" This song gets my vote for best lyrics on the album. Reading his lyrics is almost like reading poetry.

"Never to be wrong/ never to make promises that break," he sings about someone who's afraid to fall in love again.

"Englishman In New York" is one of the few songs that are not political or love ballads. It is an innocuous tune about an elderly English friend of Sting's who has become an American citizen. The music is upbeat, although there is a strange break toward the end of the song.

Sting does write some of the most political pop songs today. "History Will Teach Us Nothing" continues that tradition. However, it reminded me too much of "Russians."

"They Dance Alone (Gueca Solo)" is also political. Sting wrote this after participating in the 1986 Amnesty International Tour, where he met political prisoners.

"It is one thing to read about torture, but to speak to a victim brings you a step closer to the reality that is so frighteningly pervasive," Sting says in the liner notes.

The Gueca is a Chilean courtship dance. The wives and mothers of the "disappeared" men (men who have been arrested and have never returned) dance alone to protest and to show their grief.

"They Dance Alone" is sad and melancholy, with a martial backbeat to fit the theme. It features Eric Clapton and Mark Knopfler on guitar, as well as Ruben Blades speaking one of the verses in Spanish.

The last song in Side 1 is "Fragile," which also has outstanding lyrics. "For all those born beneath an angry star/ Lest we forget how fragile we are."

The strains of synthesized strings run through the song. Sting plays a very pretty melody on guitar.

Sidé 2 is not as good as Side 1. The first song, "We'll Be Together," is the first single to be released from the album and is receiving much radio airplay.

It is a good song, but too much like "Set Them Free" from the Dream Of The Blue Turtles album. Sting even sings part of "Set Them Free" at the end of this song: "If you want to keep something precious" and "Love somebody."

"Straight To My Heart" has a frenetic backbeat. It seems to be a speeded-up version of "Be Still My Beating Heart" from Side 1.

The next song, "Rock Steady," is a sarcastic attack on T.V. evangelists and how people blindly follow them. The message is under the guise of Noah's Ark.

Sting describes "Sister Moon" as a "song for lunatics everywhere whose sanity is dependent on the phases of the moon." It is a slow, easy tune featuring Marsalis' sax.

One of the last songs is a cover of a Jimi Hendrix tune, "Little Wing." I have never heard the original, so I cannot compare it.

Nothing Like The Sun is worth its price if you enjoyed Dream Of The Blue Turtles. It is a different sound for Sting and one that he, with the help of some excellent back-up musicians, has become very good at.

JEWELS OF DARKNESS ★★★★★ FIREBIRD C64/128, AT, AMIGA, ST, IBM

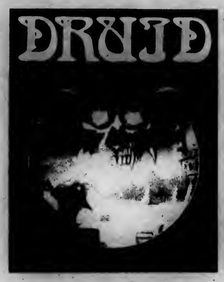
The person who had the idea to create this package should be greatly thanked. Jewels of Darkness brings together three great text adventures and adds graphics to them. Included in Jewels of Darkness are Colossal Adventure, Adventure Quest and Dungeon Adventure. For those uninitiated to the adventure game world, Colossal Adventure is the first text adventure and first adventure of all time, making Jewels of Darkness an adventure gamer's paradise.

Colossal Adventure takes you through Colossal Cave to find the treasures of the cave and rescue elves imprisoned in dungeons. This game still ranks as one of the largest adventure games and offers a tough challenge. Having already finished the game, I replayed it to look at the graphics and found Colossal Adventure to be more entertaining this second time around.

Adventure Quest and Dungeon Adventure are new adventures that take place in the same universe as Colossal Adventure. In Adventure Quest, you must make your way to the Black Tower to defeat the Demon Lord by possessing the four Stones-of-the-Elements. In Dungeon Adventure, you have defeated the Demon Lord and must collect his treasure, once more traveling toward the Black Tower.

Jewels of Darkness has everything that an adventure gamer could ask for: the first adventure ever, graphics and the ability to turn them off, two excellent new adventures and a novella entitled The Darkness Rises that encompasses the three games. Jewels of Darkness is a rare find.

CALIFORNIA GAMES ★★★★ EPYX C64/128, AP, IBM, AMIGA



California Games is a new addition to the Games family of sports and recreational events from Epyx that also includes Summer Games, Summer Games II, Winter Games and World Games. The difference in this collection lies in the events included on the disk, California Games involves six events that you can probably find practiced on any given day in the West Coast state of the title.

The six games on the disk are: Half Pipe Skateboarding, Foot Bag, Surfing, Roller Skating, BMX Bike Racing and Flying Disk. If this collection does not keep your thirst for recreational computing quenched, then nothing will. All of the events have detailed graphics that put you into the screen and let you lose yourself in the atmosphere surrounding a particular event.

The object of Half Pipe Skateboarding is to see how many stunts you can perform while rolling back and forth on the half pipe. These include Kick Turns, Hand Plants and Aerial Turns. Foot Bag checks how good you are at bashing the sack by awarding points for various maneuvers and keeping the bag in the air. Surfing brings all elements of the real sport into the game.

Roller Skating requires speed aand avoidance of many obstacles over a timed course. BMX Bike Racing gives you a tough course to cover while trying to perform stunts such as wheelies and flips. Flying Disk offers scoring opportunities for all manner of catches and challenges the player to both dive and run for disks.

California Games is chock full of the humor and excellence that you would expect in this bold attempt at a new set of sports events for the computer gamer. As well as the manual that details all events and offers a glossary of California lingo (awesome, dude, gnarly, etc.), California Games also includes a contest card that offerrs great prizes from many sponsors if you rub off three spots with the same prize underneath.

DRUID ★★★ FIREBIRD C64/128

Druid is a rather simplistic graphic adventure that pits you against four demon princes from an ethereal plane. It seems that the evil mage Acamantor has destroyed the peace and happiness in the land of Belorn by summoning these demon princes. As the most powerful druid in Belorn, it falls in your hands to rid the people of the evil spirits.

You perform this task by traveling through Acamantor's tower. You start in the gardens at the top of the tower and must slowly descend the stairs between levels after clearing each level of the spells, treasures and other useful items needed in your goal. Along the way, many monsters will confront you, including ghosts, beetles, slimes, devils, snakes and skeletons.

The graphics in Druid are very good and accurately depict all of the items and creatures as you would expect them to look. The game is challenging in that you must prepare yourself for the demon princes on the lower levels.

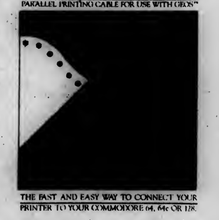
As a druid, you have the ability to use magic. You will need a Chaos spell to eliminate the demon princes as well as a variety of other spells to ward off monsters. You also are able to call up a golem, a mythical sidekick and protector of wizards, who will take some of the pain from the attcking monsters. In any case Druid is addictive and has enough elements and options at your disposal every minute to let you lose yourself for a while.

ROADWAR EUROPA ★★★ 1/2 SSI C64/128, AMIGA, ST. AP, AT, IBM

Roadwar Europa is the sequel to SSI's popular Roadwar 2000, the game that placed you and your road gang on the roads of America in a post-doomsday world. Roadwar Europa puts you in a similar situation in Europe in the same time period - the 21st century. You must travel the roads of Europe with your gang, with danger waiting at every crossroads and an important goal hanging over your head.

In Roadwar Europa, you must find five hidden hoards planted by a maniacal group of terrorists, find the enemy's headquarters and destroy the terrorist leaders. Do not expect this goal to be easy; as the package says, the game takes more than 40 hours to finish. However, these hours are not spent in boredom; you get to travel Europe and take advantage of the role-playing aspects of the game.

Roadwar Europa allows you to assemble a road gang the likes of which you might never expect to see in a movie. Taking this gang through battles with other road gangs and searches for food, fuel, medicine, supplies and ammunition is what makes the game unique and interesting. You will also meet up with mutants and cannibals along the way.



Roadwar Europa contains a complete manual that also includes a map of Europe, list of cities and command list and vehicle table on the last page for easy reference during play. The game is tough, but the climax is worth the effort.

ARCTIC ANTICS ★★★ EPYX C64/128, AP, IBM, ST, AT

Those vindictive spies are back again in the third part of the unique and highly entertaining computer version ofthe MAD magazine favorites from the Spy Vs. Spy cartoon. The Black Spy and the White Spy are used in Arctic Antics to add some fun to your game collection. The object of the game is to find a punch card, gyroscope, fuel canister and launch briefcase and make it to the launch rocket before you opponent (the other spy) does.

What makes Arctic Antics unique is the location oof the two rival spies — a frozen arctic island. Like the other two games and the cartoon, you have to set a number of traps for your opponent to prevent him from escaping the island before you. The Trapulator aids in this goal, with detonator, dynamite and other traps at your disposal.

Arctic Antics is tough to play, but the funny graphics and unique game play make up for this. There are a number of arctic islands to choose from and a number of obstacles that each setting presents. Regardless of difficulty, Arctic Antics is a must for Spy Vs. Spy fans and computer gamers alike.

GEOPRINT CABLE ★★★ BERKELEY SOFTWORKS C64/128

Since the arrival of GEOs on the market for Commodore computers, many Commodore users have found that they do not want to use any other system. In response to this demand, Berkeley Softworks has produced many other utility programs to make the GEO system complete for all computing needs. The latest addition to this collection is the geoPrint Cable.

The geoPrint Cable removes the need for an interface card or connector by directly linking your printer to the Commodore Printer port in parallel. In this way, no settings must be chosen and the data will always print on your printer because the cable is compatible with a large number of printers. Just plug it in and you never have to worry about printer compatibility again.

Quisett restaurant offers relaxed atmosphere

By THERESA JONES

This is my fourth year at Villanova and once again I have realized how many local attractions I have missed. I have driven past Haverford Square on Lancaster Avenue countless times and never knew what the sign Quissett referred to. It is Quissett — The Restaurant, and at the suggestion of a friend I decided to give it a try.

Four of us set out for Sunday brunch as a recovery from the Homecoming festivities of the day before. The atmosphere of Quissett was certainly a contrast to that of the tailgating — we were seated in a comfortably elegant dining room, which is the upstairs of one of the buildings in Haverford Square. A bar lines the back wall and there are about 30 small tables for the customers.

We were seated promptly and waited on by a very courteous waitress. One of my companions selected a wine from the chalkboard list of specials and I opted for a Bloody Mary (I guess our other two friends were not quite up for any alcoholic beverages just yet.)

We enjoyed our drinks to the playing of a harp, which may sound unusual, but was actually quite nice. The hostess told me that if you listen very carefully youu can pick out the themes from "Gilligan's Island" and "The Brady Bunch." However, I am afraid I missed them.

With our drinks came a basket of fresh fruit slices and warm, delicious corn muffins to tide us over until the appetizers came. Quissett offers a chilled tomato and dill soup as well as the soup of the day. A tasty sweetpea soup was a newfound treat for me.

A variety of salads also appears on the brunch menu, and the entrees range from the traditional omelette and eggs Benedict to quiche, pasta and steak. Among the four of us we tried the Caesar salad, challah french toast (served with fresh berries), chicken and broccoli crepes and a bacon-mushroom omelette. The omelette was a bit greasy and some of the chicken in the crepes tough, but otherwise I heard no complaints. On the other hand, there were no ecstatic tastebuds either.

While the entree portions were comparable to the moderately priced menu, I was definitely satisfied after finishing my meal. However, the waitress hit my weak spot when she brought around the dessert tray. A chocolate lover would certainly delight in the triple chocolate-chocolate-chip cake. I was forced to choose between pumpkin cheesecake and carrot cake.

At the advice of the waitress I went with the old favorite, carrot cake and was far from disappointed. The generous serving with walnuts and a dollop of sweet homemade whipped cream was simply scrumptious. The amaretto mousse which my friend ordered was also very tasty, though rich and heavy for a mousse.

My first impression upon walking into Quissett was that it was a bit too elegant for both my tastes and pocketbook. Actually I was pleasantly surprised by the very relaxed and comfortable atmosphere, though I do think for the typical college dining-out budget, Quissett is stretching the limits most of us set.

The lunch and dinner menus are more of a reflection of my first impression of elegance, yet the variety and preparation of the selections are appealing. My suggestion would be to save a visit for a special celebration, or get Mom and Dad to take you when they come to treat you.

However, if you think you would like to try Quissett sooner, there is live entertainment every Wednesday through Saturday nights. Dinner is served until 10 p.m., but the bar remains open until 12:30 a.m. or 1:30 a.m. Friday and Saturday. A call to the restaurant will give you a friendly answer as to who is performing, as well as further information about hours of serving.

While I would not say that sampling the cuisine of Quissett is a must, I do think it would be enjoyable and perhaps just the right touch for a very special evening or afternoon meal.

Aerosmith and Dokken rock hard on rainy night

By RUSS CECCOLA

Even though Philadelphia experienced the prelude to the first major snowstorm of the year in the form of heavy rain on Tuesday night, Aerosmith and Dokken kept the fans warm with their sets of heavy music.

Aerosmith is touring in support of their latest album, released a couple of months ago and titled Permanent Vacation. Dokken's new album has just come out this week and is called Back For the Attack. Both bands performed above expectations and showed why the Spectrum was sold out.

Dokken tore into their short, but solid, eight-song set with "Kiss of Death," the opening song of the new album. The number is a pretty fast one and Philadelphia fans welcomed one of their favorite bands back with loud screams and applause. Dokken only played two songs from Back For the Attack; the other one was "Burning Like A Flame," the first single from the record. The audience responded well to the new song.

The rest of the songs played were: "Just Got Lucky," "Alone Again," "It's Not Love," "Into the Fire," "Lightnin' Strikes" and "In My Dreams," which was saved for an encore. The only disappointment of the show was the number of songs; Back For the Attack is Dokken's fourth album and there are many more songs in the band's catalog. My opinion is that Dokken will pull a Whitesnake or Bon Jovi maneuver and wait for the album to catch on, and then starting a headlining tour.

The members of Dokken are Mick Brown (drums), George Lynch (guitars), Jeff Pilson (bass) and Don Dokken (vocals), the namesake for the band. Lynch is an excellent guitartist and showed his best work during his solo in "Into the Fire." The rest of the band kept the headbanging beat going and proved where the phrase "Rockin' With Dokken" came from. I was happy to hear that Dokken was touring with Aerosmith, and, after seeing their set, was not disappointed with their performance.

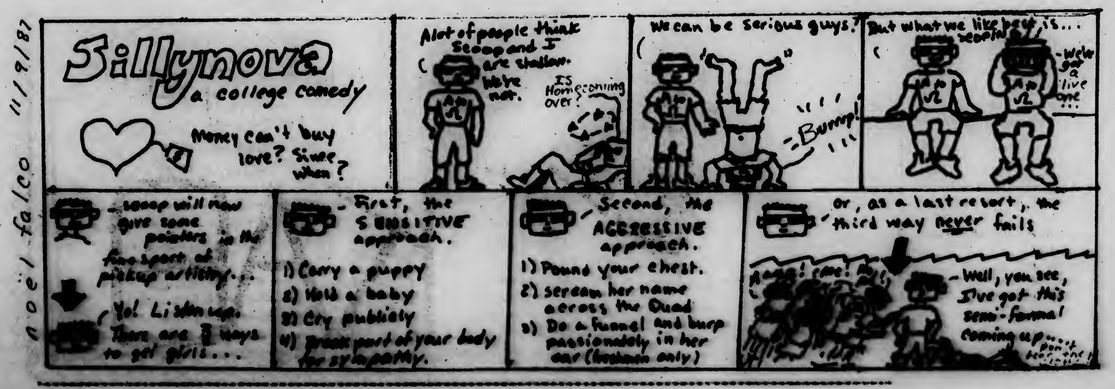
Aerosmith followed Dokken by storming into "Toys in the Attic," a surprise for an opener, but nonetheless well-taken by the fans. Aerosmith combined newer songs from Permanent Vacation and older classics in their 90-minute set. Even though the band is 15 years old, each of the members performed with the energy of a brand new, success-hungry band. This energy is what kept the audience as excited as they were and made good translations of the songs from vinyl to a live setting — the real home of Aerosmith.

The quintet that includes Steven Tyler (vocals), Brad Whitford (guitars), Joe Perry (guitars), Tom Hamilton (bass) and Joey Kramer (drums) proved their place in hard rock and kept the music flowing through 17 songs. Aerosmith played the four best tunes from Permanent Vacation: "Rag Doll," "Magic Touch," "Heart's Done Time" and the hugely successful "Dude (Looks Like a Lady)."

The only regret I have for the entire show is that Aerosmith did not perform the title track of the new album or "Back In the Saddle." These two are probably used to change the song lineup in other cities.

Philadelphia could not have asked for a better show from these veterans of blues-based heavy music. The set included so many of their classics that the concert was almost like a "best of" show. "Draw the Line," "Last Child," "When Lightning Strikes," "Sweet Emotion," "Train Kept A Rollin' " and "Same Old Song and Dance" were blared out to a music-hungry crowd as Tyler strutted up and down their two-level stage, and Perry and Whitford jammed on guitar.

The highlights of the show were "Sweet Emotion" and "Dream On," Aerosmith's first single and their biggest song ever. Roadies wheeled out a small electric piano for Tyler on which he played the introduction to "Dream On," which caused the audience to go simply crazy.



Philadelphia is one of the major stops on any tour and the fans proved why the city has gotten this reputation. "Walk This Way" and "I'm Down," a Beatles cover from Permanent Vacation, were saved for separate encores, as final testaments to the band's new popularity and retention of talent. If you can catch the tour in any other city, do not miss it.

'The Hidden' is thinking man's horror flick

By RUSS CECCOLA

"The Hidden"
directed by Jack Sholder
New Line Cinema

There has never been a film that claims not to be a horror movie, yet is so intrinsically terrifying, as New Line Cinema's "The Hidden."

Starring Kyle MacLachlan (of "Dune" and "Blue Velvet") and Michael Nouri, "The Hidden" is the story of an alien that manifests itself in people, causing them to commit violent crimes, drive fast cars and listen to loud music. Nouri and MacLachlan play the parts of Tom Beck and Lloyd Gallagher respectively. Beck is a homicide detective who must suspend all duties to help FBI agent Gallagher track down a maniacal killer.

What is unique about "The Hidden" is that you are shown the premise of the movie and the secret of the alien's survival in the first 10 minutes of the film. In an effect sequence that is stupendous as well as plot-revealing, the alien transfers bodies via the mouths of the first host to its existence on Earth and its next victim. This is the way that the alien moves around and is able to keep Beck and Gallagher at bay. Just as a host's body is about to die, the alien switches persons and continues its rampage.

Although some might argue that knowing this fact ruins the rest of the film, "The Hidden" surprises the audience by exhibiting chase sequences that keep people on the edge of their seats, yelling suggestions at the screen to characters. Gallagher knows about the alien and has trouble convincing Beck until it is too late. Their relationship is an outwardly weak one, but actually the two are strongly bonded together in the elimination of this killer of many faces.

In the course of the film, the alien transfers to a number of different people, but the first two that it takes over commit the most violent crimes and act in the most unusual ways. Jack DeVries, a stockbroker, opens the film by robbing a bank, brutally murdering many and taking off in a Ferrari that would make the richest yuppies drool. He turns the radio up loud and hums nonchalantly as he hits a man in a wheelchair in a park.

The alien spends the most time in Jonathan Miller, a CPA, who gains the parasite in the hospital where DeVries is put, after abducted. Miller has the most memorable scenes of "The Hidden," calmly saying "Bye" before he blows away two men and repeatedly stating that he wants a fast car that he saw, after which he takes it as if it was commonplace. Discovering which character the alien has moved to is what develops most of the tension in "The Hidden." A similar technique was used in both versions of "The Thing," with the difference that in the "latter" film, the characters knew that an alien was among them, but in "The Hidden" no such knowledge exists.

"The Hidden" is directed by Jack Sholder, an expert of suspense and terror, who also took the helm for "A Nightmare On Elm Street Part II: Freddy's Revenge." The techniques that are used to reveal bits and pieces about the alien as well as tense scenes and chases involving Beck, Gallagher and the alien's hosts directly show Sholder's fine work. "The Hidden" is set in Los Angeles, an aptly chosen setting, where the crimes committed are too bizarre to go unnoticed in even that city.

The effects sequences involve mostly gunshot wounds and blood stains, but special effects artist Kevin Yagher, who also worked on Freddy Krueger in the "Nightmare" films, shows his skill in the depiction of the alien. His creation is unique and shows something that has never been shown before, either in part or whole, in an organic being that lives within the stomach of its host.

"The Hidden" is definitely not a horror movie, even though its underlying theme reeks of such films. I would classify it as a suspenseful thriller with a taste of science fiction and horror. The movie did very well at the box office and is still in the area for those of you interested in seeing such a film. Even though you already know the premise of the film, there is still so much that is left to experience. "The Hidden" is the first thinking-man's thriller I have seen in a while and with any luck you will feel the same way after seeing it.

Promising young band, Bricklin, comes of age

By DIANE DRAGONETTE

Philadelphia's music scene is alive with promising young bands, and one that leads the pack is Wayne's own Bricklin. Attracting huge crowds wherever they play; the band defines the word "hot." I recently interviewed two band members, Scott Bricklin and Ian Cross, and discovered what makes these boys rock.

Bricklin is a sextet whose history stretches back to their junior high school days. Bricklin consists of the Bricklin brothers, Brian (guitar) and Scott (vocals), Cross (guitar), Jimmy Goetz (bass), Jake Meyer (keyboards) and Eddie Bader (drums). After building up a large followng, the band landed a contract with A & M Records in July of 1985. In June of 1986, their debut album entitled Bricklin was released, and they are currently recording a second album.

When describing their music, Bricklin credits bands such as the Beatles and the Stones as important influences. Cross said, "We really believe in songs that will last over a period of time." From the sounds of their latest material, I can say that Bricklin possesses the lasting power that will take them to the top and keep them there.

While discussing songwriting, Bricklin explained, "Sometimes it's born out of personal experience, and the song just writes itself. It's a gift really, flowing from another place." Another approach to songwriting is jamming, which allows Brinklin to collaborate and feed off each other.

After hearing a couple of the band's congs, curiosity brought me to my first Bricklin show. Bricklin satisfied much more than my curiosity, with their high energy performance and their hard rocking sound. Speaking of their live show, Cross stated "There's a real sense of camaraderie among the band, and we really enjoy what we do." Bricklin continued, "When people know you're too in control, the emotional level isn't there. You have to walk that unpredictable edge, or else it becomes flat."

Bricklin is a sextet whose history stretches back to their junior high school days.

Thinking back on significant gigs evokes memories of Bricklin's 1986 fall tour with Emerson Lake & Powell. Scott Bricklin recalled when the lights went out at Madison Square Garden and he lit the band up with a flashlight. Bricklin also cherishes the early club gigs when they were just starting to attract the attention of record companies and new fans. Whether it be a small club or a large hall, you can count on Bricklin to bring the house down.

Bricklin remains at the forefront of Philadelphia music despite all the new bands surfacing. The first album fared well in this area and now it is time for Bricklin to branch out with a second album. Bricklin summed up the band's determination with, "Either we make it, or we die,"

Cross continued, "We've come back from the highest highs and lowest lows, but the one thing nobody can take away from us is our songs." Bricklin's combination of strong songwriting, powerful live performancees and relentless determination should bring the band the recognition they so richly deserve.

Bricklin's upcoming album will attest to the tremendous growth that the band has experienced since their first album. Lyrically the album will deal more with life and less with love. Musically, Bricklin hopes to present a rougher edge by capturing their live sound on a studio album. We can look forward to the album sometime this spring.

Spring promises to be an important season for Bricklin. In April, keep your eyes and ears open for "Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure," a movie produced by Dino DeLaurentis. One of Bricklin's latest songs, "Walk Away" will be featured in the movie and will appear on the soundtrack. Cross your fingers for a video-single release on MTV.

Bricklin offered some final advice for any college bands that would like to establish themselves in this area. Bricklin stated, "Get out and play all the parties, and learn covers that fit the style you most want to write like. Then start writing, and don't get hyped out if you think you're not as good as someone else." Cross concluded, "Follow you gut instincts. If you believe in it, then go with it."

Bricklin believes in their music, and they are destined for success. This band is not meant to die. Catch Bricklin at a small club while you still can. I guarantee that you will not regret it.

WITHOUT YOU "FUN BUSTERS," TAILGATING WOULD NOT HAVE BEEN POSSIBLE!

On the scene . . . Entertainment tidbits

By STEPHEN POWERS

It has been only six weeks since the new television season started and some new network series are already headed for the Nielsen dumpster.

Last week, CBS' cancellation of "Everything's Relative" and "Leg Work" brought the number of failed series to four; the others are ABC's "Max Headroom" and "Once a Hero." In addition, CBS has put "My Sister Sam," starring Pam Dawber, on hiatus, which is bad news for the struggling second-year sitcom.

The networks are already rolling out replacement shows. On Friday nights, ABC has the return of "Mr. Belvedere" and the Philadelphia-based "Pursuit of Happiness," starring Brian Keith. Neither sitcom has much of a chance, given their competition "Dallas" and "Miami Vice." On Saturdays, CBS now broadcasts a movie, and ABC has the much-praised "Sable," which focuses on a jet-setting author who leads a double life as a crusading mercenary. "Sable" could do well in the ratings, considering that its main competition is NBC's "The Facts of Life," which is wearing thin after nine seasons.

So far this season, only two new series rank in the Nielsen top 20: Lisa Bonet's "A Different World" and "My Two Dads," both on NBC. Bonet's show should be doing well; it follows the number one-rated "Cosby Show" every week. The only logical reason "My Two Dads" scores good ratings is that it follows the popular "Family Ties." It certainly cannot be because of the show's quality; it is one of the worst sitcoms to hit the air in the last five years.

By no means does the lack of successful new series mean that there is a lack of quality programming on the three networks. ABC's "Hooperman," with John Ritter, and CBS' "Frank's Place" both show promise. And NBC's returning "Cheers," "St. Elsewhere" and "L.A. Law" are among the best programs ever produced for television. The networks just need to produce more quality programs like these. Shows like "Everything's Relative" just do not cut it any more.

In contrast to the new TV season, this has been the most successful fall season for theatrical films in movie history. At last count, the Michael Douglas-Glenn Close thriller "Fatal Attraction" had grossed more than $85 million. Cher's "Suspect" and "Like Father, Like Son" with Dudley Moore and Kirk Cameron have also done well at the box office.

In previous years, movie studios released their major films during the summer and at Christmastime, when people tend to go out more often. But last fall's box office smash, "Crocodile Dundee" marked the birth of the "new" fall movie season.

In the past few months, the studios have been releasing pictures with big names. So in the upcoming weeks, you will be seeing promos for "Hello Again" with Shelley Long, "Made in Heaven" starring Kelly McGillis and Timothy Hutton and "Death Wish 4" starring (who else?) Charles Bronson.

One movie promo you may not be seeing soon is one for "Caddyshack II." Warner Brothers has slapped Rodney Dangerfield with a $10 million lawsuit for backing out of the sequel to his popular 1981 movie. According to Warner Brothers, Dangerfield demanded and was guaranteed $7 million to make the film (including a $5 million advance), his own sauna on the set and a shortened work day. Dangerfield has not disclosed his reasons for refusing to make the film.

Opening in theaters today is "The Running Man," Arnold Schwarzenegger's latest movie. In this adaptation of the Stephen King story, Schwarzenegger rebels against the rules of a 21st century game show (no kidding), which offers prizes to its contestants for tracking down the "misfits of society." Richard "Family Feud" Dawson plays the game show's host.

BRIEFLY: The "Dirty Dancing" soundtrack tops Billboard magazine's album chart this week. Bruce Springsteen's Tunnel of Love drops to number two ... Simply Red will be the musical guest on tomorrow night's "Saturday Night Live." The group replaces Mick Jagger.

The California Raisins, currently seen in the clever claymation TV commercials, are releasing their first album. Included is their trademark song "I Heard It Through the Grapevine" ... Sharp-eared viewers heard Villanova mentioned on last week's miniseries "Echoes in the Darkness," based on the 1979 Main Line murders ... Garry Shandling is reportedly negotiating with Fox Broadcasting to bring his Showtime sitcom to the rookie fourth network.

Speaking of Fox, the successor to Joan Rivers' ill-fated "Late Show" premieres later this month. "The Wilton-North Report," produced by ex-"Letterman" producer Barry Sand, is described as a comedy-news program, and is named after the streets on which its studio is located. At last word, Channel 3 anchorwoman Terry Merryman was under consideration for the co-host job.

Smiths released third album this year

By ANDREW MATHIS

Strangeways, Here We Come
The Smiths
Sire Records

Well, it seems like just a few weeks ago that I was reviewing the latest album by the Smiths, Louder Than Bombs. However, it is no coincidence because it was just a few weeks ago. The truth is that the Smiths have released yet another new album called Strangeways, Here We Come and it is, in fact, their third release this year.

Strangeway, Here We Come is the first album that the Smiths have released with all new material since 1986's The Queen is Dead and, once again, they have combined terrific, sometimes haunting melodies of guitarist Johnny Marr with the powerfully realistic lyrics of lead singer Morrissey. The overall tone though, of Strangeways, Here We Come is very somber with the themes of lost love and social injustice used throughout the work.

The entire first side of the album is excellent, containing both upbeat and slower songs monopolizing on the ideas of lost love and social injustice. The best song of this side is "Death of a Disco Dancer" which, despite its alarmingly slow tempo, is one of the most striking songs on the album.

Rather than being a ballad, it is the observation of a townsperson about the repeated murders in his neighborhood including those of disco dancers and his feelings about them. The best part of the song is the ending, in which the refrain "Love, peace and harmony/very nice but maybe in the next world" is sung over and over among great guitar and keyboard parts.

Also worth noting on the first side is "Stop Me if You Think You've Heard This One Before," a strong statement on lost love and the effects on the loser. "Girlfriend in a Coma," also on the first side, is one of the most interesting songs on the album because of its misleading melody. A seemingly happy melody hides the lyrics which tell of a boyfriend's anguish over his true love's catatonic state. Do not be misled, though. It is tastefully done.

Unfortunately, the songs on Side 2 are not as good as those on Side 1. Often, they tend to be too downbeat, despite their lyrics, as in the other downbet songs. Though the songs are good, there are no real high points on Side 2 besides "Unhappy Birthday," which is the high point of the entire album. Although it is a bit short and could have been expanded a bit more, it is very memorable both melodically and lyrically.

The lyrics tell, of course, of lost love, but speak more of the effects on the emotions of the loser in relation to his former lover. In short, he is extremely hateful and says this in no uncertain terms.

The melody is somewhat fast-moving, full of quality acoustic guitar playing. Once again, the best part is the ending, complete with the refrain "From the one you left behind" sang over and over again.

Despite its lower points, Strangeways, Here We Come is still a good effort by the Smiths and, unfortunately, their last, because of guitarist Johnny Marr's leaving the band even before the release of this album. At any rate, the album, as are all of the Smiths' albums, is lyrically perfect as well as musically successful, although

Granta explores story telling

By JOE McGOWAN

"The Story-Teller"
Granta 21 (Spring 1987)
Granta Publication, Peguin Books

Granta, subtitled "A Paperback Magazine of New Writing," is an English quarterly literary journal that is very much in vogue overseas. Distributed by Penguin Books, Granta has the look and feel of a paperback novel and, at its standard length of 256 pages, the quarterly delivers a substantial body of new and specially commissioned works of prose fiction and nonfiction.

Among the authors whose writing has appeared in Granta are: Saul Bellow, Gabriel Garcia Marquez (both Nobel Prize winners), Primo Levi, Doris Lessing, John Updike, Graham Greene, Nadine Gordimer, Italo Calvino, David Mamet, Gunter Grass, Mario Vargas Llosa — a veritable hall of fame of contemporary writers.

The most recent issue of Granta, No. 21 (Spring 1987), revolves around the theme of "The Story-Teller." An introductory essay by John Berger entitled "A Story for Aesop," takes up the theme of story-telling with the first of mankind's story-tellers — the Greek fabulist Aesop, who lived, according to Herodotus, somewhere around the mid-sixth century B.C. Berger's selection is a reflection upon Velasquez's 1640 portrait of an aged Aesop, of what is reflected in the eyes, face and dress of the ancient story-teller.

Story-telling begins in earnest with the selection from Bruce Chatwin, which is prefaced by an interview with this author conducted by Michael Ignatieff. Chatwin's entry "Dreamtime" was excerpted from his latest book The Songlines (released by Viking Publishers in August of this year). Chatwin's latest work of fiction is a mix of inventio, journalism and travel writing — the style and presentation is similar to that of 1986's Patagonia Revisited, a collection of travel pieces, historical sketches and literary essaysd produced in collaboration with Paul Theroux.

The Songlines is based upon Chatwin's sojourn in Australia, especially the time spent among that land's Aboriginal population. The "songlines" of the Australian Aborigines are, according to Chatwin: " ... a labyrinth of invisible pathways which stretch to every corner of Australia. Aboriginal creation myths tell of the legendary totemic ancestors — part animal, part man — who create themselves and then set out on immense journeys across the continent, singing the name of everything that crosses their path and so singing the world into existence ... In other words, the whole of Australia can be read as a musical score ..."

The chapter "Dreamtime" follows the character Arkady Volchok, a Russian emigre studying the Aboriginal tribal sites and "dreamings" — a reference, again, to the Aboriginal cosmological notion of how things were dreamed into existence. Chatwin's passage is marked by a sensitive respect for the Aboriginal customs and charged with an intense interest in fathoming the strange ways of a strange land. A great part of Chatwin's purpose in writing The Songlines was to discover the origins and universal elements of story-telling.

The story-telling continues with selections such as "Menudo" by Raymond Carver, "The Judge's Wife" by Isabel Allende, author of The House of the spirits and daughter of the former Chilean leader Salvador Allende (who was driven from office into suicide by the CIA), "Paradise" by Jonathan Schell, author of the highly influential The Fate of the Earth, and the short piece "Weightless" by Primo Levi, whose death last April expanded the void in the Italian literary world left by the passing of fellow novelist Italo Calvino.

The photographic essay "Photographs from the North-west Frontier" by Ed Grazda demonstrates that the cameraman can also be a story-teller, as each of Grazda demonstrates that the cameraman can also be a story-teller, as each of Grazda's superb photographs has its own story to tell.

That this quarterly magazine Granta remarkable. "The Story-Teller" manages to bring together seemingly disparate pieces under a common theme without betraying the individual author's craft. Each selection in some way explores the nature of story-telling and the story-tellers themselves, searching for some universal themes or patterns. As Chatwin noted: "I do find it quite interesting that in one form or another all the great early epics — whether it's the Odyssey or Beowulf — are traveller's tales. Why should it be that the metaphor of the voyage is at the heart of all story-telling?"

at some points the intermingling of these two important characteristics is less than perfect, but by no means bad.

I guess I am just comparing "Strangeways, Here We Come to the Smiths' earlier work, which I highly recommend, and although they may not be fair, it is still inevitbale. Strangeways, Here We Come stands alone as a very good album, but is, in comparison, not up to par.

The Column 13 staged a promising show

By ANDREA CINELLI

The Column 13, headed by lead singer and former Villanova student Chris Campion, staged a very promising performance Saturday night at the 23 East Cabaret. Campion's theatrical antics and the band's extremely talented musicians combined to create a fine show.

The Column 13 is on the right track, but not quite there yet. The band has definite potential. With their more recent tunes, they are establishing their own distinct sound and are overcoming the clear U2 and R.E.M. overtones which smother their earlier songs.

The five piece band based in Huntington, New York includes Campion as lead vocalist, Brian Lavan on lead guitar, Tom Licameli on rhythm guitar, Phil Mastrangelo on bass and Neil Nunziato on drums. Campion was majoring in Theatre and English at Villanova until last spring when he left and began devoting more time to the band. He writes all the lyrics for the group.

Campion was amusing, to say the least. He be-bopped around the stage and leapt into the audience. He put on an entertaining performance and his voice was impressive even though he had a cold.

The members of the Column 13, Chris Campion, Phil Mastrengelo, Neil Nunziato, Brian Lavan and Tom Licaneli appeared at the 23 East on Nov. 7.

The band opened with "Room At The Inn," a song with a medium tempo and a U2 sound. Campion's dramatics overshadowed this good tune as he strutted across the stage, playing the lead singer/love god role to the hilt. The audience was impressed.

They went on to play "Ghosts and Hangers On," another smooth song with fantastic guitar interplay. Lavan was impressive on lead guitar as Campion whipped into a dance solo.

The band switched from a mellow to a more upbeat sound with "Delusions of Grandeur." This boppy tune literally stirred up the crowd and moved them to dance. The Column 13 kept the energy flowing with "The Brave," another song with a fast tempo and interesting guitar sound.

It was around this time when Campion's theatrics became a bit overbearing. Before "The Brave" he told the audience how his parents wanted him to be a doctor or a lawyer, but he decided (and he screamed), "I am a singer — and, I can do anything I want!" Where was this guy during auditions for the "No Wire Hangers!" scene from "Mommie Dearest?"

The Column 13 slowed down again with "Whistling Silence," a sullen and somber song in which Campion made the most of his flexible voice range. They then swerved back to an upbeat sound with "Blue Bedroom," clearly a favorite with the audience. This catchy danceable song was by far one of their best.

"Roger Wilco — Computer Programmer" followed. There was some strong lead and rhythm guitar during this song; but overall, it was mediocre.

"On Common Place" was another fun song with a quick beat and an original melody. Campion did a nice job of capturing the crowd by having them repeat what he was singing. It was a nice variation to have some audience involvement.

The next song, "Long Walk To Forever," had a very mellow, marching drum beat. I liked it. The lyrics were moving: "Do you remember/ That Christmas tree dead in December/ And how it grew back/ It's a long walk to forever." It was performed well but the instrumentals had a painfully obvious U2 style. What would Bono and the boys think?

I could not help wondering why the members of the band did not push their obvious talent to the limit. The Column 13 seemed to hold back from throwing themselves into the performance and the instrumentals were only half as dynamic as they potentially could have been.

Otherwise, The Column 13 is a very entertaining band with a diverse sound. They have solid talent, which is the best start for any young band. They are currently meeting with numerous recording companies.

The Column 13 will be playing at the Cat Club in New York on Nov. 27. They will return to the 23 East on Dec. 5.

Chris Campion, the lead singer, was a student at Villanova until he took this year off to promote the band.

Ex-Beatle is on Cloud Nine

By DINA INNELLA

Cloud Nine
George Harrison
Warner Brothers Records Inc.

Even though George Harrison vowed he would never come back to the music business, he has returned. Harrison celebrates his return with his new album, Cloud Nine which debuted last week.

Harrison's first single released, "Got My Mind Set on You" is a lightly refreshing tune already being played on Top 40 radio stations. His video is also getting a great deal of airplay on MTV. "Got My Mind Set on You," originally written by Rudy Clark and recorded by James Ray is clearly the best song on the album. Ironically enough, the tune is the last song on the second side.

The album starts out with the title track, "Cloud Nine." This tune features much of Harrison's outstanding guitar playing along with his friend, Eric Clapton. The two play pretty hard and their solos are prominent throughout.

"That's What it Takes," "Fish on the Sand" and "This is Love" are '70s pop style music and can get annoying after listening to them for a while. "Just for Today" and "Someplace Else," are both slow, moving ballads and seem to be a reflection of Harrison's spiritual thoughts and feelings.

"Breath Away From Heaven," is a strange sounding ballad. It has strong Oriental overtones throughout the song and is easily the worst song on the entire album.

Probably the most reminiscent of all the songs is "When We Was Fab," a poppy tune remembering Harrison's time with the Beatles. He focuses on the '60s when "grass was green" and the Beatles "arrived like strangers in the night." Harrison often, when referring to the Beatles, refers to them as "the Fabs."

"Devil's Radio," is a song about the evils of gossip journalism. It has excellent lyrics in which Harrison berates newsmongers. He states his feelings about them and blames them in lyrics like: "It can creep up in the dark/ make us hide behind shades." Harrison hated the media especially when he was with the Beatles when the world's eyes watched their every move, with no sense of privacy.

"Wreck of the Hesperus" is an upbeat song about how Harrison is getting a little older. (Harrison is 44 years old.) He states in the lyrics that he is "still kicking" and "feels as tall as the Eiffel Tower" no matter what those "poison penmen" write.

Besides Clapton on guitar, Harrison had some more help with Cloud Nine from his friends. These included Elton John on the piano and Ringo Starr on the drums.

Probably the most reminiscent of all the songs is "When We Was Fab," a poppy tune remembering Harrison's time with the Beatles.

Harrison co-produced Cloud Nine along with Jeff Lynne. The starting of his album on the slow side and ending with a bright, danceable tune was a new and different idea. In doing that, it seemed like the second side was much better than the first.

It is good to have Harrison back, but I expected a little more from him. Some of Cloud Nine was enjoyable, but a lot of it was slow moving and almost out of date. Harrison also dwells on the past, often picking on the media who treated him so unfairly. His guitar playing is heard within the album, which is great, for that is what made Harrison famous.

Boxing awaits first match

By TARA SILIGATO

The Villanova boxing team — WHAT? Villanova has a boxing team? Yes, we do. In fact, we are one of only a few schools on the East coast to have a boxing team.

This is mainly because boxing is no longer sanctioned by the NCAA. Therefore, the team works on a club basis as does the Rugby team.

There are no cuts, and the team's coach of five years, Chad Atkinson, works purely on a volunteer basis. Chad takes his job, as well as boxing, itself, very seriously.

Atkinson "looks at it as a sport exhibiting finesse and physical strength . . . It is an art and a skill on how to protect yourself."

Atkinson tries to make things as safe as possible for his 23 members. When sparring, they use the proper equipment to reduce the risks involved in the sport.

The team practices three or four times a week in a police athletic league gym nearby. The team is unable to practice here at Villanova because the proper facilities are not yet available. The squad is very disciplined as a result of Atkinson's encouragement. He said "The team is full of new talent."

Even with this, he is still looking for some more new faces.

What possesses a Villanova student to join the boxing team? Some may say for the love of the sport. Some may say that it provides a outlet for the frustrations that are typical of college life. Whatever the case may be, these guys work out intensely.

The team will show us what they can do on Nov. 20, here at the Jake Nevin Field House. There are bouts scheduled against several schools, namely Lehigh University, West Chester University, Dickinson College, Shippensburg and the Naval Academy, which is nationally known.

The card should include about half of the team members, but the featured bouts will be with the team captain, Joe Walton and Dave Fantini.

Others to look for are Chuck Daggett, Don DeCarlo, Jenny Salmon, Scott Wahlen, Joe Alconn, Tim Noonan, Jim Sadler, Ed Weiner, Ange Coppa, Vinny Tricarico and Scott Stevens, to name a few.

This exhibition is so the new members are able to gain experience in the ring. The real season begins in February. During this time, the team travels all over to compete against other schools.

The Nov. 20 show looks to be quite entertaining for everyone. The tickets are a mere $2

Women swimmers set to begin

By KARLA BECKNER

The Villanova women's swim team is preparing to open its 1987-88 season at Boston University tomorrow at 4 p.m.

In his first year as head coach, coming to Villanova from the University of Alabama, Chuck Horton hopes to have a strong, experienced team with most everyone from last year returning. Only two new freshmen, Beth Capobianco and Eileen McCaffrey, have been added to the roster.

"We're really hoping to improve upon last year's fourth place conference finish," Horton said.

The Wildcats will face their two toughest opponents, Boston University and last season's conference champions, the University of Pittsburgh, in the first two meets of the season. "It's hard to start out with such tough competition right away," said Horton, "but the schedule is worked out in advance. It's all in the luck of the draw."

The University of Pennsylvania is also figured to be a strong contender in the dual meet season.

According to Horton, the strengths of the team will lie in the freestyle and backstroke events.

Team members to watch include Capobianco in the distance freestyle; Laurel Fournier in the freestyle sprints; Terry Messenger, Megan Waters and co-captain Meg Fitzgerald in the backstroke; Danielle Mackey in the individual medley; Mindy Warmbrand and co-captain Liz Kennedy in the butterfly and Mary Mayfield in the freestyle sprints and breaststroke.

"I'm very optimistic about this season," Horton said. "The team has been training hard and we're looking forward to the dual meet season."

V.U. drowns Hoyas, now 2-0

By WAYNE CRESSKILL

The men's swim team is off to a roaring start, defeating both Big East rival Georgetown and Monmouth College in their first two meets.

On Nov. 6 the 'Cats ventured south to battle the Hoyas in the opening meet of the year. The Wildcats totally dominated the meet, beating Georgetown in 12 of 13 events to win by a total score of 122-83.

Next for the 'Cats was the home opener of the 1987-88 season on Nov. 10. 'Nova was pitted against the always competitive Monmouth team. Once again, Villanova dominated and claimed victory, 76-26.

Freshman Steve Petrie shined against Monmouth as he swam a 1:55.58 in the 200-yard back stroke. The time enabled Petrie to win the race and break the previous record set by Tim Ellis in 1986. Ellis had registered a 1:56.31 in the same event.

Also performing well for the 'Cats were Chris Craft and Lou Dearstyne. Both were triple winners in Tuesday's clash with Monmouth.

Craft won the 200-meter butterfly, the 200-meter IM, and the 400-meter medley. Dearstyne, a phenomonal swimmer, won the 100- and 200-meter freestyle events, as well as the freestyle medley.

THE WILDCAT CORNER

By RON McKAY

Our purpose is to boost morale among the fans, players and coaching staff. This year, the major objective of the basketball club is to have these three essential components of the "Villanova family" work together as one.

Last Saturday the first of two blue-white basketball scrimmages was held. The blue team consisted of Doug West. Mark Plansky, Pat Enright, Barry Bekkedan and the newest Wildcat, Paul Vrind. The white team consisted of Rodney Taylor, Eric Leslie, Kenny Wilson, Gary Massey and Tom Greis. Despite the strong efforts by Greis and Leslie for the white team, the blue team, led by the aggressive style of play shown by Enright and leadership of graduate-assistant coach Steve Pinone, fought to a one-point victory. The next blue-white scrimmage will be held Nov. 19 at 5 p.m. in the du Pont Pavilion.

This past week, members of the Basketball Club received their season ticket packages. On Wednesday night, the 'Cats hosted the Canadian National Team as a tune-up for the season opener. This Thursday, the Basketball Club will have their chance to speak with Head Basketball Coach Rollie Massimino at 12:45 p.m. in the du Pont Pavilion. The coach is looking forward to seeing all of you there, and do not forget the home opener versus the Penn Quakers is just around the corner.

Captains lead 'Nova to winning season

By DOUG SCANCARELLA

Regardless of what the football team does in its remaining two games, the 1987 season will be regarded as a success. The team is assured of a winning season, and, in making the jump from Division three to IAA, have topped two out of three Yankee conference foes.

Like all good teams Villanova has a good defense, a defense that is led by co-captains Ted White and Josef Allen.

White, a senior defensive tackle, arrived at Villanova in 1985 after transferring here from Virginia Tech prior to his sophomore year. After being disenchanted at Tech, V.U. was White's obvious choice. "At that time Villanova was just starting football and I was interested in contributing to the building of a new football program. Also Villanova is a good school academically," stated White.

White came out of West Islip High School where he was a three-year letter winner at defensive tackle. Next, White went to the Valley Forge Military Academy. This academy is near Villanova and was a prime reason for White being a Wildcat. "We usually do not take transfers, but in this case he was local so it was easy to get first hand knowledge on him and we liked what we heard," commented Talley.

After White transferred he made an immediate impact. In his sophomore year (White's first year in Wildcat blue) he displayed his great strength and quickness and came up with 28 total tackles in just five games.

The next year White improved even more, finishing the season as the team's third leading tackler. That year he accounted for 55 total tackles, which included four QB sacks in nine games.

This year White is recording even better numbers but perhaps more importantly White has developed into a fine leader. "Ted is an outstanding pass rusher and an excellent leader, who works well with the team," praised Talley.

Josef Allen, V.U.'s other captain also spoke highly of White. "Ted is a great player who, being a senior, is looked up to. He is really a great leader."

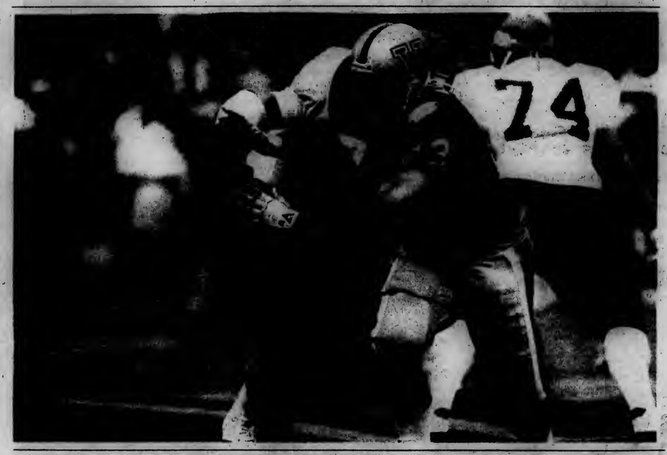
Like White, Allen is a key figure on defense.

Allen graduated from Archbishop Carrol in Washington D.C., where he started at both offensive and defensive line. Allen was quickly converted to outside line backer at 'Nova.

Freshman year Allen saw time as a reserve, but came through in 1986 to have an excellent sophomore year. In '86 Allen accounted for 32 tackles, which included seven tackles for a team leading loss of 16 yards. This year Allen is at the top of his game once again.

Although Allen is a top performer, he has suffered an injury-plagued career, but that has never stopped the 227-pound linebacker from giving 100 percent every game. "Joe is the most courageous football player since football has returned to Villanova. He plays every single day in pain which makes him a great inspiration. He makes the defense a lot more aggressive," commented Talley.

Allen is the 'Cats most hard-hitting player who is well respected by his teammates. Ted White commented, "It's been a pleasure being captain with Joe. He is a great football player and a great person. He is one of our most explosive hitters."



Both players mean so much to Villanova. On the field they are tremendous leaders and players. Off the field they are very concerned with the team's reputation.

White and Allen are credits to the football team and to V.U.

Women's soccer takes ECAC

By AMGAD SABONGUI

The Villanova women's soccer team ended their season with a flourish as they captured the East Coast Athletic Conference Championship (ECAC) by beating Monmouth in the semifinals and Hartford in the championship game.

The Wildcats dominated the semifinal game against Monmouth, beating them by the score of 3-0. Jean Hajjar scored the first and the final goals, while assisting Beth McMahon on the second goal of the game. The Cats, who were beaten by Monmouth earlier in the season, did not seem to encounter any problems throughout the course of the game.

In the championship game, Villanova faced their toughest challenge as they played Hartford University at Hartford's home field. Hartford, which had beaten Holy Cross in the semifinals, had beaten 'Nova 1-0 on Oct. 10. Jeanine McClees scored the first goal, assisted by McMahon.

Hartford retaliated quickly with two goals by Karen Scheib, and 'Nova was suddenly down 2-1 in the second half. However, the Wildcats would not remain down for long, as the ECAC championship MVP, Ann Beirne, tied the game with an unassisted goal and sent the game into overtime.

The defensive tenacity of both teams showed as each team struggled to score during sudden death. In the first as well as the second overtime, neither team could put the other away. But in the third overtime, the Wildcats proved victorious as McMahon scored the winning goal, helped byu an assist from Beirne.

Villanova's dramatic ending typified their outstanding team performance throughout the season. Four players on the 13-6-2 team had 20 points or more, and in the total point scoring category, the Wildcats outscored their opposition 137-50.

Men's soccer ends season, 9-8-1

By AMGAD SABONGUI

The Villanova Men's soccer team ended their season with a 1-0 loss against Drexel University in Philadelphia. Although the Wildcats were not able to play well offensively, junior goalie Ron Klos, who had just won the Big East Athlete of the Week award, kept them close throughout the game.

The loss, however, did not prevent the 'Cats from recording their first winning season (9-8-1) since 1984. This year's team was led by seniors Jeff Collins, who topped team in scoring, and Tom Barrett who led the defense. Outstanding seasons by sophomore John Bond and freshman Mike Deegan were major factors which helped the young team break the .500 barrier.

In addition to Bond and Deegan, freshman Joe Koziol and sophomore Joe Retneller also posted fine numbers, as these four underclassmen accounted for nearly half of the team's point total.

Only four seniors are departing from this young squad, who lost seven of their eight losses by only one goal. The 'Cats should be a force in both the Big East and the Philadelphia Soccer Seven.

Athlete of the Week

PETER LOMBARDI

This week's Saco East Athlete of the Week is junior Peter Lombardi.

The 6-foot-1-inch, 211-pound fullback had an outstanding afternoon last Saturday in the Wildcats' impressive 44-27 win over the University of Massachusetts.

After only one carry for two yards in the first half, Lombardi exploded in the second half, finishing with a career-high 129 yards. His powerful running helped Villanova both obtain their 17-point lead and run out the clock to preserve the victory.

Lombardi is the team's second leading rusher, with 365 yards on 74 carries, and his 23 receptions rank him the fourth leading receiver.

future, but at the same time worried about the effect their absence would have on the team next season. "All three of them leave some big shoes to fill," she said.

The 'Cats ended their season with a record of 12-7-2, not as good a finish as an early start of 6-0-1 led us to hope for, but still quite impressive. Massaro was pleased with the outcome of the season. She said that early in the summer she did not expect as good a record as the team went on to achieve, because of the relative inexperience of this year's young team. "We hung tough in games against better opponents," she said, "and this year is just a promise of the good things to come in Villanova field hockey."

Football pounds Minutemen, 44-27

By JOHN G. RICCO

Coming into the 1987 football season Head Coach Andy Talley knew he was taking a gamble. After only two seasons of play since the reinstatement of V.U.'s football program, Talley was putting his team to the test, scheduling his young squad against four tough Yankee Conference teams plus Division IAA powerhouse Holy Cross.

Last Saturday, Talley continued his gambling style and came up a winner as the Wildcats downed one of these mighty opponents, the University of Massachusetts, 44-27.

On three separate occasions Talley showed great faith in his offense, going for a first down on fourth and short situations, and each time the 'Cats were successful.

The first gamble came on Villanova's very first possession. The Wildcats received the opening kickoff and drove 63 yards only to be confronted with a fourth and goal from the U. Mass. one-yard line.

Instead of settling for an easy field goal and getting some quick points on the board, Talley chose to go for seven. Quarterback Kirk Schulz got the call and converted, plunging into the endzone.

Villanova maintained their 7-0 lead until early in the second quarter when the Minutemen answered with a score of their own. Fullback Ed Barrett capped an impressive 10 play, 73-yard drive, sprinting seven yards for a score.

Just under four minutes later, Barrett was at it again, scampering nine yards for a TD to end another impressive U. Mass. possession.

Though the Wildcats were down 14-7 and they had just seen U. Mass. put together back to back 70 plus-yard scoring drives, neither Schulz nor his teammates were ready to panic.

"We're just not letting ourselves get down," remarked the sophomore quarterback. "Our offense knew we could score some points against them so we weren't worried."

Midway through the second quarter, following a shanked 16-yard kick by U. Mass. punter Dimitri Yavis, the 'Cats had the ball first and 10 at Massachusett's 44-yard line.

Propelled by tailback John Karoly's 19-yard dash and a 12-yard sweep by halfback Ron Sency, Villanova marched down to the U. Mass. 12-yard line.

Though the Minutemen had double coverage on split end Bobby Brady, Schulz went to him anyway, splitting the two defenders for a score. The reception kept Brady's streak alive of catching at least one touchdown pass in each of V.U.'s eight 1987 contests.

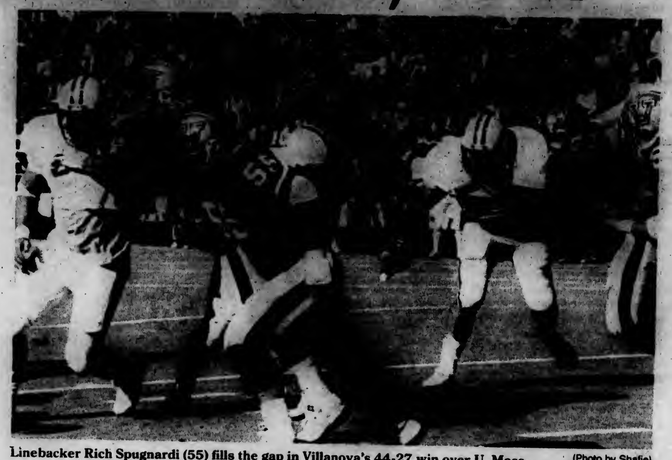
Massachusetts looked like they would quickly recapture the lead when, on their very next possession, they moved down into Villanova territory. Wildcat defensive back Art Condodina, however, ended the U. Mass. threat picking off his second pass of the season with 2:41 left in the half.

The two teams traded touchdowns early in the third quarter, but kicker Tom Withka broke the 21-21 deadlock with a 36-yard field goal.

During the 45-yard drive which set up the V.U. score, fullback Pete Lombardi made his presence felt rushing for 30 yards in three plays.

Lombardi, who had been quiet in the first half, would go on to gain 129 yards on 16 rushes (15-127 in the second half).

The Wildcats, who had passed the ball during much of the first half, stuck more and more to the ground in the latter stages of the game. "Once we found some soft spots in the interior of their defense it was great," explained Talley, "because we didn't have to rely on the pass anymore."



The ability to move the ball both on the ground and through the air helped the Wildcats immensely, especially in the fourth quarter. As the Minutemen defense tired, Schulz and the V.U. offense pounced, scoring three touchdowns in the final period.

Four minutes after Karoly had widened Villanova's lead to 31-21 with a four-yard run, Schulz found flanker Scott Thompson in single coverage and hit him for a 31-yard touchdown. The reception, which came with 6:18 left in the game, was Thompson's second touchdown of the game, and his fourth of the season.

Though the extra point attempt failed, 'Nova had a comfortable 37-21 lead, and a victory was assured.

Both teams would score again, with Villanova's coming on a two-yard dive by Sency, but the Wildcats held on, winning 44-27 and increasing their record to an impressive 6-2.

"Because we're such a young team, we're still coming on," commented Talley. "Each week we get better and better. This week we caught a couple of breaks, stayed tough and got the job done."

'Cats top LaSalle

By AMY C. SPENCER

The scoreboard read Villanova 8, La Salle 0 as the final seconds of the 1987 field hockey season ticked away. The 'Cats closed out their season by scoring twice as many points versus La Salle than they had scored in a single game all season.

The Wildcats put in their first goal only three minutes into the game and never gave La Salle a chance to catch up. The game featured the first goals of the season by junior Cathy Walsh and freshman Carol Fillicetti, and an impressive showing of three goals by Victoria Rife.

Head Coach Cheryl Massaro was extremely pleased with her team's performance. "We saved our best game for last," she commented. "We played fast, strong and dominant today. We decided to go out with a flare."

The team will be graduating three seniors this year: Peggy Dunleavy, Anita D'Ascenzo and Ann Rosato. Massaro thanked them for the four years of hard work they have given the team and wished them luck for the

Hockey skates past Delaware

By JOHN SWIFT

The Villanova Ice Hockey Team returned home last weekend after dropping three of their first four games on the road. The Ice 'Cats edged Binghamton State on Saturday by the score of 7-5 on goals by Brian Fitzgerald (2), George Schneider (2), Mark Neaves, Rob Rosone and Sean Curran.

Junior goalie Mitch Doren had 40 saves in the victory. The win improved Villanova's record to 2-1 in the ECAC South Conference and aroused anticipation of a possible playoff berth at season's end.

On Sunday, the 'Cats walloped Delaware by the count of 13-2. The offensive explosion was led by Brian Arnott's "hat trick."

Other multiple goal scorers in the Delaware game were Joe Cunningham (2), Dennis Scanlon (2) and Ed Cole (2). John Kealey, Jim Anderson, John Delfini and Mark Bruno each tallied once in this impressive victory.

Senior goalie and team co-captain Dave Duffy recorded 26 saves during a sparkling performance in the net. The win improved the Ice 'Cats' ledger to 3-3 overall.

Though it is early in the season, this year's team appears to be much improved over last year's squad which posted a 6-19 overall mark and a 4-12 conference record. The two games last weekend were the first two of a six game homestand for the Ice 'Cats.

BEHIND the LINES

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

There comes a time in everyone's life when they must say goodbye to the things they love. Today is one of those days. Behind the Lines will be retired. My hope is that within the last year this column has inspired contemplation, consternation and a variety of emotions.

However, before I take my leave, I would like to leave with you an epitaph of questions that have not been answered for a variety of reasons.

To start, I would like to ask about the newest addition to Villanova's campus, duPont Pavilion. Exactly how much over budget is it? Were there really two roofs built? Why are there only five lanes on the track, which does not meet NCAA specifications?

Why did we hire a company that Boston College had trouble with? What happened to the perfect sound system? What happened to the perfect television lighting?

What is the actual cost of the V.I.P. lounge? And who donated the majority of the money?

The second part of this list pertains to drug testing. Why are the ramifications for violations so lenient? Are the tests accurate? Are the tests themselves monitored so as to eliminate falsification?

Why are only athletes tested? And are these tests a violation of rights?

The third and final part of this epitaph directs questions to you, the fans.

Why do basketball and football receive more support than other sports? Aren't all sports important? Why is it that sports seem to be only an excuse to drink?

And finally, why is it that any opinion, honestly stated in a negative manner must immediately be attributed to a lack of pride in school? Does not pride also mean the ability to criticize without loss of love for the institution?

I leave you with this thought: Remember, always read the sports page because, in the words of one sports philosopher, the sports pages recognize man's achievements, while the rest of the paper recognizes his failures..

Meese, Scalia to speak today

By DANTE J. SCALA
News Editor

U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese III and Associate Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia will be on campus today to speak at events celebrating the bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution.

Scalia will speak on "The Constitution, the People and the Courts" at 4:30 p.m. at the Law School. After Scalia's speech, a banquet will be held in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center, where Meese will give an address titled "The Constitution: a Bicentennial Reflection."

The bicentennial celebration is being presented by the Intercollegiate Studies Institute, a non-profit educational group, and Villanova University. T. Kenneth Cribb, assistant to the President of the United States for domestic affairs and member of the institute's board of directors, will be master of ceremonies at the banquet.

Dr. John J. Schrems, political science professor and faculty associate of the Intercollegiate Studies Institute, said that ticket demands for the United States Bicentennial Commission-sanctioned events have been high, and both events have sold out. Six hundred people are expected to attend Scalia's lecture, and about 340 will be present for the Meese banquet.

Protest planned

About 20 people attended a meeting in the Center for Peace and Justice Education Wednesday evening to plan a protest of the Meese banquet.

The protesters plan to stage their demonstration outside of the Villanova Room. The action will be non-confrontational and non-violent, and there are no plans to disrupt the speech, the protesters stated. Informational leaflets will be handed out to those entering the banquet room.

According to one of the protesters, the goal of the demonstration is "to increase the discourse and remind people that the University is a place for a free and open exchange of ideas."

One of the main issues behind the protest is Meese himself, who is currently being investigated for alleged criminal and unethical activities. The other main issue is the circumstances under which Meese is appearing, according to junior John Lewis.

"What I don't understand is why a banquet format was chosen in the first place. It's expensive and a form of closed control for students. It is a format that fits the old-boy elitist style — an anti-student format," said history professor Bob Pigeon in an interview last week.

"Isn't it sort of embarrassing for the University to have a controversial figure [on campus]

Housing laws reviewed

Phil Brach, president of Student Government, called negotiations with township officials to reverse the existing zoning ordinances at the Nov. 12 meeting of the town-and-gown committee "disappointing."

Brach submitted a proposal to the committee in an effort to modify the current zoning laws which limit the number of unrelated persons allowed to share a residency.

In his proposal, Brach stated, "The laws create economic strain and discourage, in some cases prohibit, good neighbor relations and community involvement."

Patricia Marzulli, secretary of external affairs for Student Government and a member of the town-and-gown committee, commented that she and Brach "had hoped for a more definite response from the township managers."

Brach added, "We've been helping the community with their problems [concerning the University], and now it's time for them to help us."

The town-and-gown committee consists of representatives from surrounding townships, including Haverford, Lower Merion, Narberth, Radnor and Upper Merion, as well as University officials, including Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, and Stephen McWilliams, judicial affairs officer. Brach and Marzulli represent the Villanova student body, according to Brach.

Neville commented on the outcome of the meeting, stating, "I'm not surprised that the townships found the proposal unacceptable

Security laws proposed

By DIANE A. CILIONE
Staff Reporter

On Oct. 27, State Representative Richard A. McClatchy Jr. of the 149th district introduced new legislation which, if enacted, will affect all colleges and universities within the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The new legislation would require all institutions of higher education to "... include with the literature supplied to persons interested in enrolling as students, information in brochure form relating to crime statistics and the security afforded students and their property at such institutions."

The proposed legislation, according to McClatchy, "... resulted from a tragic homicide at Lehigh University last year." On Apr. 5, 1986, Jeanne Ann Clery, the daughter of Connie and Howard Clery of Rosemont and a freshman at Lehigh, was beaten, raped and strangled to death by another Lehigh student.

The murder was the result of a robbery in her dormitory room. On Apr. 28, 1987, the murderer was sentenced to death.

According to remarks issued by the Clerys, the trial of their daughter's murderer, along with media interviews done by the Clerys after the trial, raised public response to the issue of campus security.

The Clerys developed a questionnaire "... to enable prospective students and parents to ask some tough questions pertaining to the campus crime rate for the previous three years and the type of security in place at the college," they stated.

Clery said, "To date, we have mailed out over 5,000 college security questionnaires to people in over 20 states."

Clery stated that the vast majority of colleges and universities do not report their campus crime statistics to the FBI. Clery also said that the vast majority of colleges and universities will not divulge their crime statistics to prospective students and parents when asked.

McClatchy said, "One of the best kept secrets in the Commonwealth, indeed, in the nation, is the crime statistics and security measures at our colleges and universities."

According to the statistics quoted by Clery, the number of on-campus offenses known to author-

Campus vandalism examined

By SHARON WATERS
Assistant News Editor

"Vandalism damage was not excessive" this year until Homecoming Weekend, when Villanova suffered a "setback," according to the Rev. Martin Smith, O.S.A., assistant director of Residence Life for environmental management.

Though vandalism figures were not readily available, Smith believed that vandalism was lower than last year before Homecoming.

Smith further commented that it is not unusual for vandalism to increase on Homecoming Weekend.

According to Christopher M. Janosik, director of Residence Life, there has been a "steady increase [of vandalism] over the past couple of years."

Last year $93,000 was spent to cover vandalism damage in residence halls, according to Smith. Smith broke down the amount as consisting of $53,000 being pinpointed to individual perpetrators, while the other $40,000 was divided among all the residents of each dorm.

Smith further stated that the University paid $15,000 for general campus-wide vandalism last year, which is ultimately reflected in tuition costs.

Smith said he is "concerned about doing something positive" about vandalism instead of merely dealing with its aftermath.

As a new addition to Villanova this semester, Smith serves as a "communication link" between the Residence Life department, Maintenance and Housekeeping. Smith also acts as a liaison between Maintenance and resident students who may encounter environmental problems in their dorms.

Janosik explained one of Smith's duties is to encourage students to make active and conscious efforts against vandalism.

Smith's job concentrates on more than vandalism. It is also intended "to increase the institution's response time to Maintenance and repair means of any kind," added Janosik.

Though Smith feels that Maintenance and Housekeeping are understaffed, he stated that both have been "very cooperative." Smith added that Maintenance is not responsible for just the residence halls, but every building on campus.

Residence Life is in the process of planning and developing a contest to determine the cleanest residence hall with the least amount of vandalism, according to Janosik.

According to Janosik, the idea behind the contest is to "develop ownership for the floors and wings" of the dorms and to encourage students to take an active role against vandalism. Janosik stated that it is easy for the individual student to assume that he does not have a responsibility to protect or maintain the upkeep of his wing, especially in the larger dorms.

Smith stated that although all the details have not been worked out, the contest would get students involved in fighting vandalism.

Smith said that any financial rewards from the contest would

Values survey conducted

By DANTE J. SCALA
News Editor

A survey which seeks to re-examine the personal values of the Villanova community is currently being conducted by the Human Organization Science (HOS) Institute, according to University College Dean Dr. Angelo Armenti, Program Evaluation Committee chairperson.

The new survey, commissioned by the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, is attempting to poll about 1,600 faculty, students, administrators, staff and alumni on their feelings about various parts of the University's mission statement, said Armenti.

"It is very important that we know how students, faculty, alumni, staff, administrators and trustees perceive the University mission as we go about evaluating existing programs and activities and making recommendations that will best help us to achieve our mission," wrote Driscoll in the cover letter of the survey.

The survey is one part of the University evaluation project being run by the Program Evaluation Committee, said Armenti.

The current poll is the second attempt at a University values survey. In August 1986, the University attempted to survey about 3,000 members of the Villanova community, but only 25 percent responded. The low rate of response, along with the fact that the survey was a "generic tool not specifically suited" to Villanova, caused concern among the members of the Task Force on Personal Values, which based a report on the poll, according to a program evaluation newsletter.

The task force's final act was to recommend that a new, improved survey be taken, said Armenti. This advice was heeded, and Driscoll authorized a new survey "that would focus more directly on the University mission statement and one that would seek to shed more light on the personal values of a larger proportion of the Villanova community," he stated in the cover letter.

The poll is mainly composed of about 30 questions which ask those surveyed what importance they attribute to various objectives of the mission statement.

The polling process began Oct. 15, and "returns are streaming back nicely," Armenti commented. Thirty-three percent of the polling sample had responded by Nov. 6, he stated. Armenti expects a total response of over 50 percent.

Students in randomly-selected classrooms were recently given surveys to fill out, said Armenti. He said that the process of analyzing the data and writing a report will begin in early December.

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, commissioned a new University values survey which is currently being conducted.

The values survey report will be completed before the spring semester begins in late January and will be available on campus, said Armenti.

Student struck by car

By SABINA PIERCE
Staff Reporter

Sophomore Douglas Kelleher of Stanford Hall was listed in stable condition Tuesday after being struck by a car the night of Nov. 12 at the intersection of Lancaster and North Ithan Avenues.

Officer Martha L. Gurney of the Radnor Township Police Department, the investigating officer, stated that Kelleher had been seen trying to cross Lancaster Avenue against a red light from the main campus toward south campus when he was hit.

Kelleher was taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital by a Radnor Township ambulance and was placed in the intensive care unit in guarded condition. He sustained a fractured cranium and multible scratches and bruises all over his body.

Gurney, the first to arrive on the scene, stated, "There were 42 feet of skid marks left from the car. So by the time the car was to Kelleher it was practically stopped."

The driver of the car stated in the police report that he was moving at around 30 mph. This statement was backed up by the driver of a car going approximately the same speed next to the first car.

"An odor similar to alcohol was smelled on Kelleher's breath, as well as [the discovery of] many unopened beer cans around his person," said Gurney.

A blood alcohol content (BAC) test was drawn from the driver and from Kelleher at the hospital and sent to the Pennsylvania State Police Lab to see if either was intoxicated.

Kelleher is currently being charged with failing to yield to oncoming traffic against a red indication lamp and thus causing the accident. He is also being prosecuted for possession of alcoholic beverages and will be prosecuted for underage intoxication if his BAC level comes back from the lab above 1.0, since he is only 19 years old.

Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, has been to Bryn Mawr Hospital to see Kelleher and said, "We're [Villanova University] sorry the accident took place, but we're glad to see that Doug wasn't badly hurt."

Neville said that the intersection in question is quite dangerous. "We've been working with PennDOT (Pennsylvania Department of Transportation) and Radnor Township for years trying to find a way to alleviate the problem. We've been trying to get a turn signal installed," said Neville.

When asked about an overpass of some sort, Neville said, "I think that would be a good idea, but it would be hard to design as it has to accommodate the handicapped, and my biggest concern would be if students would really use it."

Steve Maggiacomo, the president of Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity, in which Kelleher is a pledge, said, "We're glad that Doug is okay. We were concerned about his condition for a while."

Maggiacomo said that he had no idea where Kelleher had gotten the beer, but it wasn't from a Pi Kappa Phi party.

Hunger campaign concludes

By LYNN PERDEK
Staff Reporter

A 5-mile marathon held Sunday marked the close of a very successful "Hunger Awareness Week," according to the Rev. Owen R. Jackson, O.S.A., of Villanova's Center for Peace and Justice Education.

Jackson stated that although the complete sum of all the events has yet to be collected, the net total of the week after expenses is expected to be well over $8,000.

This money is to be divided between the Augustinian Missions in Peru and the St. Nicholas of Tolentine Parish in the Bronx, N.Y. which is largely composed of Cambodian boat people, as well as Vietnamese and Hispanic immigrants, said Jackson.

The week began with the annual "Run For Hunger," Monday. Money was pledged for the completion of each lap around the course. Jackson noted that over 60 students participated in the event, raising approximately $400.

Jackson said that the events slated for Tuesday and Wednesday were hampered by the inclement weather, although the hunger banquet held on Tuesday was successful and informative. The hunger banquet was an activity designed to inform students about the diet of people living in underdeveloped nations.

Student participation reached its height during the fast day on Thureday, when 2,300 students gave up eating lunch in the dining halls. The University donated $3 for each student who fasted, which amounted to nearly $7,000, according to Jackson.

Although he was happy with the participation, Jackson said that the many students who ate lunch at Connelly Center after giving up lunch at the dining halls missed a major point of the day, which was to experience fasting from breakfast until dinner.

Sixty people, who each paid a $5 entrance fee, participated in Sunday's run. Prizes were donated to the winners from local area merchants such as Al E. Gators, who offered a dinner for two.

Jackson stated that over $1,000 was raised for Hunger Awareness Week at the collections at the four Sunday masses. Several hundred petitions were signed at these masses in order to urge U.S. senators to support the African Famine and Development Bill presently pending in the Senate. This bill will appropriate funds to help Africa learn to feed its own people.

Also, teachers were asked to raise the issue of hunger awareness in the classrooms during the week. Jackson claimed that the week succeeded in raising the consciousness of the Villanova community, making the 15th annual Hunger Awareness Week a great success.

Directory expected

"The student directory will probably be out after Thanksgiving. We were aiming for before Christmas, so we feel we're in good shape," said Christine A. Wnuk, editor of the student directory.

According to Wnuk, this year's directory will contain all the names of those in Student Government including the executive board and student senators. "This will enable students to get in touch with Student Government members," Wnuk explained.

Wnuk feels the best feature of the directory will be the publication of public transportation schedules for the train, bus, trolley and Rosemont shuttle bus. "We wanted to put something in that was useful for everybody," she said.

Furthermore, Wnuk reported that there are 3,495 students in the directory this year, and there were less than 2,000 last year.

"We got over $27,000 in ads so I'm assuming that there will be more coupons for students to use at local merchants or campus-sponsored activities," Wnuk said.

Wnuk explained the only problem with the directory was the confusion over the release form. In the information mailed to students over the summer, two different forms were enclosed. One was a form requesting information and the other was a release form.

"We lost about 200 people because they did not send back the release form. We had no signature of authorization, so there are about 200 people that think they'll be in the directory that aren't," said Wnuk.

Wnuk praised Don Mullikin, 1987 Orientation chairperson, for getting all of the freshmen to register for the directory during orientation.

Library buys book collection

Villanova University's Falvey Memorial Library recently purchased a 7,000-volume collection of modernist literature and criticism that will "significantly enhance our holdings," according to Dr. Mary Ann Griffin, director of the library.

Villanova acquired the collection through a competitive bidding process involving other libraries and bookstores around the nation.

The prestigious collection belonged to Professor Maurice Beebe of Temple University, who died in January 1986. In 1970, Beebe founded the Journal of Modern Literature (JML), a scholarly journal devoted to 20th century literature. He was JML's editor-in-chief for 16 years.

Dr. James J. Murphy and Dr. Vincent B. Sherry, associate professors of English at Villanova University, are North American advisors to JML.

The collection consists of a number of first editions and editions signed by the authors, according to Alice Beebe, Professor Beebe's widow.

Griffin said that a number of Villanova faculty members expressed an interest in the collection, which will be transported to the Falvey Memorial Library in the near future.

Moroccan professor to visit V.U.

Dr. Abdelhamid Lofti, dean of the Faculte des Lettres at des Sciences Humaines in Meknes, Morocco, is scheduled to be a guest at a faculty luncheon at Villanova University Nov. 24.

Dr. Lofti is one of 20 Moroccan scholars sent to the United States in a program called "The Moroccan Bicentennial University Project." Morocco was the first nation to recognize American independence. The International Visitors Center in Philadelphia is making arrangements for his visit, which is part of the "Constitutional Philadelphia" project.

He has earned master's degrees in both American civilization and Anglo-American literature, and an associate bachelor's degree in American civilization.

Massimino named to hall of fame

Roland V. Massimino, head coach of the men's basketball team at Villanova University, has recently been elected to the Italian-American National Hall of Fame.

According to Steve Budassi, president of the Italian-American National Hall of Fame, Massimino was selected because of his reputation as a great sportsman, his team's 1985 NCAA national basketball championship and his humanitarian efforts.

Budassi said Massimino has done a "great job" with Villanova basketball, adding that his players have gotten high grades.

Meese's constitutional views presented

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN
Senior Reporter

Tonight U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese III will bring an "original intent" perspective to the constitutional debate in his talk on "The Constitution: a Bicentennial Reflection."

Meese has argued persistently for a "jurisprudence of original intention" to guide the U.S. Supreme Court. Within this philosophy, a justice must look only at the Constitution and the intentions of those who framed it in making decisions.

When a justice inserts his own personal values into the decision-making process, or grounds rulings on social theories or moral philosophies, which Meese believes is common in today's Court, he subverts the purpose and principles of the Constitution, according to the original intent argument.

The Supreme Court should look at the document because it was meant to establish the rule of law in the country for posterity, Meese believes, and not simply to establish principles which could change or evolve with time, as others argue.

"Those who framed the Constitution chose their words carefully; they debated at great length the most minute points. The language they chose meant something. It is incumbent upon the Court to determine what that meaning was," wrote Meese in Benchmark magazine.

Many of Meese's opponents say that it is difficult to know what the original intent of the framers actually was, if in fact there even was a unified intent.

Meese disagrees. He stated in Policy Review magazine, "[T] he Constitution is not buried in the mists of time. We know a tremendous amount of the history of its genesis ... We know who did what, when, and many times why. One can talk intelligently about a 'founding generation.' "

Meese's philosophy calls for judicial restraint. When the Constitution is silent on an issue, the Supreme Court should not rule, Meese believes.

The Constitution does not address, for instance, the right to privacy which was used in the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision legalizing abortion. The decision therefore should be overruled, he contends.

The decision belongs instead, he says, in the hands of the democratically-elected branches of the government.

Meese's jurisprudence of original intent has become the backbone of the Reagan administration's stance on the judicial branch. In their nomination of Judge Robert Bork to the Supreme Court, the executive hailed Bork as an expert scholar on original intent.

Stuart Taylor, Jr., who covers the Supreme Court for the New York Times, wrote in New Republic magazine that Meese's original intent position has some merit. However, he wrote, "He [Meese] seems less a constitutional philospher than a constitutional window-shopper, seeking to dress up his conservative political agenda as a principled guest for truth."

Taylor stated that "when the intentions of the framers are clear, but contrary to a result Meese wants, he ignores them."

Meese would deny this criticism. He wrote that a policy of original intent is the only way for the Supreme Court to be nonpartisan.

Others criticize the very basis of Meese's argument. "The genius of the Constitution rests not in any static meaning it might have had in a world dead and gone, but in the adaptability of its great principles to cope with current problems and current needs," wrote Supreme Court Justice William J. Brennan, Jr. for a 1985 text and teaching symposium at Georgetown University.

Meese sees this philosophy as a "chameleon jurispriudence, changing color and form in each era." It is dangerous, he feels, because it increasingly relies on the rule of men, rather than the fixed and known rule of law.

and not have a demonstration? The University should be proud [of the protest]," Pigeon said Wednesday.

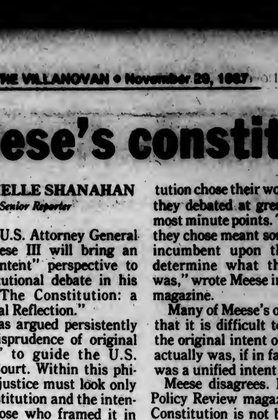
The protesters planned to put up posters around campus to publicize the demonstration.

Other Constitution lectures

Gary L. McDowell, resident scholar at the Center for Judicial Studies, spoke yesterday on "The Politics of Original Intent." The McDowell speech was part of the honors lecture series on the Constitution.

McDowell is a former member of the Justice Department and was one of Messe's major speechwriters, said Dr. Colleen Sheehan, political science professor. Sheehan is currently teaching an honors course around which the honors lecture series has been built.

McDowell is also a well-known, leading Constitutional scholar who appeared on the Public Broadcasting System during its coverage of Judge Robert Bork's Senate confirmation hearings, said Sheehan.



On Monday, there will be a debate between Harry V. Jaffa, Salvatori research professor of political philosophy from Claremont McKenna College, and Bruce Ledewitz, professor of law at Duquesne University School of Law.

Jaffa is a leader of conservative thought and a top scholar of political philosophy, said Sheehan.

Jaffa coined the phrase, "Moderation in the pursuit of justice is no virtue. Extremism in the defense of liberty is no vice," which Barry Goldwater later made famous, said Sheehan.

The National Order of Omega

VILLANOVA'S GREEK OF THE WEEK

Bob Clarkin is a senior arts economics major with a business minor, and comes to Villanova from Madison, N.J.

A founding father of the Villanova chapter of the Sigma Pi Fraternity, Bob has served his chapter as public relations chairman, rush chairman and as a member of various committees.

Bob currently holds the office of secretary for the Interfraternity Council and has just recently stepped down as the editor of the Greek Page of the Villanovan, a position which he has held for the last two years.

Outside of Greek life, Bob was a member of last year's Senior Week committee. Last summer, Bob was able to study economics at Cambridge University in England.

Bob is also involved with the Villanovan as a news writer, and he is a newly-selected member of the Order of Omega. When his schedule permits, Bob enjoys golf and waterskiing.

For all of his contributions to Villanova, the Order of Omega is proud to honor Bob Clarkin of the Sigma Pi Fraternity as Greek of the Week.

and politically unworkable. The people within these townships would not support a reversal of these laws."

Brach stressed the importance of University involvement on the issue and urged officials to put pressure on the surrounding community. He advocated that the University "take the time and money to sue the townships."

Neville responded, "right now we have our hats in our hands concerning the billing for zoning the west campus, and such an unpopular action [suing the townships] would be unwise at this time."

As a result of the negative outcome of the town-and-gown committee meeting, Student Government plans to combat the zoning laws with other alternative measures, especially the upcoming voter registration drive, according to Brach.

"We will encourage students to register here in order to accumulate some political power to change these laws," Brach said.

Despite its problems, both Brach and Marzulli feel that the town-and-gown committee is beneficial to the Villanova student body.

Marzulli stated, "The committee is very effective and important in that it establishes open lines of communication between the University and the townships."

One past accomplishment of the committee, which was founded by Edward Bogosian, a Bryn Mawr businessman, is its effective addressing of complaints by neighborhood residents of loud and disruptive off-campus parties held by students.

Parents of the students involved are now notified, and on some occassions, Stack and Neville visit the students' homes to discuss the situation with them, according to Brach.

Yearbook wins award

By LUCINDA H. ALFIERI

The 1987 edition of the Belle Air, has recently been ranked among the top five percent of college yearbooks nationwide by the Columbia Scholastic Press of Columbia University.

The yearbook finished in first place and was awarded a Medalist Certificate. This was the first year the Belle Air was submitted for competition.

A point system was used for scoring in the areas of concept, design, writing coverage and photography. Out of a possible 1,000 points, the Belle Air yearbook received 971. This score made the Belle Air eligible for the prestigious Gold Crown, which will be awarded in March 1988.

Kevin Rose, former editor-in-chief, said the 1987 yearbook was the largest ever published. The format from previous years was changed and more coverage of campus life and activities was included.

Villanova's main competition came from Southern and mid-Western colleges, where yearbook competition is fierce. Rose said that some colleges even award yearbook scholarships to entice prospective students to work on their respective yearbooks.

This year's co-editors-in-chief, Tony Medori and Keith Smith, said they plan to carry on last year's excellence. Medori said that the 1987 yearbook "set a precedence for all yearbooks in the future."

The judges commented that the 1987 Belle Air was a quality publication. "The editor and staff of this book have given Villanova a real yearbook. Their love and admiration for their university are apparent, and their desire to show their life and year make this edition memorable," they said.

Security proposal

ities in Pennsylvania from 1984 to 1986 include one murder, 32 forcible rapes, 13 robberies, 179 aggravated assaults, 1,184 burglaries and 41 arsons.

Clery sees drug and alcohol dependency as two major reasons for campus crime. Clery also pointed out that most admissions applications do no inquire about prior felony convictions.

McClatchy said, "I am hopeful that this legislation will generate a thorough self-examination of crime on campus by all colleges and universities in Pennsylvania. I also hope vigorous measures will be taken to upgrade security where needed."

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, responded to the new legislation, "Any law which would help a student to make an informed choice about their school would not be a problem."

When asked about security on Villanova's campus, Stack said, "Villanova is a safe place. The incidents of crime we have had, almost without exception, have been within our student population."

According to Stack, the most difficult problem with any campus security system is protecting students from themselves. Stack stated that many students prop open doors which should be allowed to automatically lock, and leave their dormitory rooms unlocked.

"Security cannot watch each student 24 hours a day to make sure they treat themselves and their belongings in a respectable way," said Stack.

"To do that would imply that the campus should be a police state and that the students should be treated like children. There has to be a balance between the institution's responsibility to protect the student community and the institution infringing on the rights of the members of that community," he said.

Evaluation commends Senate

By DEBBIE GROSS
Staff Reporter

A March 1987 report issued by Dr. Esin Kaya-Carton, chairperson of the Hofstra University Senate Executive Committee, evaluated Villanova's University Senate and found the overall system to be excellent.

According to the report, Kaya-Carton's assessment process included viewing Senate meetings, examining a variety of documents and interviewing key administrators, faculty and students associated with the Senate.

The Senate's structure of governance is known as tripartite. First, it is responsible for directing and maintaining the institution and securing its financial viability. This is the responsibility of the Board of Trustees and the President.

Secondly, the Senate is responsible for the effective organization and functioning of the University and its members.

Finally, both the faculty council and the Student Government are responsible for carrying and providing for the members of the institution to guarantee compliance with their rights and responsibilities.

Overall, Kaya-Carton found the tripartite successful. However, she saw a need for change in the constitution and by-laws to improve the efficiency of the Senate's internal organization and functioning. Also, she saw a need for streamlining in the internal organization.

She further stated that committees such as the University planning and priorities committee and the budget committee should be combined, and such standing committees as rank and tenure should be eliminated, since they have already accomplished their purpose.

Kaya-Carton also stated a need for the modifications of Act IV of the Senate Constitution, which states that most units should make curricular decisions independent of the University Senate. She believed that it should be modified to require that each unit inform the Senate of curricular decisions to insure compliance with standards, elimination of conflict and sharing of ideas.

Kaya-Carton also believed that either the executive committee or the rules and review committee should institute a mechanism to follow up the degree to which the recommendations of the Senate are carried out.

Finally, she stressed a need for new senators to be oriented into the organization and functions of the Senate to improve the efficiency of the governance process.

Senior celebration to be held

By NOEL E. FALCO
News Editor

The Villanova Student Union has set plans for the Senior 150 Days celebration for Dec. 5, from 5 to 9 p.m., said Karen Laughlin, social functions coordinator.

"The biggest problem was finding a place. Bars will not shut down on weekends. Hotels say it's too much work and are not willing to take on such an event," said Laughlin.

She commented on the problems last year's celebrations faced, especially with the Sheraton Hotel.

"Only three out of four [planned parties] were held last year. The last two of those were at Pulsations and were feeble attempts. They were open to anyone, which took away from the atmosphere of 'for seniors only,' " Laughlin said.

She stated that since bars will not shut down for a private party at night, the Union decided to hold this celebration in the afternoon at Popcorn's in King of Prussia.

Beth Naughton, president of the Union, said, "The trouble with the Sheraton was that more students trashed the place. They [the Sheraton management] worried about their liability. A lot of damage was done to hotel rooms and hallways."

"According to Naughton, further liabilities are reduced because Popcorn's does its own carding for identification.

"The bar provides their own staff, all liabilities are on them. All we have to worry about now is keeping drunk seniors from trashing the place. We have to keep good relations," said Naughton.

Laughlin added that alcohol-related events are always a concern with the Villanova administration and that the administration and the Union are trying to downplay the alcohol aspect.

Billy Boyd, Union vice-president, said, "In the past, people have gone out and gotten really trashed beforehand. This way [by having the party in the afternoon], it will be a first step in their evening's festivities."

Naughton commented that problems will be further alleviated since several semi-formals are being held afterwards.

"You have to have a valid senior I.D. in order to buy a ticket. I.D.'s are distributed in the registrar's office on Wednesdays between 2 and 4 p.m. They cost $5, which is worth it, because you need it for other senior-related events," said Laughlin.

Senate previewed

Priorties for the 1988-89 University budget will be discussed when the University Senate meets today at 4 p.m. in the east lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Faculty Senator Dr. Theresa M. Valiga will present the annual report of the University planning and priorities committee during the meeting. The committee, composed of students, faculty and administration, recommends both short-term and long-term priorities for the University's capital and operating budgets.

Among the committee's highest short-term priorities are the construction of two dormitories on south campus, the building of "academic office facilities" and the rezoning of west campus. Providing student financial aid and improving faculty, administrative and staff salaries are also top priorities.

For the long-term, the committee advised that the University should place the development of west campus and the purchase of real estate bordering the campus at the top of its priorities list.

Other long-term priorities listed in the report included the construction of a new wing onto Mendel Hall, the building of a parking garage, the renovation of the Main Chapel and an expansion of Connelly Center.

Another item on the Senate agenda is the Faculty's proposal for its salary increase in the 1988-89 budget. Faculty Senator Dr. Harry R. Strack of the Faculty Affairs Committee will present the professors' proposals.

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, was supposed to speak to the Senate today, but he has postponed his "state of the University" address until the next meeting in February.

Campuses deal with threat of AIDS

Several universities and colleges across the nation are considering adopting measures to deal with the threat of AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome).

The Citadel, a military college, announced that it will require all applicants to undergo tests to see if they have the disease. Applicants testing positive for the disease, "most likely would be denied entrance to The Citadel," reported Dr. Joseph Franz, the college's physician.

The University of Colorado recently decided to install condom machines in dormitories, although the move contradicts the school's housing policy that prohibits sex in the dorms.

Both Ohio State and Central Missouri State have begun aggressive programs to educate students of the risks of AIDS and means of preventing the disease.

U. of Chicago elections voided

The University of Chicago recently ousted all 50 officers of its student government after a political scandal shook the campus.

In the last two weeks, the student body president resigned after admitting to having stuffed the ballot box, and the vice president has been removed for not being enrolled as a student. New elections have also been called to replace all of the newly-elected officers of the student government assembly.

A committee to investigate the election "found in essence no evidence of widespread fraud and abuse in the election, but certain procedural flaws, and called for a new election."

Baptist colleges witness conflict

Fundamentalist Christians' struggle to gain control of the Southern Baptist Convention in America became an issue on college campuses in recent weeks.

At Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary in Wake Forest, N.C., the president and dean of faculty were expected to formally resign in the middle of November because of pressure from a group of fundamentalists on the board of trustees.

According to a Southeastern spokesperson, present faculty members will not be fired, but the board of trustees will only hire those who espouse a literal interpretation of the Bible in the future.

The Southeastern spokesperson said the turmoil reflects a more widespread 10-year struggle within the Southern Baptist Convention between fundamentalists and moderates.

Also, fundamentalists have recently failed in an attempt to take control of Mercer University in Atlanta, Ga.

Believing that students have an impact on vandalism, Janosik stated that it is the students' choice to use the dorm facilities as they were intended to be used, or to pay the cost of vandalism.

Janosik further commented, "Vandalism is not a necessary thing." It "just can't be a function of a philosophy that says, 'I've paid my room and board, so I have a right to do anything to my room and building that I see fit.' "

Stating that students feel they have no responsibility in fighting vandalism, Janosik said that students watch vandalism happen and do nothing to stop it. He said that these students also share in the cost of vandalism.

Janosik explained his philosophy that the University is a "fairly tight-knit community" and that certain behaviors and loyalties should be expected from such a community.

Township should support rezoning

With the recent unveiling of a proposal to rezone the west campus, Villanova has taken a positive step to help solve the shortage of on-campus housing. Radnor Township authorities and residents should applaud the efforts of the University and work closely with Villanova to get students out of the surrounding neighborhoods.

Villanova has met with township commissioners and residents to request rezoning 46.43 acres of the Morris tract on the west campus as institutional to permit the construction of academic office and residential buildings. Dormitories or apartments are planned to house 1,200 students.

A 75-foot buffer zone and an additional 75 feet of open space between west campus development and neighboring homes are planned and should eliminate anticipated noise problems.

However, nearly 60 residents, many represented by counsel, stood in opposition to the University's request at a meeting of township commissioners last week. Six of the seven-member Radnor board voted to table Villanova's request in order to allow meetings between neighbors and University officials.

It seems contradictory that while township residents consistently complain about students living in their neighborhoods and violating housing codes, they do not applaud the University's efforts to house more students. Perhaps, it is just a group of residents with personal interests who are now opposing the rezoning plans. Were these the same people who opposed the south campus expansion or were they a different special interest group?

Villanova has no intention of increasing its undergraduate enrollment. It is simply attempting to accommodate more of its students' housing needs, to decrease the number of students living in the township and to alleviate parking problems.

A united group of township residents should recognize that the rezoning proposal will help alleviate many township problems, as well as decrease the University housing shortage. Radnor Township should see that it cannot have its cake and eat it, too.

Thanksgiving is a time for love

"Love is patient. Love is kind. Love never fails," reads 1 Corinthians, 13. This Thanksgiving we must go home to our families and friends and openly express the love we have for them.

Thanksgiving is a time to reflect upon our lives and be grateful for all the good fortunes we enjoy. We must also be thankful for our families and loved ones and show that we truly appreciate them.

The Villanova community often exhibits such love and thanksgiving through activities like Hunger Awareness Week, feeding the homeless and tutoring underprivileged children. But we must take one step further and bring Thanksgiving into our own lives. Too often family love is taken for granted and seldom demonstrated in a positive way.

We must examine our individual lives and concentrate on strengthening our family bonds and love. While a typical Thanksgiving centers around the pilgrims and America, Thanksgiving today must focus on the family, the basic unit of American life.

"There are in the end three things that last: faith, hope and love, and the greatest of these is love," concludes 1 Corinthians, 13.

We challenge the Villanova community to love and cherish their families this Thanksgiving because life is too short and time is much too precious to waste.

Letters to the Editor

Edwin Meese not cleared

To the Editor:

The statements of the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs, in your story, "Protest against Meese considered," are misleading, to say the very least. In the article, Gallen states that he (Meese) has been cleared of all those charges. Which charges?

An editorial in the New York Times Tuesday by John B. Oakes notes, "Mr. Meese has been the subject to at least three major investigations in the last three years." In the first of them, concluded just before he became attorney general, he was cleared of all criminal culpability, but the investigator, Jacob A. Stein, pointedly noted that he had no mandate to pass judgment on Meese's ethical standards.

The other two inquiries are still in progress. One involving the well-known Wedtech case, is being conducted by a special prosecutor to determine whether Meese used his official position for personal profit.

Yes, Meese has been cleared of all of one set of charges, but he certainly has not been cleared of all charges.

In the other inquiry, a special prosecutor, Lawrence E. Walsh, is trying to find out whether Meese was involved in an illegal cover-up of Lt. Col. Oliver North's shredding of White House documents."

Yes, Meese has been cleared of all of one set of charges, but he certainly has not been cleared of all charges.

This leads me to believe one of three things: Gallen is not aware of these other charges; he was quoted out of context; or he attempted to diffuse a potentially embarassing situation to the University by means of paternalistic swipe.

I think a clarification of this statement is in order.

Student activism sought at V.U.

By DANTE J. SCALA

About a year ago, former Student Government President Joe Allman explained why Villanova students are so politically apathetic. "Students ... don't have a sense of empowerment, [they don't realize] that they can make a difference," he said.

A year later, Allman has graduated with a revitalized Student Government as his legacy. The problem of apathy, however, still remains because Villanova students feel they are powerless to change things, especially at their own University.

This attitude pervades the University, and can be seen everyday in students' actions. For instance, why did only 20 percent of students vote in last year's Student Government elections? Because most feel that their elected representatives, like themselves, are helpless to enact change.

Students ... don't have a sense of empowerment, [they don't realize] that they can make a difference.

Joe Allman
former Student Government president

A more recent example was the quiet student reaction to the printing of evaluator Arthur Shriberg's report on Student Life. In his evaluation, Shriberg agreed with a number of things people on campus have been saying for years: Security is "arbitrary and capricious," a new meal plan is "a reasonable request," co-ed dorms should be created. In effect, this non-University report legitimized several student complaints about Villanova.

One might have thought that this report would spark some student reaction, but students were typically quiet, with only an occasional letter to the editor speaking of the report. Their silence was deafening, for it clearly spoke of a student community willing to be chained onto the lowest rung on the hierarchical ladder of Villanova University.

Some might argue that students do have influence over University policy decisions. They would probably point to the University Senate, where students have an equal voice in the decisions made by that body. Certainly, the creation of the Senate was a step forward for student rights, and students should continue to use that forum to express their ideas and proposals.

There are limits on the Senate's power, however, and they were clearly shown during the budget process last spring. The Senate unanimously approved two amendments to the budget which would have helped student financial aid and faculty salaries. Despite their united stand, however, the Board of Trustees used their power to make final decisions to reject the amendments.

The board's action points out an important fact about Villanova's structure of government: all power ultimately flows from the top.

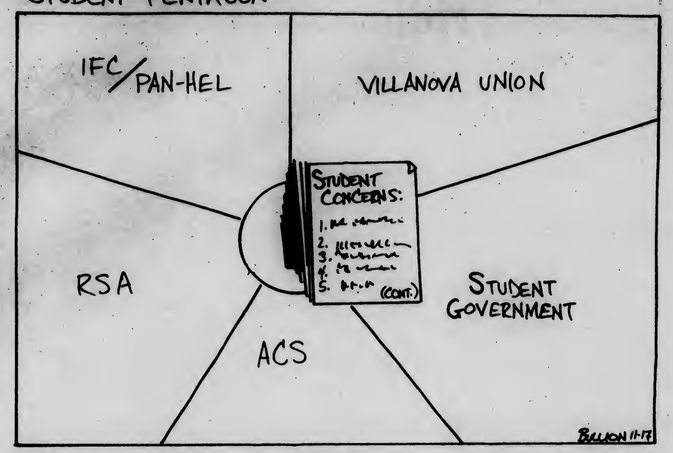
The University Senate, despite its representation of all members of the Villanova community, can easily be overruled by the board. It is true that the board listens to the Senate, but it can also ignore the Senate at will, since it has final decision-making power.

Considering the students' low position in Villanova's hierarchy, it is not surprising that most students will do no more than grumble about the way the University works. The student protests of the '70s are long forgotten, and students do not feel it is worth the effort to go to a Senate meeting, let alone actively protest.

Thus, if students are to gain more power at Villanova, the void of student apathy will have to be filled. This important duty of empowering the students lies on the shoulders of student organization leaders.

Recently, these leaders have begun to take on this responsibility. In the past two weeks, the Villanova Union, Resident Student Association (RSA), Association of Commuting Students (ACS), the Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council have all written letters to the Villanovan, urging students to make their complaints about Security known. "It is time for the students of this University to stop passively accepting problems and to begin to show a united front ... "wrote the RSA executive board. "Together, we can start to ameliorate this situation," said the ACS. These student organizations must continue their efforts to kindle the flame of united student action.

Specifically, they should join forces with Student Government, another group working for students' rights. The leaders of these six organizations should meet to plan a joint campaign, which would seek to gain active student support for a student agenda of issues which need to be immediately addressed by the administration, such as student problems with Security.



After setting an agenda, these organizations should launch a large-scale publicity campaign to gain students' active suppoirt. This campaign should be run like Student Government President Phil Brach's campaign last spring, with posters around campus, letters and op-eds to the Villanovan and door-to-door canvassing. Students will have to be repeatedly told the same message: changes have to be made, and we are the ones to make them.

If the campaign works, and a spirit of solidarity can be ignited among students, student leaders will have a formidable force behind them when they present the student agenda to the administration. Indeed, even if the leaders can only get the members of their own groups behind them, they will still represent a large student interest group when they speak to the administration.

And if the administration refuses to sit down with students and work toward resolving their complaints, student leaders should call upon their fellow students to actively show their support. Imagine the impact that a large, peaceful student protest could make on this tranquil campus, for instance. Student civil disobedience in the '70s prompted the formation of the University Senate, and the same methods could work again to make much-needed changes on campus.

Currently, thoughts of student activism at Villanova seem idealistic, if not ridiculous. But they need not stay that way. If students will take on the challenge of changing their university, they can indeed make a difference.

Kemp: A worthy candidate

By LOUIS MESHON

Despite the conventional wisdom coming out of Washington that either Vice President George Bush or Bob Dole, Senate minority leader, will be the GOP presidential nominee, the odds are growing that Republican Jack Kemp will emerge as a major contender for the nomination.

Recent history demonstrates that long shot candidates like Jimmy Carter, Gary Hart and even Bush [in 1980] all emerged as major contenders for their party's nomination despite being virtually written off repeatedly by the national media in the early going.

Rep. JACK KEMP (R-Hamburg)

Like Carter, Hart and Bush, Kemp begins with little national name identification overshadowed by far better known opponents.

All three trailed badly in the polls with single digit showings.

Kemp, in fact, is stronger than any of these candidates were at this juncture because he has broken double digits — this despite the fact that almost two-thirds of the voters have never heard of him.

It really is not surprising that Kemp's name identification is so low — unlike the other candidates, he has never been on the national ticket or run for president against Ronald Reagan, as both Bush and Dole did in 1980. Nor is Kemp a big state governor or senator.

What then allowed Carter, Hart and Bush to emerge as major contenders after virtually everyone had written off their chances?

The answer is clear: strong grass-roots organizations and hard work by the candidate in the early primary states which led to strong and unexpected showings in these contests.

There is already growing evidence that this same formula will work for Kemp.

A recent University of New Hampshire poll shows Kemp pulling into second place ahead of Dole despite the fact that Dole is better known. Senator Gordon Humphrey and U.S. Representative Bob Smith are actively supporting Kemp with over 40 Republican members of the state legislature. Six of 10 Republican county chairmen relinquished thier party posts to serve as Kemp county chairmen.

Strong showings in Iowa and New Hampshire will give Kemp national name identification and help him pass the front-runners.

In 1980 Bush scored an unimpressive 3 percent in the Gallup Poll. The final Des Moines Register poll showed him losing Iowa to Reagan. Bush won Iowa and jumped to a solid lead in New Hampshire only to have a poor performance in the Nashua debate cost him victory in the Granite State.

An obscure former governor named Carter scored 2 percent in the Gallup Poll in October 1975. In December he dropped to 1 percent. Six weeks later he won the Iowa caucuses against better known opponents, won the New Hampshire primary and was nominated and elected president.

There are four elements needed for this kind of come-from-behind victory. The candidate must have a message, personal energy, campaign funds and organization.

Kemp clearly has all four. Only Kemp has consistently opposed federal tax increases and Social Security cuts. Only Kemp favors immediate deployment of Strategic Defense Initiative, only Kemp has a specific plan to lower interest rates and move this country toward full employment. Finally, only Kemp has put forward specific programs that will attract blacks, Hispanics and other minorities to the Republican Party.

Kemp's personal energy is amazing. He has visited Iowa 35 times this year, visited New Hampshire 25 times, and is putting in the kind of personal performance that leaves his staff and reporters who cover him exhausted.

Kemp has raised almost $6 million for his campaign. He will receive over $3 million in federal matching funds. Clearly, the Kemp campaign will be in a position to spend the legal maximum in the early primary states.

Kemp's organization in the early states is first rate. Over the summer he placed first or second in every major straw poll that did not have prohibitive ticket prices in both Iowa and New Hampshire. Interestingly, strong showings in early straw polls were the first indicators that long-shot Carter was a more serious candidate than the national media believed.

Kemp is running for president because he wants to challenge America as no other candidate will — to reach for our highest ideals and achieve our greatest potential. He firmly believes in a future of unlimited and boundless opportunity for all Americans.

I am convinced a major upset is in the making, and we at Villanova should keep our eyes on Kemp!

Letters

Student ridiculed

To the Editor:

I am writing to you in response to the un-Christian like treatment that I was forced to endure in order to obtain lunch Thursday in Dougherty Hall.

As a socially conscientious member of the Villanova community, I was deeply offended by the caustically vociferous and highly visible presence of an Augustinian priest at the entrance to the cafeteria.

I never realized that Machiavellism was a part of Catholicism.

Rather than politely allowing students to enter, I, along with many others, was lectured, criticized and embarrassed by, surprisingly enough, an Augustinian priest.

I never realized that Machiavellism was a part of Catholicism. Although his cause was noble, his means were reprehensible. This priest went so far as to call me "a lousy Catholic" simply for deciding to eat lunch, for personal reasons.

Although I wholeheartedly support the idea behind Hunger Awareness Week, in good conscience I cannot support the un-Christian like methods exemplified Thursday. I sincerely hope in the future that the methods will better represent Christian ideals.

The Villanovan will print "Letters to the Editor" received at its offices in 201 Dougherty prior to the weekly deadline, Tuesday at 2 p.m. All letters must be typed and double spaced. The editors will withhold a name upon request, but all lettes must be signed and should include the writer's telephone number. Because of limited space, not all letters can be printed. Apology offered by coordinator

To the Editor:

This letter is in reference to fast day of Hunger Awareness Week (H.A.W.). I would like to extend my sincere thanks to the over 2,300 students who gave up their lunch on this day.

In response to this number, over $7,100 were raised for the hungry both locally and abroad. I believe the hungry, homeless and poor will benefit from the money that was raised and the quesitons posed to the student body will increase their awareness of the problem.

I consider myself lucky in not knowing what it is like to be hungry. Our goal during H.A.W. was to raise the student body's awareness of this problem through a feeling of hunger.

If you felt harrassed or coerced into giving up your lunch, understand that it was my overenthusiasm to obtain a large number of participants. In this sense, the goal of H.A.W. may have been displaced. For those who abstained from lunch, know that you did help in the fight against hunger.

I hope that my over enthusiastic actions and strong sentiment for the hungry will not have an adverse effect on future fast days. Once again, thanks to all those who participated.

Broaden awareness

To the Editor:

We would like to clarify a misunderstanding. The purpose of Hunger Awareness Week is to broaden the perspective of world hunger as well as raise money for the underprivileged.

On Thursday of last week, fast day, many of us missed the point. The awareness, not the money, was the primary objective of sacrificing lunch. How many jumped to the defense of what is "rightfully mine" rather than taking a moment to think about hunger.

Our purpose at this institution of higher learning is not solely to get grades. We are called to a greater understanding of the world around us.

Many times this experience is overwhelming and we feel attacked. It is disheartening to see the ferocity of other students fighting for their own security and luxury, while they remain apathetic towards those "less" than themselves.

As Thanksgiving approaches, please take a moment to realize how very fortunate we are.

Hunger Awareness Week a success

To the Editor:

Nov. 7-15 marked Villanova's 15th annual Hunger Awareness Week. A tradition of commitment and excellence has been exemplified by Villanova's student body, faculty and administration. This commitment has been involved in campuswide involvement.

The success of Hunger Awareness Week involves the whole Villanova community. The staff of Campus Ministry, Food Services, the Center for Peace and Justice and student organizations such as the Villanova Union, Bread for the World, Pi Kappa Phi, Alpha Chi Omega, Lambda Chi Alpha, Delta Delta Delta and Kappa Alpha Theta should be praised for their efforts.

Villanova can take pride in the fact that over $500,000 has been raised collectively over a 15-year period for various international and domestic projects.

Last year a school was built in Haiti in the name of the students of Villanova University. This year the monies raised will be sent to St. Nicholas of Tolentine, an Augustinian parish in Bronx, N.Y., and an Augustinian mission in Peru.

Anne Sikorski, co-chairperson, and I would like to thank the Hunger Awareness Week committee chairpeople, Barbara Haenn, the Rev. John Liggio, O.S.A., and especially the Rev. Ray Jackson, O.S.A., for their dedication and hard work. We extend to everyone a safe Thanksgiving.

Driscoll praised for efforts

To the Editor:

By now a regularly featured column in the Villanovan, "who knows, who cares" has attained some notoriety for its sarcastic and iconoclastic behavior of poking fun at the foibles of the high and mighty and the not so high and mighty here at Villanova.

In some instances the perceived wrongs, errors or abuses the column sought to deride were topical or serious enough to merit such treatment. However, particularly in one case, the column has not been fair or moderate. I refer to the case of "El Presidente."

I believe the Villanova community, particularly the student body, should know that the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, has the respect of the vast majority of Villanova's faculty, who fully appreciate his efforts both while vice president for Academic Affairs and, more recently, while University president, to improve faculty salaries and to bring them to a level comparable to faculty salaries at other similar universities.

Many in our Villanova community must also be aware of the great personal efforts expended by Driscoll on behalf of Covenant I and Covenant II. Thanks to the monies raised by these campaigns, we now have, among other benefits, the Connelly Center and new student dorms and will have more new student dorms in the future.

I believe that the students will agree that these buildings have served and will continue to serve Villanova students well. So perhaps it is time, in Driscoll's regard, to "let his good live long after him and inter the evil with his bones."

Food Services needs improvements

To the Editor:

Okay. I have been here for two and one-half months now, and I am starting to realize that things are less then perfect here at Villanova, but among those things that I have noticed, food service is one of my favorite topics. There are two incidents that I am not too thrilled about.

On Nov. 7, Homecoming, I woke up at 8:47 a.m., took a quick shower, and, ravished with pangs of hunger, dashed to the "Spit" in hopes of getting something, even if it was only cereal, in my stomach before the tailgate started.

As I reached for the unlocked door, I heard the bells in Corr Hall as they struck 9 a.m. A quick glance at my watch told me that I had made it. I handed my card to the meal checker, only to be discourteously informed that, "We're closed."

My jaw dropped, but I quickly regained my wits and, after much wailing and gnashing of teeth (it is a Catholic university, I had to put in one biblical reference), I was able to forge my way past her into the "garden of culinary delights" that is Donahue Hall. (Ha, I scoff).

Secondly, two weeks ago, my roommate, deeply concerned about the lack of lemons to flavor his tea with, informed one of the cafeteria staff that there were no lemons. Despite his non-threatening tone, the worker snapped that it ... "isn't my job. Go tell her."

What, you ask, is my point? The University charges me $4,500 per year to live on campus. The least it could do is be a little lenient about the cafeteria hours. (It is not like there is a mad rush on the cafeteria at 9:02 a.m.) It would be nice if the workers could be a least courteous to their students, because that is (or should be) part of their jobs.

On last thing.. I do not recall reading on my bill that I was also paying for the security guards to eat. I mean, I do not mind a cup of coffee and a doughnut, but they eat more than I do.

Lip-It contest rocks the fieldhouse

By MICHAEL W. DENISON
Staff Reporter

The third annual Lip-It contest, sponsored by the Resident Student Association (RSA), was held Friday in the Jake Nevin Field House.

The event, according to RSA programming officer MaryJo Yannacone, raised almost $1,150 from admission tickets and private donations to benefit the child victims of AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) at the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia.

The competition was emceed by Suzanne Bennett and Robert Hart, who introduced each of the thirteen acts that performed on stage.

The judges for the event were Assistant Director of Student Activities Gary Bonas; Marie Schrauder, assistant director for Residence Life; Career Development Center counselor Dr. Judy Madsen; Dr. Albert J. Dorley, history professor, and Phil Brach, Student Government president.

They judged each act on its originality, lip-synch ability, choreography and overall entertainment value. Each of these criteria was judged on a scale of one to five points, with five being the best.

The Lip-It acts included such songs as Bananarama's "I Heard A Rumor," Janet Jackson's "Nasty" and U2's "Where The Streets Have No Name." Other acts included Adam Ant's "Goodie Two Shoes" and Elvis Presley's "Blue Suede Shoes."

The Grateful Dead's "Touch of Grey" was complete with a "Dead-head" slide show and direct participation by the audience on the field house floor. Danielle Broussard's steamy lip-synch of Joan Jett and the Blackhearts' "I Love Rock 'N Roll" burned up the stage.

The second runners-up, receiving $50, were the seven performers of the lip-synch of Barry Manilow's "Copacabana." This act included the "Manilow haircut" and white suit, a scantily clad Lola and a dual to the death.

The first runners-up, who received $75, were Kimberly Howze and Tony Valentine. They gracefully danced and sipped wine through the lip-synch of "Dirty Dancing's" "I Had The Time of My Life."

The winners of the 1987 Lip-It contest, who received $100, were Dan O'Rourke, Rich Stockard, Aaron Anderson, Mike Migliori and Sean O'Brien. They romped their way through a medley of "The Wizard of Oz" songs, which included "Somewhere Over The Rainbow," "We're Off to See the Wizard" and a solo by the cowardly lion.

Dorothy smoked a cigar, and mooned and flashed the audience. But the spot light was won by Toto, who preferred the cowardly lion over a fire hydrant. He later died, belly-up, with his paws sticking up canary-style. With excellent costumes and wacky choreography, this act quickly caught the audience's favor.

All the participants of this year's Lip-It contest helped make this the most successful one to date. Yannacone stated, "We were originally worried about programming the event on Friday, but, as it turned out, we had the same number of students attending as last year and managed to raise

AIDS facts and concerns discussed

By JACQUELINE GENTILE
Assistant Features Editor

AIDS. Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. Fifty thousand Americans have the disease. Two to 3 million Americans carry the virus but show no symptoms.

Gary Bonas, assistant director to Student Activities and a member of the University's AIDS education program, stated that AIDS is caused by the HTLV-III virus which infects the T-4 helper cell of the body's immune system.

"The virus itself is essentially not very dangerous, except when it multiples and reproduces itself in the body," explained Bonas. When this happens, it destroys the part of the immune system that fights off certain fungus and bacterial infections.

As a result of the damage done to the immune system, a person infected with the AIDS virus gets opportunistic infections. These are infections which are rare among healthy people whose immune systems are functioning.

According to Bonas, "These diseases ultimately kill ... AIDS doesn't kill anybody."

Nick Wuckich, a student member of the AIDS education program, explained that if the HTLV-III virus enters a person's bloodstream, one of three events occur. A person can develop AIDS, they can develop AIDS Related Complex (ARC), or they can become an asymptomatic carrier of the virus.

If a person is infected with the virus, some of the symptoms are swollen glands, a dry cough, purple blotches on the skin, white spots in the mouth, a loss of 10 percent or more of body weight, persistent diarrhea, a slight but persistent fever and unexplained bleeding.

Individually, these symptoms do not necessarily spell AIDS. Bonas stated that these symptoms must be present together, in significant quantities and generally over a prolonged period of time.

Bonas added, "They have to be present without any other explainable reason."

A person who carries the AIDS virus can develop ARC, which is a milder form of AIDS. Bonas stated, "It's like having the flu forever."

Bonas explained that people generally do not die from ARC. As of now, only five to 20 percent of the people with ARC have developed AIDS.

Someone who has been exposed to the virus but does not exhibit any symptoms is an asymptomatic carrier of AIDS. Bonas stated that an asymptomatic carrier might not develop symptoms for six months to 10 or 12 years. This time is called the incubation period.

Bonas mentioned that the following behavior or conditions could contribute to people developing AIDS if they carry the virus: alcohol and drug use, caffeine use, lack of sleep, poor nutrition and exposure to other immunilogically affective diseases such as mononucleosis.

How is the HTLV-III virus transmitted? The virus is found in blood, semen and vaginal secretions. Bonas stated that, "For a non-infected person to be infected, one of those three bodily fluids of

Plimpton lectures

By IRENE V. LANGRAN
Staff Reporter

On Dec. 2, a modern day legend will visit the Villanova campus. This legend is George Plimpton, and he is coming to speak in an event sponsored by the Villanova Student Union.

Plimpton is indeed a man of many talents. A native New Yorker, he graduated from Exeter, Harvard University, and Cambridge University. He is the founder and editor of The Paris Review, a literary journal established in Paris in 1953.

He is also an avid fireworks enthusiast who is the fireworks commissioner of New York City. As a movie actor he has appeared in such films as "Reds" and "Lawrence of Arabia."

He is a well-known television personality, who hosts the Disney Cable's "Mouseterpiece Theatre." In addition, he is a successful author of biographies and fiction.

In one of his most famous pieces of fiction, as a special contributor to Sports Illustrated, he created Sidd Finch, a Mets rookie who could pitch baseballs at 168 miles per hour. His great triumph was that this tale became an April Fools' story that fooled people worldwide.

Despite all these accomplishments, Plimpton is perhaps known to more people as a result of his success in yet another area. In autobiographies such as Paper Lion and Out of My League, Plimpton experienced first-hand and survived to recount the encounters of which many people dream.

Like Walter Mitty, we humans seem to let our daily lives be interrupted by thoughts of what it would be like to be another person, or more specifically, to play another role.

We might wonder what it is like to fly through the air on a trapeze under the big top, or fly through the air as a parachutist or a hang glider.

Many weekend athletes have dreamed of pitching against American and National League All-Stars, playing tennis on tour or shooting hoops with the Boston Celtics. Perhaps you have dreamed of facing bulls as a matador or facing pucks as a goalie in the National Hockey League.

V.U. has flair for fashion

By JACKIE LANZA
Staff Reporter

Have you ever wondered why Villanova students dress as they do?

Believe it or not, the most frequent answer to this question seems to be "to impress guys" or "to impress girls." This answer is usually followed closely by "to be comfortable" and "it was the only thing left that was clean."

Villanova fashion falls into one of two categories: preppy and not quite as preppy. Members of the latter category are the few dressers who cannot quite bring themselves to trade in their Reebooks for pennyloafers. Members of the former category, however, are fairly evident.

The Villanova school uniform has been deemed turtleneck, sweater, Cheenos, socks and loafers. No one has blue hair, no one wears excessive amounts of leather. Preppy could be considered an admissions requirement.

There are, of course, variations on the theme. Denim can replace any of the above items. Jeans come in any color, but are most fashionable when they have been abused before purchasing. This includes acid washing and prerripped knees. Denim jackets are a necessity, and the outfit is complete with denim accessories and even denim boots.

Another wardrobe staple is the miniskirt. (Women only, please.) Although buyers for major department stores have been predicting ankle length skirts for fall, hemlines continue to rise as temperatures drop.

Once strictly denim, the miniskirt now comes in a variety of styles: straight, pleated and "bubbled," which is not quite conservative enough for Villanova women's taste. Conservative preppies prefer a short plaid mini topped with a cardigan while the "not quites" set trends in three-tiered denim minis and short jackets.

A general rule for wearing a miniskirt: if you do not know how to sit down in a miniskirt, do not wear one.

It seems that the latest fad at Villanova is tye-dying. Nothing remains untouched. Even sheets cannot escape the bright splashes of purple and orange seen frequently on shirts around campus. This trend has been revived from the '70s, the age which also brought hip-hugging, polyester bell bottoms — one part of fashion history that should not be repeated.

With the onset of colder weather, Villanova students dress warmly in long tweed jackets and boots. Preppies might have a cap or scarf on to accessorize the outfit.

Speaking of accessories, what is seen most from "the wall"? For guys, suspenders are still popular. For girls, bangle bracelets, large gold earrings and colored watches are seen most frequently. The rhinestone tennis bracelet has also started to make an appearance on campus.

Regardless of what is new in fashion, students in both categories will agree on one thing: When it comes to finals or an 8:30 a.m. class that cannot quite keep your eyes open, nothing beats fleecy, comfortable sweats.

the infected person must come in contact with the non-infected person's blood."

This contact can occur through the sharing of intravenous drug needles, intimate sexual contact and birth.

The AIDS virus has been found in saliva, "but only in minute quantities," said Bonas. These quantities have not been proven sufficient to transmit the virus.

What are some ways that AIDS cannot be transmitted? The virus cannot be acquired by donating blood. The Red Cross uses a sterile needle for each donor.

Also, AIDS cannot be acquired through casual contact, such as being in the same room with a person who has AIDS or eating from the plate of an infected person.

Theresa Van Overwalle, another student member of the AIDS education program, added that the virus is very fragile and is killed by sunlight and household bleach.

Who is at a high risk of acquiring AIDS? Homosexuals and intravenous drug users are two high risk groups, along with sexual partners of people in these categories.

However, Bonas added, "It is not a gay person's disease. It is in the heterosexual community."

How can a person protect himself from this deadly disease? Two major preventative measures are refraining from intravenous drug use and abstaining from sex.

It has been shown clinically that the use of condoms is helpful in reducing the risk of transmitting AIDS. However, Bonas explained that "We here at Villanova support the Church's teaching in that the best way to eliminate the risk of transmitting AIDS is not to be sexually active."

He also added that condoms are not foolproof in preventing pregnancy, and to the same degree are not foolproof in preventing the transmission of AIDS.

According to a national AIDS hotline, education and accurate information are crucial in preventing the spread of AIDS. "Ignorance about AIDS can be fatal."

The Mask

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

Your feelings are masked within a cloud
I wish I could hear them voiced out loud.

If I could only view your mind.
If your heart's true feelings I could find.

I wish I could see through overcast eyes to know what is truth and what are lies.

There are things in life we don't want to face, but not all of life is delicate lace.

I want to know what is real.
I want to know what you feel.

I need to know what you need from me.
I need to know what your cloudy eyes see.

I need to know what lies under the mask.
I want to know what will make us last.

just a breath from the past and the weakness in my knees returns with only a thought or a word, all familiar and with hidden meaning no one ever guessed our secrets no one knew what we felt only us, just us . . .

tearing at the bounded edge of my memory they still try to force their way in but there's no room for them, there never was perhaps that was our problem
. . . but we were inseparable, knowing every subtlety of the other even now the warmth of your breath and the clean smell of your skin call forth clear to me like the gentle hollow at the base of your neck and the kisses sweet and tender, yet filled with youthful urgency we wanted to grow up together, but we were so young . . . so young night recalls the times I used to fall asleep smiling but the memories hold empty emotion and smiles fail me now only tears fall, but don't worry about me . . . I'm happy . . .
your eyes, always your eyes pin me to the truth and uncovered
I lapse silent, wondering how you can make me feel this way even now when you are no longer with me

Roommates learn to compromise

By
ALLEN AMBROSINO
and
JEFF GILLIES
Assistant Entertainment Editors

Probably one of the most challenging experiences college has to offer is relating to your roommate.

During the summer, incoming freshmen tend to worry about what their roommates will be like. Will we get along? Do we like the same music? Is he the Felix Unger type?

Then the important questions pop into your head. Does he watch a financial news network 24 hours a day, stopping only to run naked through the hallways singing "La Bamba" at the top of his lungs?

As you can see, the first few weeks you spend with your roommate can be an enlightening experience. As Geoff Hulme, head resident of Stanford Hall, states, "The experience really makes you open your eyes to a different person. You learn to appreciate differences which you have not had to deal with before."

Most roommates are not fortunate enough to have known each other beforehand. Even if you do decide to room with a friend from high school, there is no guarantee that you will get along.

Hulme said, "Usually small things cause the majority of problems between roommates." For example, one of you may find it impossible to study without listening to such favorites as W.A.S.P. and Megadeth with the stereo blasting.

However, your roommate might find it necessary to watch the daily reruns of Family Ties in order to psyche himself up to study western civilization. This matter may be further complicated by the fact that your roommate cannot study when the room resembles Heavy Metal Hour on MTV. Meanwhile, you may find Mallory of Family Ties just too distracting.

"Lack of communication is the biggest problem that roommates encounter because little disagreements can turn into major ones if they are not dealt with," according to Hulme.

Therefore, in the name of good roommate relations, you should be able to discuss things in order to find solutions that make both of you happy.

In the above example, communication may lead you to discover that a simple compromise can solve this dilemma. Fortunately, there are headphones and movable television stands. This way, your roommate does not have to hear primal screaming and you can keep your mind on your studies as well. "Almost every problem can be solved," in Hulmes opinion, "if both roommates are willing to work it out."

Differences in basic personality traits often pose problems for roommates. However, resident assistant Denis Graeber feels that "although basic personality differences can initiate a problem, the real problem occurs when roommates refuse to accept those differences."

People who laugh every five seconds while watching Pee Wee's Playhouse may have difficulty getting along with someone who smiles as often as Halley's Comet comes around. If you do not make a real attempt to get along, most of the time you will not.

On the other hand, you may discover that you have many common interests as well. Staying up as late as possible, sleeping as late as possible and blowing off classes are possibly a few things both of you enjoy.

Your mutual love for total darkness while sleeping may earn your room the nickname "The Cave" by other people in your wing.

When the resident assistant is not looking, many roommates combine talents by wreaking havoc in the hallways. They pull pranks such as tilting buckets of water against unsuspecting neighbor's doors.

Life would not be complete without juvenile pleasures such as this. When you find that another room has plans to attack, it tends to make roommates stick together.

Much roommate unity has been encouraged when one asks the inevitable late night question, "Are you hungry?" In most cases the answer is yes. There is a strong possibility that you will find yourselves supporting several local food establishments singlehandedly.

In addition, many roommate fights have been caused by the general condition of the other's side of the room. However, this problem never arises with those roommates who are still unable to distinguish exactly whose side of the room belongs to whom. Most roommates remain convinced that it is not their fault.

After cleaning the room before fall break, they return to find it a total mess. This leads them to believe that either dirt and clutter are naturally attracted to the room or now they know what the specters in St. Mary's Hall do in their spare time.

Being roommates can be an interesting experience and is rarely boring. Hulme and Graeber agree that sooner or later even total opposites are bound to loosen up and have a lot of fun.

In Graeber's estimation, "A major part of the education you receive in college is based upon social interaction. While some of this is accomplished through meeting people in classes and clubs, your roommate can have the greatest impact on this part of your education."

who knows, who cares

Hey, it's the big day ... Edwin "Moosehead" Meese has been issued a day pass to speak at Villanova ... what an honor ... he will certainly arrest the attention of all the conservatives on campus ... let's hope he's not arrested himself while he's here ... hope you didn't miss the big game last night ... night classes were cancelled ... we certainly know where our priorities lie ... wonder if ESPN stuck around to talk to good-shirt Rollie ... he's in the hall of fame ... the Italian one anyway ... Rumor has It that our dearly beloved neighbors aren't happy about our west campus dorm proposal ... guess they want us to build underground ... that's where they want us ... 6 feet under ... then they could really step on us ... hey, did you hear about the Meese protestors ... they must not have heard of the Villanova student slogan: Apathy and You, Perfect Together ... for all you left-wing radicals out there this Who Knows Who Cares is for you.

Campus Ministry

By THE REV.
BERNARD A. LAZOR, O.S.A.

Above the entrance to the library at Yale University is a quote that says the library is the heart of the university.

In the course of our education, we have experienced, even from our elementary school days, an association with books and their repositories, libraries at home or in school or in the local town. From this accessible storehouse of knowledge we have nurtured our minds with wisdom in many areas of personal interest.

While the spectrum of reading interests is broad for all of us, I would like to call attention to an incident in the life of a literary great of the last century, Sir Walter Scott.

James Hefley, in his book What's So Great About the Bible? tells us how Scott in the last days of his life asked his son-in-law to read to him from the book. "What book?" responded the younger man, for no doubt the Scott residence was filled with many volumes. Sir Walter replied, "There is only one book, the Bible."

After the death of the great British author there were found in Scott's Bible the following verses:

Within that awful volume lies
The mystery of mysteries!
Happiest they of human race
To whom God has granted grace.
To read, to fear, to hope,
to pray,
To lift the latch and force
the way,
And better had they ne'er been born,
Who read to doubt, or read to scorn.

One of the values of a Catholic liberal arts education is the exposure of students to literature that stimulates the mind and heart to values that are both intellectual and spiritual, not merely pragmatic and career oriented.

Bible reading and courses of study on the Bible contribute to this kind of influence and value. Some 20 years ago I obtained a copy of the Jerusalem Bible. Taking a cue from Psalm 119, verse 105, which reads, "Now your word is a leap to my feet, a light on my path," I composed the following lines and wrote these inside the cover of my Bible:

May the Word of the Lord be a lamp to your feet to guide you on the path of life; to console you in moments of weariness and discouragements, to lighten you in moments of confusion and darkness; to bring you an ever deeper meaning of life and your role in it;
to delight you with the awareness of the presence of God; and finally to open to you the gate of His heavenly abode.

Registration feared

By KAREN IOVINO
Staff Reporter

Midterms are now over. Thanksgiving break is just around the corner, and the first snowfall has come and gone. All of this can mean just one thing at Villanova — it is time to register for classes for the spring semester.

Scheduling seems like it should be a mindless chore that we are forced to do each semester. However, panic hits when registration slips are found in the mailboxes. Beginning with seniors and ending with freshmen, each class year is given five days to schedule.

Each student is then given a specific date and time to register within the five days set aside for his/her particular class. Every student hopes to have the first day of his or her class to register.

Imagine being the first student to register, a senior on Nov. 2 at 9 a.m., breezing through the registration lines and getting the exact schedule you want. Registering is a breeze. It is almost fun.

Now imagine being the last student to register, a freshman on Nov. 20 at 4:30 p.m. Be assured that all the classes you want will be closed and you will probably be forced to take advanced engineering analysis at 8:30 a.m. even though you are a liberal arts student. Scheduling is your worst nightmare.

There are two different ways to go about scheduling. You can do it the way your parents would want you to, taking all the right classes with all the best teachers, or you can go about it keeping this one point in mind: leave the majority of the afternoon free so that you can catch the best of the spring sun's rays out on Sheehan Beach while still allowing ample time to sleep in the morning.

The best thing to do to accomplish this is to schedule all five of your classes into time slots that don't begin until 11:30 a.m. and end by 1:30 p.m.

No matter how prepared you think you are when you walk into the west lounge of Dougherty Hall to register, you are never sure of what you will find once you step inside.

Having made up five possible schedules containing different combinations of all the classes you have to take at all different times, you feel confident that at least one will work out — wrong.

A typical scenerio is to find that, after waiting in line for 20 minutes, the person in front of you has taken the last seat in the only English class you would consider enrolling in. What to do?

Forget about English and take whatever fits into your schedule. When you find that even though you absolutely must take Spanish next semester, all Spanish sections are closed, don't despair — take Basket-weaving 101 instead and be out in the sun by 1:30 p.m.

Regardless of how your schedule works out, it is always a relief when registration is over. Remember, you can always go to Drop and Add next semester — or you can keep your schedule the way it is and get a head start on your summer tan.

double the amount of money." The price per ticket doubled to $2 this year.

The $1,146 raised from the contest will be donated to the Pediatric AIDS wing at the Children's Hospital. There are 20 children presently receiving treatment there.

Since the cost of one day's treatment for a single child is about $600, doctors suggested a way by which all the children could benefit from the Lip-It donation. The money will help pay for their clothing and toys, as well as the transportation costs for those children who are outpatients.

"I am really happy with the student support and that we raised so much money for the children," Yannacone said.

The winners of the 1987 Lip-It contest at Villanova have expressed their hope that an intercollegiate competition will be held later this school year. They hope that Dorothy and her pals can triumph again somewhere over the rainbow.

These dreams may range from what it would be like for the average person to play quarterback for the Detroit Lions or the Baltimore Colts to what it would be like to play for the New York Philharmonic Orchastra.

What all these dreams have in common is that they have been the experiences of Plimpton in his effort to answer the average person's question "What would it be like if I ... "

These stories are a fulfillment of the dreams many call impossible, and are just a few of the accomplishments Plimpton will share when he speaks at Villanova.

Vasey presents comedy of manners

By LUCI A. JANKOWSKI
Staff Reporter

This season, the Villanova Theatre promised to present theatregoers with "a ticket to the good life," and they have not disappointed us yet. The production of Richard Brinsley Sheridan's "School For Scandal" was definitely "the ticket" to an evening of comedy, great performances and fine theatre.

The play is a comedy of manners which satirizes the behavior of the upper aristocratic class in 18th century England. On any given day, the lords and ladies would gather with their "school" of scandlers, play cards, gamble and gossip, gossip, gossip. Nothing was held sacred about anyone, not even one's closest friend or relative. Today's gossip columnists would be considered amateurs, compared to these people.

Sheridan cleverly stereotypes his characters after the personalities of members in gossiping cliques. He does this so cleverly that the character's name describes their personality perfectly. Beth Dannenfelser was superb as Lady Teazle. She literally teased, flirted and prodded with every word and action from her playful pout to her mischievous voice. She could always wrap her husband, Sir Peter Teazle, around her little finger.

Thomas Large played Sir Peter and gave a superior performance as the older husband who wishes his younger, free-spirited wife would love him more and annoy him less.

The destinies of the Surface brothers are a main interest in the play and reveal that appearances can be deceiving. Edward O. Flick Jr. was magnificent as Joseph Surface, outwardly a gentleman loved by all, but really a two-faced scoundrel. This was a demanding acting role which Flick performed with much enthusiasm and energy. The brothers' aging uncle, Sir Oliver Surface, was played by Michael Hollinger. He gave an impressive performance and portrayed his character quite convincingly.

Matthew G. Higgins gave a fine performance as Charles Surface, a prodigal son and a rogue on the outside, but really benevolent and kind on the inside.

Other cast members included: Elizabeth K. Walsh as Lady Sneerwell, Jill DeForte as Mrs. Condour, Gerre Garrett as Mrs. Crabtree, Michael Foley as Sir Benjamin Backbite, and John Rheim as Snake. As their names describe, they satirized the malicious gossip and no-holds-barred character defamation of the day. Maryann Sollami played Maria, the beautiful young ward who takes offense at gossiping. Cynthia Angst played Mistress Rowley, the wise confidant of Sir Peter and Sir Oliver. Thomas Basile played Moses, the honest moneylender. T. Richard Greene played Careless, a compatriot of Charles' and Timothy C. Tully played Sir Harry Bumper, a drinking partner of Charles and a comic character.

All in all, the performances by the actors were excellent. Each knew and portrayed their character quite well and with credibility.

The household servants Trip, Alcide, Jacob, Alice and Guinevere played by Sean Murray, Alcide Hobbs, Michael Guerriero, Kristen Robacker and Monique Blank, respectively, did a wonderful job and had great facial expressions and body movements. They were also responsible for the scene changes, and they kept the action of the play moving.

The play itself is witty, humorous and fast-paced. This is high comedy, so you will not find slapstick humor here, but the puns and language make it funny. The first act of the play drags, and at times it is hard to folow because of the number of characters. It takes the first act to get used to the 18th century English and the English accents of the characters. However, do not be discouraged because the second and third acts are great and not to be missed.

I cannot end without giving credit to the costume designer and constructors for their extraordinary work. The costumes were authentic to the time period and so spectacular that one felt transported back in time. The set also added to that feeling because it was simple, yet it reflected the style of the era.

Although "School For Scandal" was written in 1777, its universality is a factor that still keeps it popular today. After all, as you shall see, times have not changed that much. Do not miss out on your "ticket to the good life" with this performance.

"School For Scandal," directed by Terry Guerin, will be running at the Vasey Theatre on Nov. 18 through 21 and Dec. 1 through 6. Tickets are $5. Call the box office for details at 645-7474.

The Cars drove into the Spectrum Tuesday night

By ALLEN AMBROSINO
and
JEFF GILLIES
Assistant Entertainment Editors

The Cars stopped at the Spectrum on Nov. 17 and performed a mix of old favorites and new material which had the audience dancing in the aisles throughout the concert. Many of our friends who had previously seen The Cars told us that we were in for a boring concert because of the band's lack of animation on stage.

Much to our surprise, this was not the case as the quality of their music greatly overshadowed their lack of movement and interaction with the audience. The Cars played a solid 19-song set and left the audience more than satisfied.

Icehouse, a band from Sydney, Australia, opened for The Cars and were not very impressive. Admittedly, neither one of us has any real knowledge of the band's musical history. However, all of their songs sounded the same and their performance was mediocre at best. As Icehouse played songs from their albums Icehouse, Measure for Measure and Band of Colors, the people around us put on an opening act of their own.

An intoxicated man sitting behind us was removed for causing a major disturbance. Shortly afterward, a woman seated next to us smack her husband with three unanswered blows to the head before, she too, was shown the door by security.

Icehouse finally caught the crowd's attention with their latest single, "Crazy," which is well-known because of its airplay on MTV. Unfortunately, just when the audience began to show some interest, they had completed their set.

The Cars opened in impressive fashion as they surprised the audience immediately when a giant robot appeared on stage. As it moved around the stage, green and blue lights were emitted from its eyes out into the audience. "Tonight She Comes" began The Cars set as the robot continued to move around the stage.

The Cars then ripped into "Touch and Go" followed by "Double Trouble" from the new album Door To Door. This song brought most of the crowd to their feet as Benjamin Orr took the vocals for the first time. The band continued with "You Are The Girl," another song from the new album. It was very similiar to the record version and received a great response from the audience.

Almost everyone began to dance, demonstrating the effectiveness of this song in a live setting. In between more songs from their latest album such as "Fine Line" and "Strap Me In," The Cars offered another of their popular hits, "Let's Go." Once again the audience was up and dancing as Orr gave another strong singing performance.

The next song, "Moving In Stereo," became famous during the scene that Phoebe Cates and Judge Rhinehold shared in the movie "Fast Times At Ridgemont High." Its sound effects seemed as if they came straight from the space age and the crashing cymbals of drummer David Robinson provided a strong beat.

Continuing with an excellent, but not as popular song, "Dangerous Type" featured some of Elliot Easton's best playing of the night. Easton's guitar was amazingly contrasted by the keyboards, which were distinctly present throughout the song. Singer/guitarist Rick Ocasek gave a fine vocal performance that impressed the audience.

"Drive" slowed down the pace, creating a more relaxed, mellow atmosphere. The crowd returned to their seats for the song, while cigarette lighters were held aloft by some. With this song, The Cars began to play a series of their greatest hits.

The entire crowd clapped along with the opening to "My Best Friend's Girl." The song was very different when played live because of a more guitar-oriented sound. "Let the Good Times Roll" included a fine display of guitar playing from Easton and Ocasek.

The lyrics of "You Might Think" got the crowd involved as they sang along during certain parts of the song. After slowing down towards the middle, the band exploded back into the song led by Easton's mastery of the guitar. This was the last song of the set for The Cars as they left while receiving a standing ovation.

Within minutes, The Cars and the robot reappeared for an encore set highlighted by "Hello Again," "Magic" and the ever-popular "Just What I Needed."

According to Ocasek, The Cars have come a long way since their early days of stealing traffic signs to use as stage props. Despite their reputation of being a boring concert band, The Cars rocked the arena with a quality collection of both old and new songs. They made our first trip to the Spectrum ann enjoyable and memorable experience.

Alice Cooper is back and better than ever

Raise Your Fist and Yell
Alice Cooper
MCA Records
* * * *

Remember back when you were a kid and every year during the last weeks of the school year, every radio station on the dial played "School's Out." Alice Cooper immortalized himself in the minds of sutdents young and old everywhere with that song. Those were the heydays of the master of macabre music known as Alice Cooper.

Taking a loss of popularity in the late '70s and early '80s, Cooper returned to the spotlight last year with Constrictor and "The Nightmare Returns" tour. Now, with the recent release of Raise Your Fist and Yell, Cooper should be headed for an even greater popularity.

They still play "School's Out" on the radio and Cooper's status as the father of theatrical stage shows and first user of makeup and special effects will last forever.

Raise Your Fist and Yell is, in my opinion, the best album Cooper has released since Welcome to My Nightmare and Constrictor. Both Constrictor and Raise Your Fist and Yell are the newest records made by Cooper on MCA Records. While Constrictor was a great welcome for Cooper back to vinyl, Raise Your Fist and Yell keeps the ball rolling and offers a tight collection of songs bringing together all that Cooper is in 10 songs.

Raise Your Fist and Yell appears to be divided into two types of Cooper songs, a different type on each side. Side 1 offers four anthems to the youth of today with which to assault all of the one-sided people with closed minds who criticize others for no reason except to criticize. Parents, teachers and the P.M.R.C. (the organization that attempts to rate and ban albums) should listen to and heed the lyrics of these songs.

Side 2 contains five scary tunes that cover the gamut of all that Cooper's macabre side entails — evil, murder, the dead, maniacal psychopaths and plenty of blood. These songs will lend themselves well to live translations.

Raise Your Fist and Yell opens with "Freedom," a song that seems conspicuously aimed at Tipper Gore and the P.M.R.C. Cooper takes a very mature stance in the lyrics of "Freedom" and the screeching guitar work of Kane Roberts and anthemic chorus only make it better.

The chorus is: "Freedom, we're gonna ring the bell/ freedom to rock, freedom to talk/ freedom, raise your fist and yell/ freedom to rock, freedom to talk/ freedom — ring." Take those words to heart, Gore.

"Give the Radio Back" with its message of rebellion, will attract anyone who has ever had their radio taken away by a teacher in school, whereas "Lock Me Up" and "Step On You" are directed to closed-minded people in general.

All of these songs are musically unique and lyrically excellent, as well as amazingly heavy for Cooper. Side 1 ends with "Not That Kind of Love," a sinister invitation from Cooper to an innocent young lady to go out with him. This song is typical Cooper at his best.

Side 2 opens with "Prince of Darkness," the theme song to the recently released John Carpenter film of the same name. "Prince of Darkness" is a hauntingly catchy number, as are the other songs on this side, and is played briefly during a scene in the movie in which Cooper kills somebody by spearing them with a bicycle frame.

Cooper obviously put a lot of time into this album, with his touring group acting as the musicians on the record.

Cooper is the leader of a group of evil and silent street people, and his performance cannot be missed by Cooper fans.

"Time to Kill," "Chop, Chop, Chop," "Gail" and "Roses on White Lace" round off Side 2 with a quartet of tales of murder by psychopathic killers. "Chop, Chop, Chop" and "Gail" run together as a tale of a homicidal genius who kills hookers, one whose name was Gail. "Gail" employs a frightening imitation of a pipe organ to add to the effect of the murder of the lady of the night and the disposal of her body.

Classic Cooper lyrics from "Gail" sung in Cooper's unique voice are: "The bugs serve time in her skeletal jail/ I wonder how the bugs remember Gail."

"Time to Kill" explains how a man from the streets mentally breaks down and goes on a murder spree. "Roses on White Lace" is the story of a jealous man who wreaks his vengeance on a newlywed who has jilted him. The man mutilates the bride, taking her head with him as a final conquest and stating that her "Blood drops look like roses on white lace." This is my favorite song of the second side.

Raise Your Fist and Yell is an intense album. The songs are strong and all are written with such incredible imagery that the lyricist is easily identified as Cooper to anybody who reads them.

Cooper obviously put a lot of time into this album, with his touring group acting as the musicians on the record. These musicians are: Kane Roberts (guitars), Kip Winger (bass), Ken K. Mary (drums) and Paul Horowitz (keyboards).

Cooper's tour is currently on the road and will visit Philadelphia at the Tower Theater this weekend with Ace Frehley's Comet and Faster Pussycat opening up.

Expect some of Raise Your Fist and Yell's songs to be played and make sure that you see Cooper, whether you are already a fan or just curious. Only by seeing him can you experience the essence that is Alice Cooper.

SILICON DREAMS ****
FIREBIRD C64/128, AT, AP, AMIGA, ST, IBM

Silicon Dreams is another trilogy of adventures from Firebird that encompass everything that an adventurer could want. The difference between this package and the previous trilogy, Jewels of Darkness, lies in the subject matter. Silicon Dreams is a science fiction game that takes place in the 23rd century. The three adventures are also more interrelated than in Jewels of Darkness. Although they are separate, it helps if you finish them in order.

The three games within the Silicon Dreams package are: Snowball, Return to Eden and Worm in Paradise. In each of the games, you are Kim Kimberly and one of his descendants with the intention of colonizing Eden, a planet prepared for human habitation by intelligent robots. In Snowball, you wake up on the colonization ship prematurely to find out that something is wrong.

In Return to Eden, you must escape the dangers on the ship and travel to the Robot City of Enoch, closer to your goal. Finally, in The Worm in Paradise, you must find out what is wrong in Enoch and solve it quickly. All three games are captivating and on a difficulty level comparable with most people's skills.

Silicon Dreams is not only a very good trilogy of games, but it also has a useful extra in the form of the manual. Aside from obvious instructions and playing hints, the manual contains a novella, "Eden Song," to set the atmosphere for the game. Silicon Dreams is a science fiction gamer's paradise.

SHILOH  SSI
C64/128, AT, AP, IBM

Now more than ever do fans of the Civil War have another outlet for pent up energy. With the release of Shiloh, aspiring war gamers and history buffs can faithfully recreate The Battle of Shiloh in all of its bloodiness and strategical beauty.

The game takes place in a 30 by 30 grid of squares similar to most war games. However, this is one of the few similarities to the war game standard that dominates most other games.

Shiloh uses the game system first introduced in Gettysburg: The Turning Point. In this system, the entire battle takes place in only 15 turns, so that the player must think out carefully each move or wind up in a tight situation.

Also, all brigades that were at the historical battle are present in the game, as well as the federal generals Lewinson and Tyler. This historical accuracy is another [illegible] system and [illegible] most recently used in Rebel Charge at Chickamauga.

Normally, I am always impressed by the detail that goes into the presentation and packaging of an SSI game, but Shiloh takes this excellence even further. The game manual is 60 pages, but each page is filled with useful information. The manual includes a complete historical discussion of the battle, maps showing formations at critical parts in the battle, numerous charts needed in the game and complete instructions and tutorials for the three games contained within Shiloh.

Regardless of the type of war game that you may like, I would strongly suggest Shiloh. It can be played at an easier difficulty level for the beginner and still offers a strong challenge to the veterans. Shiloh also includes a map of the area used in the game, so you can journey back in time to Tennessee.

INSTANT MUSIC ****
ELECTRONIC ARTS
C64/128, AMIGA, AP

This program is one of the few out on the market that has a name that succinctly describes itself. Instant Music uses a unique system of music generation to allow the user to be as creative as one can possibly be without actually being a musician.

The program promotes jamming on your computer's keyboard to simulate songs. The neat thing is that this program will fool people into thinking that you are actually playing music.

The uniqueness of Instant Music lies in the way that you "compose" music. You play by drawing one of four different colored lines on the screen. Each color corresponds to a different instrument or voice. The computer interprets notes and plays music based on the line in the right rhythm and key.

So by drawing on the screen with a mouse or joystick, you make instant music. The computer does all of the work. Instant Music contains over a dozen instruments and even a human voice. So do not worry about running out of uses for the program.

The manual includes a lot of interesting information for both amateurs and real musicians. It includes a list of all of the songs and song fragments included on the disk, complete instructions and tutorial exercises and helpful charts of chord sequences for different kinds of music.

HEARTLAND * FIREBIRD
C64/128

Heartland is a new game from Firebird for Commodore owners that has an excellent story behind it and is an easy game to play. The game takes place in The Five Lands of Heartland, a mythical place, and uses great graphics to unfold the story in which you are participating. Although, overall, Heartland is a good, solid game, there are parts that are excellent — the graphics are one example.

The story of Heartland is simple. Heartland was once a happy place until the evil Midan took over with his equally evil followers. They [illegible] and misery in the people. The history of Heartland contained in a book has been stolen and cast to the seven winds by Midan.

You must find the last six pages of the history as well as the book itself and destroy six dark pages created by Midan. If these six dark pages are not destroyed, they will have a backlash on Heartland. Your goal is a challenge that should keep you occupied for a while. It is not extremely tough to finish Heartland, but it is not very easy either.

The five lands that you may travel in are: the Gardens and the Conservatory, the Space Station, the Village, the Castle and the Mountains and the Wastelands and the Caves.

All have their own hidden dangers and things to find. Regardless of how you play Heartland, you must play it if you are a fan of simple graphic adventures that are object-oriented. Heartland continues in the manner of Druid and offers a good game to the adventurer.

POSTCARDS ****
ACTIVISION C64/128, AP, IBM, MAC

You have probably seen those programs that create banners and posters as well as those that make newspapers. Thanks to Activision, there is now a program that allows the owner to create postcards. Postcards contains everything you need to make up a postcard except for the stamp. Now you can make wacky postcards on your computer to send to people that you have not written to in a while.

The manual for Postcards contains instructions for designing a card from start to finish. The neat part of the program is the clip art and backdrops for the postcard pictures. From a moose to balloons to Tarzan, the clip art that comes with Postcards is amazingly appropriate for people with a penchant for craziness.

Postcards comes with enough blank postcards to keep you busy for a while and an order form for more, if you need them. The package also includes a glue strip to paste the computer printout onto the cards. Postcards prints color cards as well to provide the most for your money.

DELTA PATROL ****
C64/128, AP

Delta Patrol is a shoot-em-up that for some reason kept me at my computer, lost in my thoughts, for hours. Harking back to the days of arcade glory, Delta Patrol puts you in Delta Sector in order to destroy the aliens firing at you and to eventually kill their mothership. It sounds easy and boring, but is neither of these.

Delta Patrol is the third entry into Electronic Arts' Amazing Software line and deserves its membership, alongside Dan Dare and Sentinel. The game is graphically rich and leaves nothing to be desired in the realm of arcade challenges.

I would recommend this game to any of the arcade veterans from years ago looking for remnants of that era. Go out and kill those Space Dweasels, The Spinal Gyro and The Alien Mothership.

Main Lion roars

By THERESA JONES
Staff Reporter

A person should really enjoy his or her work, don't you agree? I must say that I do, even though reviewing a place like the Main Lion can hardly be called work.

Do not laugh, but the best word I can think of to describe it is "neat" — and I am not referring to the lack of dust on the bookshelves.

Speaking of bookshelves — that is no joke. Despite the Main Lion's claim to "Spirited Fun, Food and Drink," they also offer a free book exchange. Volumes old and new line an entire wall and then some, for the casual browser or serious searcher. You are welcome to take anything that appeals to you; all that is asked is that you bring a book back on your next visit.

Unusual attraction, you say? Well, it is just one of the many. On my first visit I expected the typical bar, offering a limited menu and maybe a small dance floor. What a surprise to walk in (through the back door) into a huge deli where you can find almost any kind of sandwich fixings, as well as barrels full of coffees and other assorted goodies sold "bulk" style.

Leaving the deli on my way to the bar/dancing/dining area, I first passed through the waiting area, fashioned like a barber shop of long ago, red leather chairs and all.

Interesting... At this point I got caught for coming in the back and had to wait in line outside. I was not alone, since many people seem to have already discovered this delight in its few months of operation.

I eventually got back inside, and was awfully glad I waited. The place was still packed, with all walks of life, as they say. Where else would you meet members of the Lower Merion Society for the Detection and Prosecution of Horse Thieves and the Recovery of Lost Horses? I kid you not — this is legit, too.

But wait — so far this is all about Saturday night and I am actually supposed to be reviewing the Sunday brunch.

Anyway, after closing down the place at 2 a.m., I was back 10 hours later to sample the brunch cuisine. My friend and I were lucky enough to get seats along the bookshelves and found some interesting oldies.

Our server soon came with orange juice and explained the brunch system, an all-you-can-eat for one inclusive price ($9.95). You get all the orange juice you want and trips to both hot and cold buffets.

Eggs, omelettes, pancakes and Belgian waffles are cooked to order. The hot buffet included various meats, blintzes and an omelette my friend says is a must to try. On the cold side are muffins, croissants, mini-bagels, fresh fruits and salads. I should not leave out the complementary mimosa. You would have to be awfully picky not to find something appealing at this brunch.

That seems to go for the Main Lion in general. The atmosphere is best described as friendly and fun. There really is something for everyone. The lunch and dinner menus are extensive and appealing, though a bit on the expensive side.

The people who get the munchies late at night will be happy to know the grill and deli are open essentially until closing.

For the seafood lover there is the raw bar and grill, behind the bar (which also caters to all tastes; I am sure). At 10 p.m. the DJ/VJ kicks into action. Sunday nights you can enjoy dinner and dancing big band style.

Have I left anything out? I certainly have, but you have simply got to go experience the Main Lion yourself in all its diversity.

A word of warning to those of you who have not yet reached the magic age of 21 — I was duly informed by the management that they are tough at the door. But do not despair! You can take advantage of the amusements or the cuisine in the bar and dining area until 9:30 p.m., and the deli is always open to you. Just remember, good things come to those who wait.

Everything I ate — and I did get my money's worth — was delicious. I was disappointed to see on the bill that coffee and tea are extras, but I guess that is typical. I will say that this is the only thing typical about the Main Lion.

To make this find a regular dining hot spot would do a little too much damage to my bank account, but as for a night spot ... that has definite possibilities.

Located on Lancaster Avenue in Strafford, and open since March, the Main Lion is sure to enjoy great success, while offering its patrons just what it promises: spirited fun, food and drink, with an emphasis on spirited ... no, make that fun ... or maybe ... oh heck! It is simply a great place! Go see for yourself.

It's Time To Travel with Swing Out Sister

By PHIL KOUSOUBRIS
Staff Reporter

It's Time To Travel
Swing out Sister
Polygram Records

Swingout Sister is a little-known group which has been getting a lot of airplay on the pop stations lately — which is never good for any group. This band is a trio: Corinne Drewery as lead vocalist and glamorous '20s flapper, Andy Connell on keyboards and Martin Jackson with an assortment of percussion instruments.

Enough with introductions, what this article should answer is the question, "Are they any good?" I don't know about the LP version, but Swingout Sister's It's Time to Travel sounds ritzy on compact disc (CD). The CD version comes with four extra cuts, all of which are re-mixes. Do not fret — the mixes are more of a good thing.

To convey some feeling for this new band, this author will try to use some popular groups for comparison. "Breakout," if you have not heard it yet, sounds like the faded Regina combined with Human League, but much more refined. Swingout Sister seems to value a strong horn and synthesizer section, which is to the band's credit. Really now, how many bands use trumpet?

The next possible release is "Twilight World," whose re-mix is more improvisational and reminds one of that '40s-styled movie "Blade Runner." Swingout Sister has all the musical elements of the old big bands: trumpet, strings, bouncy bass and jazzy percussions. The difference is that they are electronic.

This author hates sequentially listing songs, but must add that "After Hours" is one of the most relaxing songs he has heard in a while. "Daytime surrenders/ and the shadows fall/ your cigarette wind burns/ you spend the night alone/ with no one at all." Sound depressing? It is actually relaxing. I think I am crazy.

Skipping from "Blue Mood's" Sade-like flow of words to a moving rendition of that '60s tune "Surrender," Drewery, nicknamed the "alto flute" by the band, shows off a refreshing high range and a sultry low and mid-range. "Surrender" is one of those songs which you can not remove from your head: "Still waiting for love to take revenge/ for that sweet surrender."

"Surrender's" re-mix simply adores the CD format with an introduction full of Connell's most innovative synthesizer work. It is poppy, but so what. "Fooled by Your Smile" is also a contender for a new release — it is upbeat — but a little cliche: "Hide your face to save your shame/ yourself to blame."

An argument against Swingout Sister's merits would be their sometimes monotonous lyrics. Granted, this band lacks a Bono from U2, but songs like "Communion" throw a wrench into their pop image. This reviewer is still trying to configure the religious images this song conveys to the "broken dreams" of our new age's interpersonal relationships.

"Tears and laughter/ share your fear to ease the pain ... where life's a crime/ Our time has come. Images of confessions, the "lost tradition" and other religious references are intriguing. Is this band spiritual? Does it really matter? Either way, this group has a strange 'deja vu' about them.

"It's Not Enough" rebounds with a sassafrass bass that is bouncy and very easy to dance to. The Hilton Touche would play this song to death. Connell always seems to surprise the listener with simple accompaniments that seem just a little out of tune, but not enough for cacophony.

"Breakout's" re-mix is very drawn out, redeemed only by the great synth bars, and a smooth, spanish-guitar sounding accompaniment near the end. Let us just hope that Eagle 106 never gets a hold of these mixes and extends them to several days length for the same bop — ugh.

Finally, the one song so far omitted (anyone? anyone?), simply titled, "Theme (from It's Better to Travel)," leaves you wondering if there was a movie version to Swingout Sister. This theme is reminiscent of New Age's "Kitaro" and "Time Bandits" (the movie) — all rolled into one ... bizarre.

The last two cuts are the mixes of "Twilight Zone," with a really wacked-out, female Japanese voice popping in one-liners, and "Communion." With this group, CD is the best format if you need continuous, hip-cosmopolite background music for cocktails or a late dinner.

For those music listeners who think, like Swingout Sister, that New Age should have gone back to its jazzy precursors, It's Time To Travel comes well recommended.

"Swingout Sister — they went out as moon dreams and came back stars" is a phrase this band could live up to.

Stephen King movie stars Schwarzenegger

By ALLEN AMBROSINO
Assistant Entertainment Editor

"The Running Man" directed by Paul Michael Glaser
Tri-Star Pictures
* * * *

In the year 2017, the American economy had collapsed and television gained a great deal of control over the general public. Art and music were strictly censored and violent game shows such as "Climbing For Dollars" and "The Hate Boat" received high ratings.

However, the most popular show by far was "The Running Man." It was hosted by producer, Damien Killian (Richard "Family Feud" Dawson). Criminals, such as rapists and bank robbers, were chosen to be contestants and were sent out to play the game.

The contestants were allowed to move around within a 400 block radius and given three hours in which to travel through all four of the zones. If successful, the person was set free and allowed to go anywhere in the world.

However, throughout the contest, hunters were sent into the maze to try to kill the contestants.

Ben Richards (Arnold Schwarzenegger) is a police officer who refuses to kill unarmed civilians, and is therefore sent to the Wilshire Detention Zone.

The government took the situation, and made it seem as though Richards killed the civilians on his own, but in reality, it was not his fault.

Eighteen months after his imprisonment, Richards stages a fake fight with a fellow prisoner named Laughlin (Yaphet Kotto) in order to escape. The security system is deactivated by Weiss, a friend of Laughlin's, and they all escape after a lengthy battle with the guards.

Richards goes back to his brother's apartment, but he discovers that a girl (Maria Conchita Alonso) has moved in, and his brother has been removed by the government. She recognizes him and tries to escape, but he ties her up and threatens her life.

"The Running Man" was made into a movie from a Stephen King novel that he wrote under the name of Richard Bachman.

Richards shows his sense of humor when he tries to convince her to take him to Honolulu. While holding her out the window, he asks her to help him and says "please," just like a gentleman.

However, when they get to the airport, the girl reveals his true identity and he is captured by the police. Because of his popularity (known as the Butcher of Bakersfield), Killian wanted him to appear on his show in order to increase its ratings. He blackmails Richards by threatening the lives of both Laughlin and Weiss.

Before being sent into the maze, Richards turns to Killian and tells him, "I'll be back," just like he did to the terrorists in the movie "Commando."

His journey was action-packed as he and both of his friends battled hunters named Sub-Zero, Buzzsaw, Dynamo, Fireball and Captain Freedom.

Some of the hunters are athletic celebrities such as Fireball (ex-football player Jim Brown) and Captain Freedom (wrestler and announcer Jesse "the body" Ventura). Richards also receives a surprise visitor to help him during the most difficult part of the maze.

The movie is extremely predictable and I am sure that most of you can figure out the ending. However, it was also full of action, and the secret of its success is the tongue-in-cheek approach of Schwarzenegger.

It was very shocking to see almost everyone in the world, rich and poor alike, betting on which hunter would kill Richards first. They were all blood-thirsty and could not wait to see him die a violent, bloody death.

As a matter of fact, the studio

Chain Letter
Ruby Jensen
Kensington Publishers

Have you ever received a mysterious chain letter in the mail and thrown it away without a second thought? If so, Ruby Jean Jensen's latest novel, Chain Letter, will leave you wondering whether you made the correct decision.

The story begins when a young boy visits his aging grandmother at the Hawthorn Hill Nursing Home. He wanders off towards the west wing, where the criminally insane are located, and is handed a letter, etched in black, by one of the inmates.

The boy is suddenly taken over by an evil force and begins to run, as if for his life. As a result, he falls down the stairs to the cellar and dies instantly. The evil that the letter possessed had caused his demise.

Many years later, two children named Brian and Abby stumble upon the nursing home while looking for Brian's dog. The home has been closed for several years and is in extremely poor condition.

After a long search, they both realize that the dog is probably somewhere in the nursing home, so they go to look inside. This turns out to be a big mistake as they discover the chain letter.

A moment later, an old man appears out of the darkness and tells them to come nearer. When they both run away at full speed, the man simply says "You'll be back children. I'll be waiting."

Abby takes the chain letter back to her house and reads it over and over as Brian and his family look for the dog with no success. Later that night, a friend of Brian's named Shelly spots the dog by her house and goes over to Brian's house immediately. Both Shelly and Brian go to the nursing home and follow the dog into one of its rooms. They separate for a moment and as a result, Shelly disappears and is nowhere to be found.

Brian goes back home and has a horrible dream about the nursing home. At the same time, Abby is having the same type of dream and both of them feel the urge to go back.

They both begin to take the letter very seriously and agree to follow its instructions. It says to send a copy of the letter to a close friend, so they send it to Chuck Barnes, a boyfriend of Abby's sister. This is when the horror show really begins, and people become possessed by the letter.

The best thing about the novel Chain Letter is that you never really know what is going to happen. The ending of the book will take you by surprise in many different ways and this builds the suspense.

However, the book is too long and this takes away from its effectiveness. If it was 50 pages shorter, Chain Letter would have been a very good novel. As it is right now, it was enjoyable, but it is not a novel that you would want to go out of your way to read.

Shelly Long says 'Hello Again' in new movie

By ELANA ROSE STARR

"Hello Again"
directed by Frank Perry

Since the launching of Disney's Touchstone Studios with the hit film "Splash" a few years ago, they have produced a string of intelligent comedies, including "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," "Ruthless People," and "Tin Men." You can add their latest effort, "Hello Again," to the list.

This engaging comedy centers on a complacent suburban housewife, Lucy Chadman, who chokes to death on a South Korean chicken ball. One year later, her spiritualist sister invokes a spell and resurrects her. However, Lucy cannot simply resume her placid life where it left off 12 months earlier.

Numerous changes have occurred: her plastic surgeon husband has sold the family home and remarried, her teenaged son has become independent and her "indispensible" volunteer work at a day-care center has been taken over by someone else. Lucy must find the determination to make a new life for herself.

As the klutzy but endearing Lucy, Shelly Long shines. Long has shown fine comic mettle in her previous work, both on television, as pseudo-intellectual barmaid Diane Chambers on "Cheers," and in films "The Money Pit" and "Outrageous Fortune."

But in this role, written expressly for Long, she is allowed to indulge in plenty of slapstick, including male impersonation (as she did in "Outrageous Fortune") and a lot of pratfalls. Among her contemporaries, only Dudley Moore and Steve Martin have shown such a talent for physical comedy.

Long is aided by the adept supporting cast. Judith Ivey, who played the droll artist/confidante in "Compromising Positions," is wonderful as the zany sister.

Corbin Bernsen, the womanizing divorce lawyer on "L.A. Law," gets a chance to expand on that role here, playing Lucy's social-climbing husband.

Newcomer Sela Ward, as Lucy's duplicitous best friend, appropriately drips with glamor. Though stunningly beautiful, with cheekbones to rival Marlene Dietrich's, Ward is not afraid to make herself look silly.

The snappy script was written by author Susan Isaacs, whose only other screenplay was "Compromising Positions," an adaptation of her own novel. Like "Positions," the script for "Hello Again" is rather sophisticated and aimed at adult audiences. The film is rated PG, so people of almost all ages can enjoy it.

'Hope and Glory' interlaces bleak and blithe

By CHRISTINE A. WNUK

"Hope and Glory" directed by John Boorman
Columbia Pictures

Unlike most recent American films, "Fatal Attraction" for example, which follow the format of exposition, crisis and resolution, British releases over the past 18 months ("A Room With A View," "Wish You Were Here") have been utilizing another technique to capture audience attention. Through this technique, the viewer becomes intimately involved with the characters as they go about their daily lives.

In "Hope and Glory," writer, director and producer John Boorman introduces us to his own family and childhood via the Rohan's, a family living in London at the time of the blitz.

The Rohan children do not kiss their father as he goes off to work, they kiss him good-bye as he goes off to war. They do not learn their multiplication tables at the kitchen table with their parents, they recite them while wearing gas masks in the air raid shelter at school.

Bill Rohan, (Sebastian Rice Edwards) the 7-year-old protagonist, does not have nightmares about monsters; he envisions himself wandering along around a battlefield and finding his father's and uncle's bodies amongst the corpses.

However, not all of Boorman's vignettes are tinged with death. Many scenes focus on the lighter side of wartime. We see a German soldier parachute into a garden patch after his plane is shot down.

The townspeople gather to gawk as the soldier regards them blankly. Finally, a local merchant assumes the role of military policeman. He removes the soldier by holding his arm and steering him gingerly out of the garden, pointing out various vegetables in the victory garden as they go.

In contrast to the humorous, awkward side of human beings, we also flinch at the cruel, raw angle of them, especially exemplified in the voices of the children. After a particularly brutal night of bombing, the children pour into the streets to find one of their friends standing forlornly in a pile of rubble which, 12 hours earlier, was her home.

One of the little boys calls in a harsh, throaty voice, loud enough for all the neighbors to hear, "Didja hear? Didja hear? Pauline's mom got killed last night. Don't believe me? Go ask her!" And, at his prompting, several children do.

Perhaps Boorman should be commended most for his interlacing of the bleak and the blithe. One morning the children arrive at school only to find it in ruins, the result of the latest bombings.

As children scamper about the schoolyard, tossing their papers in joy and pelting the faculty with their bookstraps, one child pauses, looks up to the heavens and thanks not God for answering his most ardent and childish prayer, but Hitler. It was quite odd to hear Hitler's name associated with words of praise.

For all his noteworthy memories, Boorman's work is notably weak on several accounts. Bill Rohan's cheeky 15-year-old sister, Dawn (Sammi Davis), becomes entangled in one of the oldest and most tedious storylines around — young girl meets soldier. Prompted by troubled times, she matures beyond her tender years, falls madly in love and ends up pregnant.

What is most disappointing about the character of Dawn is that her non-conforming, petulant personality had already been seen by movie goers in the character of Linda in "Wish You Were Here," a British film released earlier this year. Seeing this impetuous adolescent prototype twice in two months is too much of a good thing.

The second major flaw of this film is the sporadic use of narrative. In the film, "Stand By Me," the protagonist began and completed the story and supplemented the flashbacks with voice overs throughout, providing continuity in the storyline.

"Hope and Glory" features a brief narrative in the beginning and at the end. Thus "voice from nowhere" made me wonder if this device was an afterthought, for it served to further fragment a movie that was suffering from lack of unity in the first place.

While Boorman beautifully presents us with vignettes from his childhood, he misses the mark in linking them into a cohesive piece of cinematography in this bittersweet ode to childhood.

Rainmakers' album attempts to chart new ground

Tornado
Rainmakers
* * * *

The Rainmakers debut album last year took a lot of people by surprise. Even though the Missouri foursome operated out of the back-to-basics style common to many other new bands, they managed to distance themselves from the rest of the pack.

The obvious song writing abilities and thought provoking lyrics of leader Bob Walkenhorst combined with inspired performances and a great production job served to make the album one of the year's most impressive debuts, drawing raves from Billboard, Newsweek, and Rolling Stone.

Critical success though, do not always yield popular acceptance and the album did not do as well as expected.

The problem facing this band, along with most of today's newer bands, is a remarkable lack of support from rock radio.

Given the current trend towards "classic" rock, bands that deserve airplay are not getting it, consequently their outlet becomes college radio-implying unacceptability into the mainstream.

Once dubbed a "college" band, they are faced with a tougher road to mainstream acceptance. Bands such as R.E.M. and the Cure are recent examples of bands which have broken big out of this circuit, but they are the exeption rather than the rule. In light of this, the Rainmakers have done a little rethinking of their approach and that brings us to Tornado, their second album.

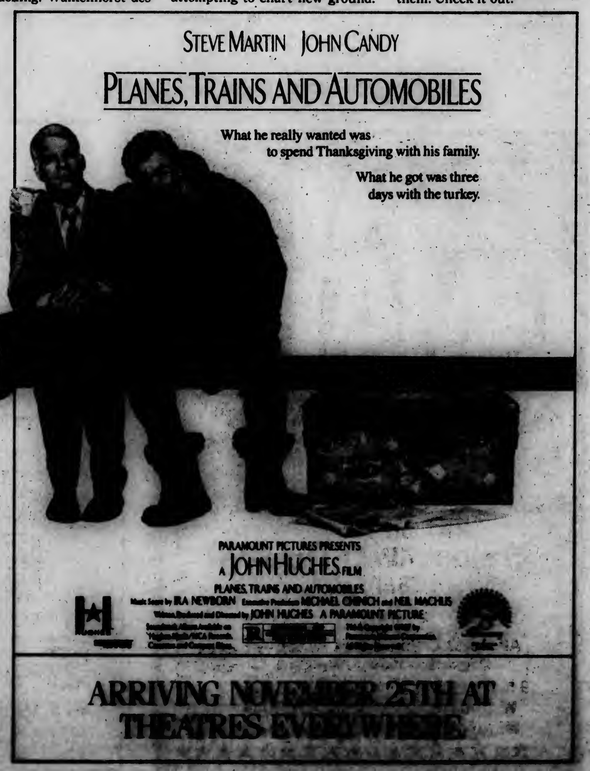
As the debut, Tornado was produced by Terry Manning, whose experience with ZZ Top, George Thorogood and Jason and the Scorchers suits the bands post-Creedence swamp-rock style.

The lead off track, "Snakedance" also happens to be the first single from the record. Immediately apparent is that Manning has beefed up the band's sound, toughening up the guitars and dropping in keyboards and horns more frequently than on the debut.

"Snakedance" is reminiscent of "Let My People Go-Go," the excellent single from the first record with its gang chorus and punchy horn fills. "Tornado of Love" follows, keeping the tempo up as Walkenhorst spins a tale of nuclear aftermath.

"The Wages of Sin" is a perfect example of what makes the Rainmakers so endearing. Over a grunge blues riff set to a sort of shuffle beat, Walkenhorst gives us some insights on life, "The wages of sin, the reward of fear, is worrying and fretting every second of the year, the Church and the State, your God and country-kind, one gets your body, the other gets your mind."

"No Romance" evidences how much the band has grown, both stylistically and musically. Accompanied by a haunting melody line and a "trapped" style organ backing. Walkenhorst described the futility and desperation of love and advises against becoming too immersed in the tangled web of love's emotions. This song represents a major artistic leap for the band and deserves to be a hit.



The rest of the album basically follows the same down-home country rock style that the band executes so well. The lyrics, interesting as ever, range from societal critiques ("Rainmaker," "Small Circles"), to bizarre tales ("Lakeview Man"), to actual optimistic forays ("Talk With My Hands," "The Other Side of the World"), an area previously avoided by the band.

Overall, Tornado compares favorably to the Rainmakers debut. While the first album had a sort of innocent charm Tornado shows a more mature band attempting to chart new ground. The increased attention to detail shows the desire for widespread acceptance and the Rainmakers deserve it.

The Rainmakers current situation parallels that of Lone Justice last year. After releasing a critically lauded, semi-commercially successful debut, the band found itself artistically, while also trying to sell some records. Lone Justice's Shelter album, despite being a quality record, came off sounding a little forced.

With the Rainmakers, the unbridled enthusiasm of the first record is not as readily apparent on Tornado, but that is usually the price paid for a smoother, more commercially viable sound. Besides that, with Tornado, the Rainmakers have remained true to their roots while building on them. Check it out.

On the scene . . . Entertainment tidbits

By STEPHEN POWERS
Staff Reporter

Donna Rice, the woman who helped bring down Gary Hart's presidential campaign, will not be making the move to acting any time soon. Last week, ABC scrapped plans to make a television movie based on her experience with Hart.

The official reason for the cancellation of the movie is "creative differences," but Rice allegedly wanted assurances from ABC that certain details of her relationship with Hart would not be revealed. ABC refused, and the deal was called off. Rice currently appears in commercials for No Excuses denim jeans.

Instead of Rice and Hart, one of the other scandals from the past year will surface on television. NBC has entered into an agreement with ousted PTL [Praise the Lord] evangelists Jim and Tammy Bakker, and plans to produce a movie based on their story, tentatively titled "Fallen From Grace."

No air date has been set, and it has not been revealed whether or not the Bakkers will play themselves. The Bakkers have already proven their ability to draw an audience — their appearances on ABC's "Nightline" helped that news program garner some of its highest ratings ever.

Another big draw for television has been remakes and revivals of vintage television programs. We have already had "The New Gidget," "The New Monkees," "The New Leave It To Beaver" and the new "Star Trek."

Now get ready for a new version of the Munsters, titled "The Munsters Today." MCA plans to get the series, starring a new cast of virtual unknowns, on the air by next fall. In the new show, the Munster family has not aged, because they have been asleep since 1966, when the last show aired. (I haven't heard an explanation that good since "It was all a dream.")

On the movie scene, the hot news is sequels, sequels and more sequels. In "Beverly Hills Cop III," Eddie Murphy and partners Judge Reinhold and John Ashton will hit the road for a presently undecided foreign country. The idea is to take the characters all over the world in subsequent sequels, a la James Bond.

Dudley Moore, Liza Minelli and Sir John Gielgud have all been signed to make "Arthur on the Rocks," the sequel to the 1981 hit "Arthur." "L.A. Law" 's Jill Eikenberry, who played Moore's fiancee in the first film, declined to reprise her role.

Plans are also underway for "Jagged Edge II," which will probably begin production next summer. Glenn Close and Robert Loggia will return as the crusading district attorney and her private investigator. Jeff Bridges, whose character was killed off in the original, will not appear in the film.

CASTING CALLS: A couple of movies are coming up for Burt Reynolds. Reynolds, whose latest movies have been somewhat less than resounding successes at the box office, will star with Kathleen Turner in "Switching Channels," and in "Smoke," a murder mystery.

Bruce Willis' next movie will be a remake of the Humphrey Bogart classic "In a Lonely Place," about a Hollywood screenwriter who falls in love.

John Cusack ("The Sure Thing") will star in "Tapeheads," a comedy about the music industry.

Michael J. Fox is a proofreader working for a yuppie magazine in "Bright Lights, Big City," based on the Jay McInerney novel. Moreover, Fox's "Family Ties" sister, Justine Bateman, plays a rock singer in "Sweet Little Rock 'n' Roller," which will be filmed on location here in Philadelphia.

SHORT TAKES: Now that "Moonlightings' " Maddie Hayes is pregnant, a whole new 100-piece maternity wardrobe has been designed for her. Funny thing is, Cybill Shepherd, who plays Maddie, has already had her real-life babies and will have to wear padding for the part.

If you feel like seeing a good movie, check out "Tin Men," playing tonight at Connelly Center Cinema. Danny DeVito and Richard Dreyfuss star in this first-rate comedy.

The Connelly Center films may soon be the only ones you can afford to see. Movie houses in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles have raised their ticket prices to $7 each, and other theaters across the nation are expected to follow suit.

"Miami Vice" fans will want to tune in tonight to see Don Johnson get married, well, sort of. Singer Sheena Easton plays a witness in a music payola trial who is protected by Johnson's character, Sonny Crockett. The two fall in love and eventually wed, but do not look for marital bliss for the couple — Easton is signed to appear in only four episodes.

INXS is getting better with every album

By DINA INNELLA

Kick
INXS
Atlantic Records
* * * *

INXS' new album Kick has just that, kick, and lots of it. Kick is thoroughly INXS and totally up to par with the rest of their albums, though much more with the mainstream. Compared with their hit single "What you Need," many of the songs are just as good or better. Kick is a highly dance oriented album with some excellent and meaningful lyrics.

Members of this Australian based band include Michael Hutchence on lead vocals, Andrew Farriss on keyboards and guitar, Kirk Pengilly on guitar and saxophone, Tim Farriss on guitar and synthesizer, John Farriss on drums and Garry Gary Beers on bass.

The album kicks off the first side with "Guns in the Sky," a protest song against most likely Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) plan. The song shows how we have a choice to "own the future" and make "guns in the sky" an unreality. This leads into two more upbeat, danceable tunes "New Sensation" and "Devil Inside."

"Need You Tonight" is a different type of song, though still "dancable." It is a chic and thrilling song. Continuing with that same beat, "Need You Tonight," leads into a new and innovative song, "Mediate." This song is an almost spoken conglomeration of thought provoking ". ate" words or phrases. For example the first line of the song is "Hallucinate, dissegregate, mediate, alleviate, try not to hate . . . "

Diversified lyrics are strong points within the album, along with their fantastic instrumentals. INXS is getting better with each album that they put out.

There are two songs, one on each side, that resemble ballads on Kick. They resemble ballads, because there is a steady beat throughout each song. They include: "Loved One" and "Never Tear Us Apart," which are both love songs.

One of the best songs on the album is "Mystify," which is on the second side. "Mystify" gets my vote for most likely to make it to the top 40.

Also worth noting on the second side is the title track, "Kick" which claims that "Sometimes you kick, sometimes you get kicked."

"Calling All Nations" is a sassy song about working hard. It is a command to "call all nations" together to "come on down to the party" and "you've got to spend some time and devote it to you."

"Tiny Daggers," the next song, ends the album with the kick that started off the album.

Diversified lyrics are strong points within the album, along with their fantastic instrumentals. INXS is getting better with each album that they put out. Kick is a 40-minute album with a total of 12 songs. There are some original ideas which prevail throughout. There is no "worst" song or fillers on this album. It is a good, snappy and a well put together album.

The sound and Hutchence's voice ring with clarity, freshness and excitement. Kick, however, is not soothing, but the total opposite. Be warned it is not to be played when you have a headache — one steady beat is enough.

It should be blasted, though, on a feel-good-day when it can be enjoyed.

INXS continued with their fine tradition of good albums, and the album is well worth the cost. I recommend Kick highly.

There is no point in novel by young writer

The Rules Of Attraction
by Bret Easton Ellis
Simon and Schuster

Bret Easton Ellis is the creator of the highly publicized book Less Than Zero. As a 20-year-old college student at Bennington College, a small expensive school for the privileged, Ellis became a published author with this shocking novel about the reckless lives of L.A. youths.

These oversexed, drugged-out kids intrigued director and producer Sydney Pollock, and Ellis' first book, Less Than Zero became a movie. The slick, glossy lifestyles of these rebellious rich characters will surely keep audiences entertained.

The Rules of Attraction, written two years after Ellis' first book, mirrors the three main elements found in Less Than Zero, which are sex (with anyone male or female), drugs (and a lot of them) and rock n' roll. His candid, down to earth style realistically portrays the characters, yet they do the same thing every day, and the book repeats itself.

I drowned in the quick two-word sentences. The most exciting thing in this book was turning the page, because I came closer to finishing. The center point of this novel is a college much like Bennington, a small liberal arts school full of children from wealthy families.

Sean Bateman, an ambivalent and confused youth; Paul Denton, a bisexual wimp and Lauren, a girl who changes her major every time she brushes her hair, all become involved in a bizarre love triangle.

This book sees the disappearance of romance in the complacent '80s. A poignant problem for many, but this book offers no hope for anyone.

When I finished reading I asked myself, "What is the point?" No one gained or learned anything in this novel, and it left me yearning for something more.

The sensitivity of The Rules of Attraction is lost in armies of drugs and innane drunkeness which constantly deteriorate the characters emotionally, and have already completely destroyed most of their families. "When the going gets tough, the tough go drinking."

When Ellis is asked what this book is about he placidly responds, "Well, what was The Rules of Attraction about? I'm ... tongue tied."

I am not surprised. The writing parallels the exquisite contributers to the powerful Penthouse Forum. The monotony of the lifestyles lulled me to sleep, (and I had nightmares that this book never finished and I had to keep reading).

Ellis does display some humor. Marc, a rich junkie, does his thesis on the Grateful Dead, and Bateman tells Marc that he is "a financial aid student," something most Villanovans can identify with. However the students in Ellis' imaginative college are hard to relate to, at least I hope so.

No one in the novel takes school or their lives seriously, and they essentially become non-persons. Suicide is attempted casually — because someone will be forced to deal with a reality they cannot handle while sober. Like robots they apathetically hang themselves, or slash their wrists; all human reasoning has vanished.

If Ellis tries to milk more novals from emotionless, and empty lives using his no-frills pros, he will be hanging around the literary scene about as long as Paul McFadden stays with the Philadelphia Eagles.

A good description of the wanton Bateman comes from his brother. While they are in the hospital visiting their ailing father, the brother is hoping a shred of reality will break through to that wasted, mindless head bobbing in front of me."

The Rules of Attraction is based on the thinking of these mindless, bobbing heads and their expectations. The Kaleidoscopic view through the diaries presents unique points-of-view where misinterpreted signals and seering frustration are seen first hand.

Giving credit where credit is due, Ellis has been called one of "New York's brightest literary young" and "original, abundantly talented." I agree, but his style leaves this book flat; nothing happens. The open ending of this novel is wide enough for a Mack truck. I guess this means their lives stay the same, but please not another book about them!

Less Than Zero will be a big box office winner solely because of the incredible shock it has sent into the public.Ellis will receive acclaim for being the mastermind behind the movie, but unless he improves the languid body of his books, he will end up like all the characters in his books — in hiatus.

So, if you happen to see *The Rules of Attraction*on the bookstore shelves saying, "Buy me, buy me!" take the advice of First Lady Nancy Reagan and just say no.

audience actually helped Killian pick which hunter to send out to destroy Richards. These people received various prizes such as The "Running Man" board game which is a home version of the television program. Killian used the power that the television gave him in order to make the viewing audience look at him with a great deal of respect and even God-like reverence. At the end of the movie, he discovers that the power that he has can also be taken away without warning.

"The Running Man" was made into a movie from a Stephen King novel which was written under the name of Richard Bachman.

Even though the novel and the movie were very different, both of them were impressive. The acting of Schwarzenegger helped to make the movie funny and exciting. He is one of the few actors that has the talent to combine humor with violence effectively.

Schwarzenegger and King are a perfect match and have teamed up to produce one of the best movies of 1987.

That Milk Crate You "Borrowed" Could Cost You $300 Or 90 Days In Jail.

Sorry, you'll have to make new arrangements for your books, albums, plants, etc. If you're using company-owned milk crates, that is.

A new Pennsylvania Law (Act 37, Laws of Pennsylvania, 1987) makes it illegal to possess store- or dairy-owned milk crates.

Violators of this law face a $300 fine or a 90-day jail sentence. Not to mention the embarrassment and a possible criminal record.

But don't panic. You have until December 6, 1987, to return them without penalty to the dairy or nearest store.

The misuse or loss of milk crates costs PA's dealers millions of dollars each year. A cost regained only by raising milk prices.

Women runners lose bid

By MICHAEL E. JONES
Staff Reporter

As the saying goes, some things just were not meant to be. The women's cross country team wrapped up one of its most successful seasons in team history, yet fell short of advancing to the NCAA Championships as a team by a mere 10 points.

The Wildcats, who had run consistently as a team all season, were edged out by Penn State in the NCAA Region II Championship Nov. 14 at Lehigh.

In a winner takes all situation, Penn State advanced to the NCAAs, while the Wildcats, despite their unbeaten season and previous No. 6 ranking, will be represented by juniors Vicky Huber and Kathy Franey, and will not participate in NCAA team competition.

Penn State's effort broke them into the top 20, while Villanova fell out of the rankings altogether. Coach Marty Stern explained, "We didn't quite run up to our capabilities, and because we were beaten by Penn State, an unranked team, not only do we get dropped from the top 20, but we fail to advance to the NCAAs as well."

Villanova was also beaten by Yale University and Providence College, two other top 20 teams in a different region. Earlier in the season the Wildcats defeated both Yale and Penn State in the Paul Short Invitational, as well as Providence in the Big East Championships.

This alone should have been sufficient criteria for the Wildcats to be one of the four "wildcard" teams which the NCAA committee selects to advance to the NCAAs despite 'Nova not being a regional winner.

Stern continued, "Aside from Texas, who we didn't even run against, no team has owned us. I feel we should have been one of the four teams selected."

Because of its loss at the hands of an unranked team, however, the Wildcats' stellar season was disregarded.

Although there is considerable disappointment on the part of the team, the performances of Huber and Franey cannot be overlooked. Huber was the outright winner, turning in a fine time over the 5000-meter course of 16:33, while Franey finished eighth overall with a 17:17.

Both runners advance to the NCAAs Nov. 23 in Richmond, Va., and will be looking to place high up in the standings.

Other Wildcat finishers included junior Jenny Brekhus, who took 26th place overall with a 17:48, and fellow junior Celeste Halliday, who finished 50th in 18:17. Junior Michele DiMuro finished with a 18:33 for 70th place, freshman Carol Haux a 18:41 for 85th place and senior Jenny Rahn a 19:15 for 137th place.

Stern commented, "I was very happy with the season. It was a great year. Everyone did a fine job for us. Vicky and Kathy have ran exceptionally well, and should both do well in the NCAAs."

While the Wildcats appear to have fallen victims to the politics of the system, Stern remains optimistic, and eagerly awaits the indoor and outdoor season, where the 'Cats promise to be a major threat.

Women's basketball falls

By JIM BOWMAN
Assistant Sports Editor

After a 1986-87 season that included such feats as Big East regular season and tournament champions, Big Five co-champions and NCAA second round participants, the Villanova women's basketball team must now pick up the pieces and start over.

Playing for the first time without graduated seniors Shelly Pennefather, Lynn Tighe and Karen Hargadon, the lady hoopsters dropped an exhibition decision 71-51 to the Canadian National Team Nov. 15, at the du Pont Pavilion.

Senior second-team All-Big East forward Lisa Angelotti, who will be carrying an increased share of the scoring duties this season, led the young Lady 'Cats with 16 points and six assists.

Junior center Carole Oaten grabbed six boards and chipped in nine points for Villanova. In the backcourt, sophomore Helen Koskinen registered two steals, six assists and six points.

The Canadians outscored Villanova by 10 each half and easily controlled the game with decisive advantages in rebounding (32-21), field goal percentage (52.7-46.9) and blocked shots (4-0).

Tenth year Head Coach Harry Perretta explained, "We need leadership and experience on the court. This season will be a learning process for everyone, but that's the nature of college basketball.

"We'll play more people than in the past because everyone will be in the position of having no experience."

The Villanova women officially open their season Dec. 1 at the University of Pennsylvania.

V.U. Hockey falls to 3-5

By JOHN F. SWIFT
Staff Reporter

Despite dropping two games to a tough St. Michael's squad last weekend, the Villanova ice hockey team must be considered a legitimate contender for a playoff berth in the ECAC South Conference playoffs at season's end.

Entering the third period of the Nov. 14 game, the Ice 'Cats and St. Michael's were tied at 1-1 in what had clearly been a defensive struggle. In the third period, the visiting team from St. Michael's exploded for three unanswered goals to defeat the Wildcats 4-1 in the opener of this two-game series at the Haverford Skatium.

Junior goalie Mitch Doren continued his sharp play in the net which has been his trademark this season. Doren recorded a remarkable 41 saves in this tough defeat.

In contrast to the Nov. 14 game, which was a showcase of defensive hockey, the Nov. 15 game was an exciting, wide-open scoring affair.

Trailing 8-5, the resurgent Ice 'Cats did not fold and answered with two goals of their own to close the deficit to 8-7. But, as in the first game, the Purple Knights pulled away late and handed the Ice 'Cats a 10-7 loss.

"Both losses can be attributed to mental breakdowns because of the fact that we're a young team," said sophomore center Rob Rosone.

"We just need to become more familiar with each other's styles. I think we have an excellent chance of making the playoffs because we have a great team attitude and a lot of talent," he added.

The two losses dropped Villanova's record to 3-5 overall and 2-3 in the ECAC South Conference.

Wrestlers take SUNY

The Villanova men's wrestling team began their season Nov. 14 with an impressive showing at the SUNY tournament in Binghamton, N.Y. The Wildcats, who swept through the competition, finished in first place with a team total of 102.5 points — well ahead of second place Binghamton (74.75 points).

The 'Cats had four wrestlers finish as champions in their weight class and eight more finished either second or third. Freshmen Greg Alfonsi (126 pounds) and Lyndon Campbell (134 pounds) were first-place champions in their brackets, as were Mike Dicandilo (158 pounds) and Tom Rogers (167 pounds).

Alfonsi swept through his weight bracket and defeated teammate Tad Thormodsgaard in the final showdown.

Campbell, who was the highest recruited wrestler in the country in his weight bracket last year, also cruised through his bracket, defeating Pete Sullivan of Lycoming College in the championship bout by a score of 10-2.

Dicandilo also had the misfortune of defeating a teammate (5-2) in the final match as Mike Karmilowicz battled him tenaciously before settling for a respectable second-place finish.

Junior captain Tom Rogers was the fourth Wildcat wrestler to win his bracket as he destroyed his competition, winning by fall 4:05 into the championshp bout against Lee Cobb of Binghamton.

The staff is wary of the upcoming double dual match against LaSalle and Delaware Valley — two teams which beat them last year. "We have been going easy on them so far, but once the tough competition begins, the workload will definitely start picking up," noted Assistant Coach Dan Chaid.

'Nova, which is comprised of mostly freshmen and sophomores (only one senior) has a very young nucleus and a bright future. "The team has the potential to be one of the best in the nation. We only need a solid heavyweight — which we could have once the football season ends," said Chaid.

Assistant Coach Robert Calabrese agreed with Chaid adding, "For many of these youngsters, it was their first time on the college level and they were a bit nervous. Yet their intensity and talent showed. We should have an excellent season."

Ruggers drop Lafayette Leopards

By MEL ATKELIES
Staff Reporter

Imagine, in a few months you will be following a Villanova team that will fight for the national championship. Will you be able to get tickets? Will it be aired on national television? Are there going to be any tailgate parties? Before you find out the answers, you may want to know that the sport is rugby.

You will have to add names like Buck Reitmeyer, Ken Gimelli and Elmer Lesnevich to the list of Villanova sports legends.

If it does not sound possible, consider this: Villanova has won the championship of the E.P.R.U., arguably the toughest rugby union in the nation.

They have done it over nationally ranked foes from Princeton University, the University of Pennsylvania and the Naval Academy.

They have done it without a coach.

Not a single player had played rugby before coming here.

Had Lafayette College known this before the season began, they probably would have scheduled Bryn Mawr's rugby team instead of Villanova's.

The final score was 42-0 and that was before Villanova started drop-kicking. The Leopard's offense looked helpless as wave after wave of blue jerseys swarmed onto them once they got the ball. All too often they watched the blue wave flow straight into the try zone with the ball.

Just about the only thing Villanova did not get was a hat trick. However, Matt Lyons, Gimelli and Mike Burke all had two tries each.

If Villanova has already peaked, this is where it happened. In their fifth straight win, they had the biggest blowout of an opponent since 1984. But the team is not resting on their laurels just yet.

"If we're going to win in the spring [tournament] we're going to have to play even better than this," said wing Denis Graeber.

It is a wonder just how much better they can play, considering they are playing as good as they ever have. In the last five games, they have outscored their opponents 113-20, and that is including their two narrow playoff victories.

For the fifth consecutive week, the ruggers have not only beaten their opponent, but they have shut them out as well.

And no wonder why, the "Killer Bees" (V.U.'s B Team) have outscored their opponents 66-0 over the last four games before they beat Lafeyette 36-0.

They began scoring on the Leopards when the A-side left the field and only stopped when it got too dark out to see. Dan O'Mara, Marty Sambora, Chris Locks, Scott Lizsdat, Paul Larkin, Dave Walsh and John Leary were all able to score tries before the sun finally set.

nents from the North and amass a double-digit lead.

"We looked good," said Plansky, "a lot better than last year's exhibition (Villanova's narrow win over Australia). If we can control the tempo we will surprise a lot of people. I can definitely see the light at the end of the tunnel."

Pawprints

Sophomore center Tom Greis was perfect from the floor (4-4), scored 10 points and pulled down seven rebounds before fouling out with 3:50 left in the game.

The Canadian National Team is now 1-6 on their tour through the Big East. Their most recent loss came Nov. 16 against the Pittsburgh Panthers 86-80.

Sophomore Eric Leslie shared the lead for rebounds with Taylor and Plansky, grabbing eight boards from his shooting guard slot.

Villanova opens the regular season Nov. 27 against the University of Nebraska in the Hawaiian Airlines Maui Classic. V.U.'s home schedule starts Dec. 2 in the du Pont Pavillion versus the University of Pennsylvania.

Women swimmers bow to Boston U.

By KARLA BECKNER
Staff Reporter

The Villanova women's swim team opened their 1987-88 season on Nov. 14 with a 140-126 loss to Boston University.

Despite winning only four events, the Wildcats gave the Boston team stiff competition, drawing the meet down to the last event. Villanova led at several points during the meet and was only down 124-127 going into the final race.

"I was extremely pleased with the team's performance," said head coach Chuck Horton. "We only won four events and yet were able to stay that close to a team like Boston University."

Villanova swept the 100-yard freestyle with Beth Capobianco capturing first, Diane DeBobes second and Tina Louwers third. Other wins came in the 100-yard breaststroke with Sue Schroder placing first and the 500-yard freestyle with Capobianco recording another win.

Laurel Fournier set a new school record of 24.26 with her second-place finish in the 50-yard freestyle.

Horton noted that it was a great swim for this early in the season. The old record of 24.50 was set by Mayfield last season.

Fournier now holds the 50, 100 and 200-yard freestyle records at Villanova.

"It was a great effort by everyone, especially Dianne [DeBobes] and Laurel [Fournier]," Horton said. "There are still a few areas I'll work on a little more for this week."

The team will now face the University of Pittsburgh, last year's conference champions, tomorrow beginning at 1 p.m. in the du Pont pool.

Next Richmond put together a drive that got them down to the Villanova nine-yard line. On third down and goal, from that spot, Grier was sacked for a loss of seven yards. That brought up fourth and goal from the 16-yard line and with under a minute to play. Richmond was four points down, and it was obvious, they had to go for it all.

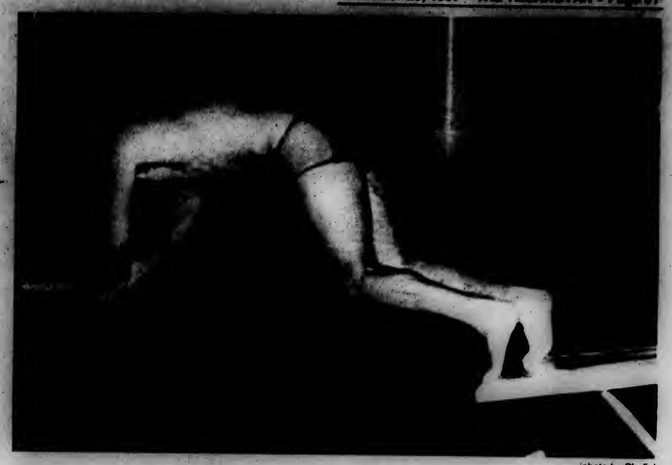
Talley opted to blitz and put the sophomore quarterback under even more pressure. The blitz was picked up beautifully by Greir who lofted one up for junior wide out Lance Shealy for the go-ahead score. With 00:23 seconds remaining Schulz attemped to get the 'Cats downfield with a few desperation passes, but they fell incomplete.

Later Talley commented on the winning play, "It was fourth down and 16 and we had just sacked the quarterback so we went with the blitz. Their quarterback threw a nice pass, both our defenders ran into each other and their kid made a nice catch."

The loss, especially the way they lost was disheartening. However, the 'Cats played well against this year's Yankee Conference champs. They proved they were a force to be reckoned with and could be very competitive at the IAA level.

Athlete of the Week

FARSHAD CHARMFOROOSH



This week Saco East Athlete of the Week is the Water Polo team's Farshad Charmforoosh.

Charmforoosh, a native of Iran, accounted for two goals and six steals in Villanova's 9-3 victory over the Duke Blue Devils last Saturday. Charmforoosh also added a kick out in the contest.

The next day Charmforoosh netted two goals in the Wildcat 10-7 win over highly touted John Hopkins. The win enabled the 'Cats to take third in the Eastern Championships.

Charmforoosh, a junior, was instrumental in 'Nova's 19-4 season and was recently named to the second team All-Eastern squad this past week.

The men's swim team continued their win streak by winning their third meet in a row against Boston University Saturday. The 'Cats dominated the meet by capturing first place in nine of the 13 events.

The most impressive feat of the clash occured when freshman swimming sensation Steve Petrie broke the school record in the 200-meter backstroke for the second straight meet. He raced past his own mark of 1:55.58 by flashing across the line in 1:55.48.

Other stars of the meet included junior Blaise Matthews, who achieved two firsts, in the 50-meter freestyle and as a member of the 400-meter freestyle relay team, and a second place in the 100-meter freestyle.

Freshman Brian Stagg brought home three first places in the 200-meter individual medley, the 100-meter freestyle and as a member of the 400-meter freestyle relay team.

Junior Chris Craft explained the team's early season successes and future prospects. "We picked up a lot of good freshman who've made solid contributions. They've blended in well and there is good chemistry on this team-better than my previous years.

"The ambition on this team is strong and we can really see our goal of winning a Big East Championship. Each dual meet is a stepping stone to gear up for the championships in February."

Tim Truax, another junior, added, "We don't want to lose track of our goals. We have to stick together and maintain the bonds we've established. Don Detwiler [senior] has been a major part of that. His leadership and great speed swimming has been an inspiration to the team."

The swim team will try to keep their perfect record intact when they travel to Washington, D.C. Nov. 24 to face George Washington University.

Volleyball set for tournament

By MONICA BYRNE
Staff Reporter

While most Villanovans are eagerly anticipating Thanksgiving break, the members of the women's volleyball team are focusing their attention on this weekend. On Nov. 20, 21 and hopefully the 22, 'Nova will be competing in the Big East Conference Championships at Providence, R.I.

The Lady 'Cats ended their regular season Nov. 15 and have since been preparing for post-season play.

The Spikers, standing 13-9 overall and 2-4 in the conference, are ranked third in the Southern division of the Big East, with Pittsburgh (6-0) and Georgetown (4-2) preceding them and Seton Hall (0-6) trailing.

On Nov. 20 Villanova will play Boston College and Nov. 21, the 'Cats will challenge UConn., Providence and Syracuse. Their performance on these two days will determine whether they will compete in the semi-finals and finals Nov. 22.

According to Coach Dennis McGinnis, the girls are in a "real good position." Unlike earlier in the season, he describes his team as "playing consistently" and added, you're playing good, aggressive ball and we're all healthy, which is a good sign."

Unfortunately, 'Nova could win all four preliminary games and still not make it to the semis. McGinnis explained, "The way it's set up now, the South is much stronger than the North. If each team in the South wins all four of their games, Pitt and Georgetown will remain No. one and No. two, respectively. That's just the way it is. Changes in the structure of divisions have to be made."

On Oct. 31, the 'Cats hosted the Hoyas from Georgetown. After winning the first game 15-8, 'Nova lost the next three 13-15, 5-15, and 4-15.

Then came the Big Five Tournament held at the Palestra. The Lady Spikers started strong, beating LaSalle 3-0, (15-4, 15-8, 17-15), but then proceded to lose a 3-2 heartbreaker to Temple (15-11, 12-15, 9-15, 17-15, 14-16) and 3-0 Pennsylvania (1-15, 6-15, 4-15). The 'Cats then regrouped and won five of their last seven regular season games.

On Nov. 4, Lehigh traveled to Villanova only to be defeated 3-1 (15-2, 12-15, 15-13, 15-11). Then 'Nova crushed their next two opponents. Fairleigh Dickinson (15-10, 15-7, 15-7) and Seton Hall (15-9, 15-9, 15-9). The latter victory marked the last home game for the senior 'Cats.

All of the seniors were alotted considerable playing time in their final appearance in the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse. McGinnis commented that "the girls had fun," but said he did not notice any lamenting.

The players then journeyed to Boston College where they defeated the Eagles 3-1 (14-16, 15-11, 15-13, 15-10). Spectacular performances were given by Helen Hnat (four service aces and 16 kills). Debbie Opitz (11 kills, 21 perfect passes) and Lori Reiter (29 digs).

On Nov. 14, Villanova struggled with UConn and came from behind to triumph 3-2 (8-15, 9-15, 15-10, 15-8, 15-11). This was another outstanding game for Hnat (21 kills) and Opitz (18 kills, 26 digs) and also for Hillary Anderson (four service aces).

Villanova then battled a very tough Rhode Island team but lost 3-0 (3-15, 11-15, 14-16) and shortly after fell 3-0 to Providence (12-15, 12-15, 11-15) to end its regular season.

Overall, the Volleyball team has greatly improved and so have individual players. McGinnis lauds Reiter, Hnat and Opitz and said "Lori has been a very reliable setter, Helen has been a very strong hitter and Debbie has given us much more than before, both offensively and defensively.

Richmond tops football on late T.D.

By DOUG SCANCARELLA
Sports Editor

The Villanova football team dropped a heartbreaker to the University of Richmond, Saturday. The contest was a seesaw battle that saw the 'Cats lose on a last second "Hail Mary" pass.

V.U. entered the game as underdogs, but left able to hold their heads high. True they lost, but they lost to Richmond, the team that won the 1987 Yankee Conference Championship. The score was only 38-35, and the game went down to the wire.

"We basically beat them, we lost on a fluke," stated Head Coach Andy Talley. "We played close to as well as we can play and our players know that. The game was positive in that we got the attention of everybody."

The game began with Villanova's Greg Downs returning the kickoff to the 33-yard line. Fourteen plays and six minutes later Kirk Schulz dove into the end zone from a yard out to give the 'Cats a 6-0 lead.

Kicker Tom Withka's PAT made the score 7-0. The drive was marked by long gains by Pete Lombardi and John Karoly.

After Richmond converted a 39-yard field goal, Villanova came back and reached pay dirt in two of their next three possessions. It was a two-yard run by Karoly and a 19-yard scoring toss from Schulz to Gary Pascoe that ended the drives. Another field goal by Richmond made the score 21-6 in favor of the Wildcats.

After that Richmond got hot. A few tosses by quarterback Chad Grier led to a two-yard quarterback sneak by Grier. A two-point conversion was added and the first half ended with the Wildcats up 21-14.

When the second half began, Richmond showed they were still hot. A 10-play drive was capped off by a 30-yard field goal. Four plays later Richmond had the ball back and another drive was put together, this time culminating with a five-yard scoring jaunt by Erwin Matthews.

Next it was Villanova's turn. The Wildcats drove the field compliments of a few Ron Sency end arounds, as well as some Schulz completions. However, Talley found himself in a bind as the 'Cats were faced with a fourth down and two from Richmond's 16-yard line.

Talley opted to gamble and the results were a 16-yard scoring strike from Schulz to Downs.

"At that point we felt a field goal would not be good enough," said Talley. "We've been playing wide open offense all year and they were playing man to man. So we decided to go and fortunately it worked."

Following the 'Nova drive Richmond began to move but linebacker Richard Spugnardi stepped in front of a Grier pass and picked the ball off. The drive was stopped, but four plays later V.U. had to punt and Richmond drove again. This time they converted with a Marvin Hargrove three-yard end around for a touchdown and the lead.

Suddenly the Wildcats were down by three points, but not for long. 'Nova stormed down the field quickly.

Sency broke a long one for 39-yards and two plays later grabbed a Schulz 12-yard toss. Lombardi then went three-yards off tackle and at the 4:53 mark in the fourth period Schulz snuck in again for six. The extra point gave the Wildcats a four-point advantage.

'Cats romp over Canadians

By JOHN RICCO
Sports Editor

On Nov. 11 Head Coach Rolland V. Massimino unveiled his 1987-88 Villanova basketball squad for the first time in an exhibition against the Canadian National Team. The Wildcats played aggressive, hustling basketball on both ends of the court in routing the Canadians 71-52.

Though many "first game" mistakes were made, and the team looked sloppy at times, the general feeling derived from the game was one of optimism.

Junior Doug West, who scored a team high 18 points, was pleased with 'Nova's performance.. He commented, "The team looked good. I think we executed well. We made a few mistakes which we have to work on, but overall I'm satisfied."

West epitomizes one of the major strengths of this year's 'Cats; versatility. Villanova has no less than six players who can play two or more positions.

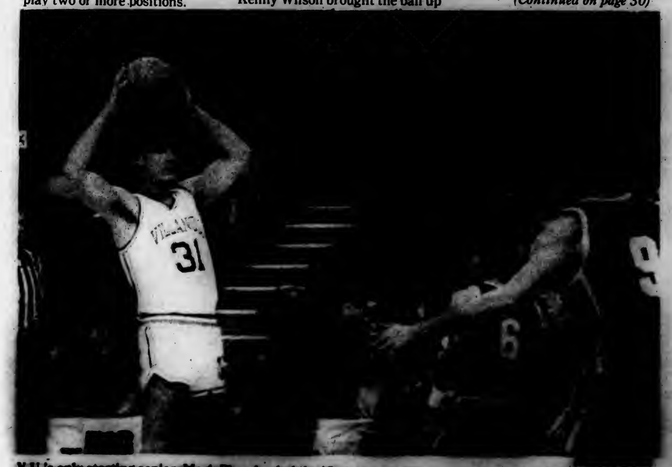
West, for instance, started the game at shooting guard but moved to small forward in the second half and was just as effective.

Another of these versatile players, Mark Plansky, enjoyed a fine opening game as well. Though the senior foward scored only seven points, he did many of the "Plansky-like" things V.U. fans have become accustomed to over the past four years.

His eight rebounds tied him for the team lead, and his 35 minutes played were the most by any of the 'Cats.

Villanova got off quickly, taking the opening tap and building a quick 6-0 lead. With under three minutes left in the first half V.U. had a comfortable 14-point lead, but the Canadians fought back and whittled the margin back down to six at the half.

The most exciting series of plays in the game came midway through the first half. Point guard Kenny Wilson brought the ball up the court and threw an alley-oop pass to a high-flying Gary Massey. Massey took the pass and brought the house down with a thunderous two-handed slam.



Before the 4,338 screaming fans knew it, the Wildcats were at it again. Following a missed shot by the Canadians, sophomore Rodney Taylor drove the lane and was fouled as he laid the ball in for two.

The 6-foot-6-inch forward finished off the three-point play, nailing the free throw and raising the noise in the stands a few more decibels.

Taylor, who missed much of last season with an injured foot, was a major reason for the optimism generated by last week's contest. His 12-point, eight rebound effort and blue-collar style was a sight Villanova fans were glad to see.

In the second half Villanova started to wear down their oppo-

Water polo ends 19-4

After an opening-round 9-3 victory over Duke, the dream ended for the Villanova water polo team, as they lost a heartbreaking 9-8 decision to Queens College last weekend in the Eastern Intercollegiate Championships at Annapolis, Md.

The 'Cats shrugged aside the defeat, however, and trounced Johns Hopkins 10-7 in the consolation game to capture third place for the tournament.

"It was certainly a big disappointment for us (losing to Queens College)," explained coach Dan Sharadin, "because we played extremely well except for a few lapses. They had a certain blend of players that gave us trouble all year."

Despite the loss, Villanova's successes this season did not go unnoticed, as Sharadin's coaching colleagues voted him "Coach of the Year."

Sharadin deflected the credits of the award to his players and especially assistant coach Chris Packer. "I didn't win the award, my players won the award for me. So did my assistant coach [Packer]. He had a great deal of input into the decisions on this team and he was a tremendous asset to this group."

Also honored last weekend were players Jim Riley, Matt Jayne and Farshad Charandoosh, who were named to the second team all-Eastern Tournament team. "It's been a combination of three things ... [unintelligible] ... positions, other programs also goes out, eventually paid off," said Riley.

Charmforoosh, an olympic hopeful, described the season as a learning process. "The first two times we lost to Queens, I didn't play very well. The last time I played better, but we still lost. We're getting better though, and learning. That is what we strive for: improvement every year."

Although a 19-4 record and a third-place finish at the Easterns represent the best overall season for the water polo squad, they cannot rest on their laurels. Next season, they move to the top tier of the Mid-Atlantic Conference, where competition will improve significantly, with top 20 teams Bucknell, Iona and Navy waiting in the wings.

"We're going to have our hands full, but I'm looking forward to it. It's going to be a huge challenge, but this team works so well together and they are so coachable, I'm confident that in a few years, we'll be contenders," said Sharadin.

Ed Rae, the playmaker and only senior, leaves the team proud of their accomplishments and optimistic about the future. "I know the experience of playing physically aggressive teams will assist this team in the higher division.

This year we had the best team unity in my four years. We ran difficult plays well, and the players had a great awareness of where they were in the water.

"I am very pleased with this team and the direction they are going. I'm confident that in two years [unintelligible] ... a Division I contender."

Meese, Scalia speak

U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese III and Associate Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia spoke Nov. 20 at Villanova University during events celebrating the bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution.

Prior to one of the events, pro-Meese and anti-Meese demonstrators gathered to express their views.

Scalia gave an address titled "The Constitution, the People, and the Courts" at the Law School, with over 600 people in attendance.

Scalia said the Constitution is "the token and substance of what continues to bind us together as a nation.

"Unlike any other nation in the world, we identify ourselves on the basis not of genealogy or residence, but on the basis of belief of certain principles, and the most important of those principles are set forth in the Constitution," he said.

He stated that as one becomes more mature and sophisticated, one may suspect the Constitution to be "nationalistic exaggeration." By comparing the durability of the American Constitution to those of other nations, however, one can see that this approach should not be taken, he said.

"We may be new in many things, but in the science of government we're the most venerable people in the world," Scalia stated. "When else has a government been established not by conquerors [illegible] on the spoils, or even by political parties [illegible] and the general, but by a four-[illegible] of [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Campus rezoning tabled

By DIANE A. CILIONE
Staff Reporter

Villanova University must develop a complete plan for the proposed building site on the west campus before the Radnor Township Board of Commissioners will consider the University's proposal to rezone the area, according to Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president of Student Life.

Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center, stated that "Villanova is in the process of working with its architects and engineers to develop the plan which Villanova will submit to the township." Martin said that when a satisfactory plan has been submitted to the board of commissioners, they will consider Villanova's proposal.

The proposal includes a request for an ordinance which would allow 47 acres of land adjoining the area of St. Mary's Hall to be rezoned from residential to institutional.

The University submitted a general and tentative building plan with the rezoning proposal. The plans include a combination of the two plots of land, yielding an area of 62 acres. The buildings to be constructed would include 1,366 dormitory beds, a food service building, parking, academic offices and recreational facilities.

On Nov. 9, the board of commissioners tabled Villanova's request that the township put consideration of west campus rezoning on their agenda. The board postponed the proposal by a 6-0 vote.

University representatives must wait before they meet again with the board of commissioners to propose that the necessary ordinance be introduced and that the date be set for a public hearing on the University's proposal.

Objections of the University's plan came from a group of homeowners on the border of the section of land in question. Their objections were supported by spokespersons for Lower Merion homeowners on the northeast side of County Line Road, the Ashwood Manor Civic Association and members of the township planning commission.

The neighbors of the proposed building site objected to the rezoning at the November meeting. A spokesperson for the neighbors stated that no answers to vehicle and pedestrian traffic movement, no indication of sewering, increased night lighting, increased water run-off, decreased water pressure, the future of the eight historic buildings presently on the land, open space and the destruction of old trees are all arguments against the building proposal.

The Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president of Student Life, is working with the Radnor Township Board of Commissioners on plans to rezone the west campus.

Villanova's attorney, Nicholas Caniglia, assured the board of commissioners that meetings between University officials and neighbors would continue as plans for the site were developed.

Martin stated that the plan for the new complex would decrease the number of students living in surrounding communities. He also said an increase in enrollment is not being planned.

Constitutional views argued

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN
Senior Reporter

President Ronald Reagan's recent attempt to appoint Judge Robert Bork to the U.S. Supreme Court in September brought the ongoing legal debate over Constitutional interpretation to the public's attention through the media's coverage of the Senate Judiciary Committee's confirmation hearings.

The Senate defeated Bork's nomination and is currently considering a third nominee, Anthony Kennedy, but the debate continues.

The debate centers around two theories of interpretation, "original intent" and the "living Constitution." Many find a middle ground between these two extremes, but the original intent and living Constitution theories usually outline the argument.

Two Villanova University professors recently took positions on constitutional interpretation loosely based on the prevailing theories.

The original intent philosophy of jurisprudence, championed by U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese III, argues for judicial restraint in which justices make decisions by looking only at the Constitution and the intentions of those who framed it.

The living Constitution theory is strongly supported by Supreme Court Justice William J. Brennnan Jr. It probes what the words of the Constitution mean in the 20th century through moral reasoning or determining the values and needs of the community.

The professors interviewed, Dr. Joseph R. DesJardins, of Villanova's philosophy department and Center for Peace and Justice Education, and Dr. Colleen Sheehan, of the political science department, both said that the theories they support are true to the actual original intent of the framers. Both of their theories, however, are quite different from Meese's understanding of it.

Moral Reasoning

DesJardins criticized the jurisprudence of original intention as defined by Meese. "It is creating false gods. It raises the framers to a godlike level that I am not willing to accept," he said.

DesJardins teaches a course on the philosophy of law, concentrating heavily on civil liberties. He said it is difficult to find out what the original intentions of the framers were because a lot of the text's language is ambiguous and open-ended. If discernible, these intentions are not always relevant today, he said.

"I would appoint another Brennan [to the U.S. Supreme Court] if I could," he said.

The term "living Constitution," however, makes the theory a little too open-ended, he commented.

"I would want to claim an original intent, but not a literal intent," DesJardins stated. He bases interpretation instead on the principles around which the country was founded.

"The text provides us with guidelines of some specific rules. When the text is specific, we should abide by it. However, there is a lot of evidence that they [the framers] wanted to leave it open," he stated.

The Ninth Amendment, which states, "The enumeration in the Senate meets

By DANTE J. SCALA
News Editor

The faculty asked for an 8.5 percent salary increase for the 1988-89 academic year at the University Senate meeting Nov. 20.

The increase would include a 5.5 percent increment for cost of living, plus an additional 3 percent to aid in alleviating "the discrepancy between Villanova and its competitor institutions," according to a resolution passed by the faculty council and the faculty affairs committee.

The planning and priorities committee's report was also presented at the meeting.

Student Senator Brian Moses, recently elected chairperson of the committee studying Security and parking policies, announced "an open forum where all ... who [have] a gripe against Security can come and bring it — one time only."

Senate Chairperson Dr. Philip A. Maurone, physics professor, warned that this was not one of the committee's duties. "The ad hoc committee was not instituted to hear complaints but to find out what the operating procedure is for Security ... there is a complaint department elsewhere to hear individual cases and it is not in the Senate," stated Maurone.

Borski's office denies priest's allegations

By KEVIN C. HEIL
Assistant News Editor

Pete DeCoursey of U.S. Rep. Robert Borski of Pennsylvania's office denied allegations made by the Rev. Joseph Turner that Borski "bastardized" House Bill HR 1875, titled "Military Chaplains Faith Balance Act," and added that many religious organizations do not want the bill reintroduced.

The bill, originally introduced by Borski in April 1985, urged the armed forces to maintain a balance of chaplains so that "military personnel and their families can communicate with their God in accordance with the dictates of their faith."

Turner said that Borski was part of a compromise with Wisconsin Rep. Les Aspen, chairperson of the House Armed Services Committee, which "bastardized" the bill by referring it to Aspen's committee six hours before a scheduled vote.

Borski received information from various organizations expressing their lack of support for the bill. He decided it was in their best interest that the bill not be reintroduced, said DeCoursey.

He said Borski was in favor of obtaining more military chaplains, but did not feel the "Military Chaplains Faith Balance Act" was the correct way to solve the problem.

Some religious organizations, including the Archdiocese for the Military Services and the Jewish Chaplains Council, are not in favor of the reintroduction of HR 1875.

In a letter from Archbishop Joseph T. Ryan of the Archdiocese for the Military Services to Chaplain and Colonel John. L. Mann of the U.S. Air Force, Ryan expressed his opposition to the bill.

"It should be noted from the outset that the shortage of Catholic priests in the military is a reflection of the overall shortage that exists in the civilian community. No legislation or policy decision will alter this situation," wrote Ryan.

"The most promising program to alleviate the shortage of Catholic chaplains in the military against this background is the co-sponsorship program instituted by this archdiocese recently. This campaign is directed towards active duty military personnel and their dependents," he wrote.

"Statistics indicate there is a large group of single Catholics who represent a potential pool of vocations to the priesthood and religious life. Many young men among this group as well as some civilians with prior military service indicate a desire to become military chaplains," the letter read. It continued, "The co-sponsorship program is designed to assist them in acquiring the required education, information and professional experience to become chaplains."

Ryan also recommended that the Department of Defense "authorize physical and medical examinations at federal medical facilities for any individual who plans to enter the co-sponsorship program," and that it "elicit legal opinions about the legality of a federally funded educational program to train future chaplains similar to programs previously in existence or in place now to offset the shortage of legal and medical professionals."

According to the Rev. Angelo Acerra, O.S.B., vocations director of the Archdiocese for the Military Services, without the program the military is going to have to rely on priests who are borrowed from dioceses. The co-sponsorship program is designed to lessen the dependence on these priests.

Acerra is optimistic about the future of the program. One hundred and ninety-five men have currently indicated their interest in it.

The Archdiocese for the Military Services is the sole endorsing agency for Catholic chaplains to the branches of the military.

Rabbi David Lapp, director of the Jewish Chaplains Council, wrote "we are opposed to HR 1875 because ... the shortage of rabbis in the military is a reflection of the overall shortage that exists in the civilian community. The military services are embarked upon a very comprehensive recruiting program. It is far more effective and realistic than the remedy suggested by HR 1875."

Lapp added that HR 1875 attempts to insure that the number of rabbis on active duty will be a percentage of the total chaplain corps equal to the percentage of Jewish persons in the armed services. However, military personnel cannot reasonably expect to have a higher ratio of rabbis to Jewish people that exists in the civilian community.

V.U. professors present Constitutional viewpoints

Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people," provides some evidence of this desired open-endedness, according to DesJardins. In addition, such phrases in the document as "unreasonable search and seizure" and "cruel and unusual punishment" are ambiguous, he said.

Moral philosophy and reasoning are the proper methods for understanding these principles and applying them to the present, DesJardins explained.

"I think that individual judges can reason and reach rationally objective and defensible conclusions," he said.

This type of interpretation is neither random nor ad hoc, he insisted.

Supreme Court justices, in their reasoning, "speak for the morals and principles that identify the community," DesJardins stated. The judges are given the authority to determine these principles by the Constitution and "through the reasonableness of their decisions."

DesJardins does not believe, as Meese's original intent position contends, that this moral philosophy of jurisprudence makes judges oligarchs or takes away the right to decide on these issues from the people.

Judicial activism is, he said, one of the best ways to achieve social progress.

"Basic moral principles provide the basis of the Constitution. If aspects of the Constitution no longer accomplish these moral principles, then we have to change the Constitution [and its interpretation by the Supreme Court]," DesJardins said.

Judicial Statesmanship

Sheehan, who teaches a class on the Constitution and wrote her doctorate on the American founding, argues for "original intent, properly understood." She terms this proper understanding, "statesmanship."

"Neither the living Constitution position, which recognizes overarching principles but ignores the text, nor the Meese-Bork original intention position, which looks to the text but recognizes no overarching principles, is sufficient," stated Sheehan.

Statesmanship, according to Sheehan, requires a knowledge both of the words and intentions of the Constitution, as well as an understanding of the principles which inform the American republic.

She explained, "There is no simple formula to achieve the proper workings of free government, but rather there is a standard which serves us in our judgments, just as the circumstances serve to limit us in our political actions. The art of statesmanship can be summed up in the term prudence or, in other words, statesmanship is the art of the best possible."

The principles set forth in the Declaration of Independence, largely unrecognized today, are essential to this form of jurisprudence, Sheehan said. "The Declaration of Independence is the raison d'etre for the establishment of government. It states that to secure certain rights, governments are instituted among men and that these governments derive their just powers from, and only from, the consent of the governed. As the founders understood the Constitution, it was instituted to secure the principles fought for in the American Revolution.

"Those understandings of the Constitution which do not recognize the purpose of that document [The Declaration of Independence] are tantamount to no understanding at all," she stated.

John Marshall and Joseph Story were U.S. Supreme Court justices in the past who pursued statesmanship in their decisions, according to Sheehan. Today, Harry V. Jaffa, Bruce Ledewits and Edward Ehrler are among the few scholars who support this theory of jurisprudence.

Sheehan explained the disappearance of the concept of statesmanship in political life today. "The reason the idea of statesmanship is no longer considered valid is because the idea of natural right, i.e., that there is a standard of judgment independent of human will, has been replaced by the idea that all notions of right and wrong, of just and unjust, are merely subjective value judgments."

Holiday aid for the needy

there is a "definite rise in awareness" during the holidays and an increase in programs for the homeless.

Cameron stated that people's "expectations of their world" change at Christmas. People become more concerned about peace and the needs of others, and are more willing to help people meet their basic needs.

According to Cameron, people become "more aware of the need to give and for people to have the basic necessities."

Cameron added that this awareness makes people more carefully consider their personal values.

Stressing the need to go beyond mere "band-aiding," Cameron spoke of the importance of attempting to change the system through voting, supporting pertinent bills and being aware of how money is allocated in government budgets.

Cameron addressed the need to "find out why we have street people" by looking at the system.

Cameron recommended that even if people feel they cannot give direct aid, individuals should ask themselves how they can raise their consciousness in order to "know that by participating in our system, we can affect change."

The National Order of Omega

VILLANOVA'S GREEK OF THE WEEK

This week, the Order of Omega is especially proud to honor Sigma Phi Epsilon's Gary H. Bonas Jr.

After graduating from Villanova in 1968 with a degree in physics, Gary went on to serve as a member of the U.S. Navy for four years. After his time in the Navy, Gary spent two years working in the construction field at the Philadelphia Naval Yard.

In 1972, Gary returned to Villanova as the assistant to the associate dean for sciences, and in 1981 he was named the assistant director of Student Activities, the position which he still holds. Gary is a member of the Sigma Phi Epsilon National Leadership Committee, the past executive director of the Northeast Interfraternity Conference and the current president of the Association of Fraternity Advisors.

At Villanova, Gary spends his time advising the Greek system and overseeing activities such as Special Olympics, tailgates and The Belle Aire yearbook. Gary also serves as the advisor to the Order of Omega.

In his spare time Gary enjoys the opera and fine food.

For all that he has given to Villanova, the Order of Omega is pleased to honor Gary H. Bonas Jr. of Sigma Phi Epsilon as the Greek of the Week.

Directory distributed

By E.H. McELDOWNEY
Staff Reporter

The student directory was distributed earlier this week, according to Christine Wunk, the editor of the directory.

The directory lists the names, addresses and phone numbers of students living on and off campus, along with their home addresses.

It also contains a listing of all University staff, professors, administrators and their offices.

The front of this year's directory contains additional information such as train and bus schedules in addition to academic calendars, a table of contents, abbreviation codes and emergency telephone numbers.

It also includes a larger section of yellow pages and coupons in the back than last year's edition had.

Wnuk stated that this year's directory contains 3,495 names, compared to about 2,200 last year. A mail campaign and help from the Registrar's Office were cited as reasons for this increase.

Wnuk said she also received help from a "strong staff," that "kept things moving along."

This year's directory was distributed earlier than last year's, which came out Jan. 19.

Wunk stated that a mail campaign was conducted over the summer for information on seniors, juniors and sophomores. Freshman information was collected during orientation.

Wnuk also stated that since this is the third year the directory has been published, the staff was able to draw from the experiences of past years.

Wnuk added that there are more advertisements in the new directory. "There were $26,000 in ads sold this year, which is a 65 percent increase over last year," she said. "We will have some money coming back this year."

University Directories, a company from North Carolina which prints telephone listings, published this year's directory, according to Wnuk.

She commented that many "unsung heroes" helped get the directory published. "Many volunteers, people from Student Government and the Registrar's Office helped out," Wnuk said.

The directory is currently being distributed in mailboxes at Kennedy Hall and at Connelly Center.

Priorities set by committee

By SHARON M. NEUBAUER
Staff Reporter

The University planning and priorities committee gave financial priority to such projects as the construction of two dormitories on south campus, financial aid for students and increases in faculty salaries in its recently-published annual report.

The report, which was submitted to the public on Nov. 20, is the first of three steps in creating the 1988-89 budget for the University.

John Lewis, a student senator and committee member, said "On the whole it [the report] was O.K. ... I was not overwhelmed by it, but I think it was because we were rushed and limited time-wise in preparing it. I think that on the whole, the budget process needs to be reformed in order to allow more time."

Dr. Theresa M. Valiga, associate professor and director of the graduate nursing program, is also a member of the committee. Her view of the report was similar to Lewis' regarding the time factor.

"We were limited by our time schedule; it was very tight. But I feel the report is comprehensive and addresses the needs of the various constituents on campus," she said.

The planning and priorities committee is made up of 15 members, including two alumni, three students, and 10 faculty and administration members.

The committee is given a list from the administration that suggests some necessary projects. These ideas are then formed into two categories, capitals and operationals.

The capital category is concerned with those expenditures which relate to land and buildings but are non-maintenance in nature. This category also relates to future items that will need money and attention.

The items of high priority in the capital category of this year's report include construction of two dormitories on the south campus, construction of academic office facilities, the upgrading of classrooms and offices, continued implementation of fire and environmental safety programs, the acquisition of real estate as it becomes available, development of west campus and endowment.

The operational category concerns all expenditures connected with ongoing operations of the University, including buildings and maintenance. This category also relates to items that need more immediate attention.

The items of high priority in the operational category of this year's report include completing the campus physical facilities master plan, rezoning west campus, providing financial aid for students, improving faculty, administration and staff salaries; and initiating self-study activities for middle states.

After the report is completed, it is then sent to the University budget committee. This committee is made up of students, faculty and administration

The Senate votes on the administration's proposed budget in the spring. The Board of Trustees makes the final decisions on the budget.

Interviews wane

By STEVE D'ANGELO
Staff Reporter

Colleges and universities are giving an increasingly smaller value to student interviews, according to a New York Times article. Villanova University has been following this trend to some extent.

The University has chosen to provide "information sessions" rather than interviews for students in recent years, stated the Rev. Harry J. Erdlen, O.S.A., dean of admissions.

The students are given a tour of the campus and then have a short discussion with a member of the administration. The main purpose of the discussion is to inform the student, rather than to evaluate him, Erdlen said.

He stated that about one-quarter of the applicants participate in the sessions each year. These students are not seen as having an advantage over the others.

The interview will rarely affect a student's chances of acceptance. It makes a difference only in borderline cases and even then it has very little weight, he said.

"It's [the interview] part of an evaluation, but frankly it makes a difference one way or the other only in borderline cases," agreed the dean of Reed College in the Times article.

When evaluating a student for admission, Villanova has begun placing a larger value on several criteria other than the interview.

In the Times article, the director of admissions of Northwestern University stated as well, "we're looking for so many items ... that quite honestly, the interview is rarely a surprise."

According to Erdlen, the best way to judge a student's potential is by his or her high school performance.

Therefore, an applicant's grades are considered the most important for acceptance.

SAT [scholastic aptitude test] scores are the next best guidelines, and are used to decide between students sharing similar grades, said Erdlen.

Class rank is also taken into account, but since many applicants are from small schools, its value is not very great.

Seniors to celebrate tomorrow

By NOEL E. FALCO
News Editor

Saturday's "Countdown Celebration" for Villanova seniors will be held at Popcorn's in King of Prussia under new parameters in an attempt to eliminate problems previous Days' Parties have had, said Lucyna J. Gorski, director of student activities.

"Last year, we had big problems ... the party at the Sheraton [Hotel Convention Center] was a complete fiasco," said Gorski.

The Sheraton lacked preparation on the part of the facility and the staff was difficult to work with, but Gorski attributed part of the problems to the students attending the event.

"The students were also difficult to work with. They did a lot of damage to the convention center and it cost us a lot of money. The liability that was on our shoulders was extremely high," she said.

As a result of the problems at the Sheraton, administration, staff, and the student organizations which sponsor the events, the Villanova Student Union and the Blue Key Society, decided to start looking for a better place to hold the event.

"The last two [parties last year] were at Pulsations ... the idea was nice, but there were problems," Gorski said.

She said one of the problems was the distance between the University and the club, which creates a concern about drinking and drjving when sponsoring "something that's basically a drinking party." Also, the club was open to everyone and was not strictly for Villanova students.

"It's not the same community feeling; it was just a night out at a bar. It didn't cover our needs," Gorski said.

A second option was to move the event to Popcorn's, which is closer. This is the idea which will be used tomorrow when the Student Union sponsors this event.

According to Gorski, this countdown celebration will be held under new parameters. The hours will be 5 to 9 p.m., which is more of a happy hour. Also, the event will be closed to all but Villanova seniors.

"We will be closing out others who are not actually seniors, true seniors ... we have to say no to seniors bringing dates or cousins or friends because if we sell out, that person is taking the place of a senior. There are other programs, such as formals and dances, which they can take dates to, but this is strictly a senior Villanova student event," she said.

Popcorn's requires a minimum of 800 people. Gorski stated the normal amount that attends the event is between 500 to 800 people.

"One thousand is the most we've every had anywhere. We should be able to fit every senior," she added.

In the past, three or four parties were held each year, but last year had fewer due to the problems in finding a place to hold the event. The Student Union organizes the first party and the last one, which is held during Senior Week. The Blue Key Society is responsible for the two parties in the spring.

As to the number of countdown celebrations that will be held this year, Gorski explained that it depends on the results of tomorrow's celebration.

She said, "The bottom line is that after this Saturday, we will review and see how this Saturday goes. If people are less drunk, less abusive, and it is a much more workable situation, we will try to do it again three more times, once in Senior Week and either once or twice in the spring.

"We can't foresee what will go wrong [this Saturday] ... there are a few people who always cause problems. It's not fair to stop having events because of them," said Gorski.

She added that during Senior Week there will be more flexibility in finding a place to host the event. Bars are reluctant to close on the weekend for a party, and the University cannot hold such an event on a weeknight. During Senior Week, though, the event can be held any night, as there are no classes.

Georgetown gays' suit settled

In a key court case concerning gay students, the Washington D.C. Court of Appeals ruled on Nov. 20 that Georgetown University does not have to grant gay student groups official recognition.

The court did say that Georgetown, a private Catholic university, must give homosexual groups the same privileges it gives other groups. These privileges typically concern use of campus meetings rooms.

Two gay groups sued Georgetown for recognition in 1980, after they were refused official status because Catholic doctrine condemns homosexuality.

Columbia U. requirements eased

Officials from Columbia University recently revealed that the school has been allowed by the Ivy League to recruit players who fail to meet conference academic requirements.

Columbia sought and received a waiver from the Ivy League after its 1985 season, during which the team's losing streak ran to 21 games. It currently stands at 41 games. The waiver allows the admission of a limited number of players each year whose academic qualifications are lower than the normal league minimum.

Five players were admitted under the variance last year and are playing varsity. There were six players admitted this year. Columbia's freshman team went 6-0 this season.

The Ivy League requirements were established in the early 1980s.

Racial tension rises at colleges

Evidence of widespread black student impatience with the pace of integration on their campuses continued to mount in November at Emory University in Atlanta, Ga., and the University of California at Berkeley.

At Emory, black students were angered by the school's decision to deny tenure to professor Sondra O'Neale, the only black teacher in Emory's School of Arts and Sciences and the first professor denied tenure there since 1981.

O'Neale's supporters say she was denied tenure because of her race and gender. A faculty review committee recommended that O'Neale not be granted tenure on the basis of her scholarship and research.

At Berkeley, more than 500 marched to Chancellor Ira Heyman's office to blame the general campus atmosphere for a series of racial incidents — the most recent being an Oct. 20 letter to the African Students Association headed "Dear Nigger" — and to ask for better counseling to help minority students stay in college.

viduals who happen to be on the Supreme Court, not even the Congress, but only the people who understood the document and continue to treasure the values which it contains," he concluded.

Following Scalia's speech, a demonstration composed of students and faculty was held outside the Meese banquet in the Villanova Room in opposition to Meese. Protestors carried signs, chanted and distributed literature criticizing Meese's record. Approximately two dozen protestors were present.

Meese doesn't have a theory about the Constitution. He's got an agenda. We're coming here to tell people what his agenda, not his theory, is," said John Lewis, student senator.

"He doesn't believe in original intent or judicial restraint. Those are his faults because there is a real theory behind those things, but he's not here to discuss that. He's here to advance his agenda. We don't believe it's an agenda that Americans can support and an agenda that Villanova students can support," Lewis added.

A counter-demonstration was also staged. Members of the College Republicans from Villanova, Saint Joseph's University, and the University of Pennsylvania participated, according to Collette Mitchell of Villanova's branch of College Republicans. The two demonstrations were the lead story on American Broadcasting Company [ABC]'s affiliate, WPVI-TV.

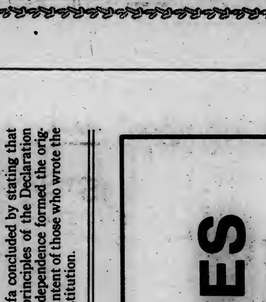
Meese said he was aware of the protest but did not have much information on it.

Meese gave an address at the banquet, titled "The Constitution: a Bicentennial Reflection."

"The single most astonishing thing about the Constitution is what a finely-tuned mechanism it is," he said. According to Meese, it is strong enough to secure order, but not so strong as to threaten liberty.

"They [the founding fathers] knew that any nation has to take into account human frailities and appreciate that citizens cannot be relied upon to govern themselves without law, or to administer law without restraints," he commented.

Meese added that virtue remains a necessity in America's constitutional system. "The role of the public was as important to the concept of the constitutional government as were the words that were on the document itself," he said.



According to Meese, the founding fathers knew that citizenship meant participation. He cited the founders for their own civic service.

He commented, "The citizens who make up the bulk of America, with their seemingly ordinary, unspectacular and steady virtues, are the citizens for which the Constitution was written. It protects their liberties and secures their rights under the law, but making a successful country is up to the people who live under such a regime."

Meese said the preservation of the Constitution is directly dependent upon Americans taking a look at their history and at where they are now and restoring some of the virtues and values that were important in the writings of the founders.

"The genius of the Constitution is that, for the most part, it does not impose values, but rather establishes a process through which shared values among our people can be woven into the fabric of law through the democratic process," Meese said.

"'We the People' is not mere rhetoric designed as a catchy phrase to introduce a legal document. These three words are the capsulization of the fundamental values that are the hallmark of our American democracy and the challenge to civic virtue for our next 100 years," he concluded.

Constitution lectures conclude

By LYNN PERDEK
Staff Reporter

In the spirit of the nation's bicentennial celebration of the Constitution, Villanova presented a number of speakers to debate the question of how to integrate the Constitution.

The final events for the bicentennial celebration were a lecture by Dr. Gary McDowell on original intent and a debate on natural rights integration by Dr. Harry V. Jaffa and Professor Bruce H. Ledewitz.

On Nov. 19, McDowell, resident scholar at the Center for Judicial Studies, spoke to Villanova students and faculty on the subject of the recent nomination and defeat of Judge Robert Bork for the U.S. Supreme Court.

McDowell claimed that the Bork hearings had nothing to do with his ability or record as a judge, but instead were a battle over how judges ought to read the Constitution.

McDowell stated that there has been an academic disagreement about how the Constitution should be interpreted by judges, and that now it has expanded into a political battle.

According to McDowell, those who argue against original intent are trying to replace the written Constitution with judicial pretensions.

He said, "While the court is trying to teach this generation that there is no gap between morals and the law, the results have not been liberal benevolence but judicial aggrandizement."

McDowell summed up his position by stating that the laws should be made by the legislature, not by the courts. Although Bork was defeated, the battle has not ended, he said.

The honors program sponsored the McDowell lecture, as well as a debate about the issue of constitutional interpretation on Nov. 23. Speaking for judicial restraint in a natural rights perspective was Jaffa, a professor at Claremont McKenna College who has written many books on the subject of constitutionalism.

Arguing for a liberal natural rights interpretation was Ledewitz, a law professor at Duquesne University.

Ledewitz claimed that as written, the Constitution does not allow for the government to provide for the poor, protect the environment, or protect against nuclear threats.

He further stated that equal protection is not written in the Constitution. It was the interpretation of the Supreme Court in the case of Brown v. Board of Education, which ended segregation in school systems.

Jaffa countered that a liberal interpretation by the courts is a bad notion, as in the case of Roe v. Wade, which legalized abortion.

Jaffa stated that the courts used modern scientific knowledge as a justification, yet in the 1800s scientific knowledge claimed blacks were inferior to whites, although the founders of the Constitution believed slavery to be wrong.

This proves that science can be used to justify any conclusion, even if the founders of the Constitution believe that conclusion to be wrong, according to Jaffa.

Jaffa concluded by stating that the principles of the Declaration of Independence formed the original intent of those who wrote the Constitution.

Protest disrupts Villanova apathy

The spark of political interest exhibited Nov. 20 by the anti-Meese protestors and counter demonstrators is a positive sign of life at the University. The break from the apathetic norm of the Villanova student body should be welcomed and applauded.

In Connelly Center a group composed of about two dozen students and faculty members protested the arrival of U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese III to Villanova as part of the bicentennial celebration of the Constitution. They objected to Meese himself as well as the banquet format of the celebration. The protestors opposed the $15 student and $30 faculty admission prices which they claimed restricted the number of people able to attend. A counter protest was also held.

In the words of a member of the protest, the demonstrators expressed their points of view "to increase the discourse and remind people that Villanova is a place for a free and open exchange of ideas."

Just one protest is not enough! Student opinions on topics such as tuition increases, coed dormitories, parking regulations, visitation hours and registration procedures can all be heard through organized protests.

Student apathy can become student involvement.

The demonstrators followed University protest rules and regulations and should be commended for a nonviolent, nondisruptive and effective political statement.

Christmas can be depressing

Christmas is the most joyous and holy season of the year. We celebrate Christ's birth and rejoice with our families and friends. But for many Americans, especially those who have lost a beloved spouse or parent, Christmas can be a most depressing time. We must open our hearts and be especially compassionate to people who have difficulty experiencing the holidays.

During Advent we reflect and prepare our souls for Christ's coming. We remember how special the holidays are, and we anxiously await Christmas morning. For some, though, past Christmas memories become present depressing moments. These people recall happy Christmas seasons when their loved ones were alive or families together. They cherish the precious moments they once knew and sometimes dread the future holidays.

Christmas is a time for sharing happy moments and giving gifts to special people in our lives. This Christmas, extend your Christmas lists and give the gifts of love and compassion to someone who needs them the most.

Find Philadelphia

Philadelphia, the city of brotherly love, is a mere 25-minute train ride from campus, yet so many Villanova students continually leave the cultural resources of the city untapped.

The Liberty Bell, Philadelphia Art Museum, Franklin Institute and Independence Hall are just a few historical sites that enhance patriotism and must be visited to be appreciated.

Philadelphia is also rich in its cultural experiences. The bizarre nightlife of South Street, the culinary delights of cheese steaks and soft pretzels and the heritage of Chinatown are not to be missed.

Philadelphia also offers a plethora of professional sporting events with its Phillies, Eagles, Flyers and 76ers. In addition, the collegiate athletic competition in the Big 5 cannot be overlooked.

Discover Philadelphia, Villanova. It is just around the corner and filled with excitement.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

As a freshman engineering student, I recently went through registration for the first time. I was unlucky enough to have a late day for registration, and as expected, almost every section of every class I needed was closed.

I have a set curriculum that must be taken next semester. The people working at registration, in their ever-wise ways, advised me to sign up for any section in which I could get a place and work out the conflicts on my own.

This piece of advice left me with physics class in the middle of chemistry and design graphics lab, and eight straight hours of classes on Monday and Friday. But of course this was of no concern to the people working at registration.

With the amount of tuition we pay to attend Villanova, the least the school can do is let us take the classes we need each semester.

As I tried to work out those conflicts, it became all too apparent that a lack of concern was the prevalent attitude of most administrators. I spoke to several department chairpeople about entering closed sections in order to alleviate my conflicts, and they all told me, some politely, some not, that there was no way I could change a class in their department. My problems were not their fault or their concern.

I was ready to give up and contemplated changing my major to anything other than engineering, when a kind soul in the physics department took pity on me, made an exception and helped me change some classes.

Is this the way a major university should be run? Is it the student's fault that all classes are closed when her turn to register comes? I do not think so. Why is there not someone here who could help when this type of difficulty arises? With the amount of tuition we pay to attend Villanova, the least the school can do is let us take the classes we need each semester.

Constitution debated

Original intent view has merit

By DANTE J. SCALA
News Editor

In recent months, "original intent" interpreters of the Constitution have had much reason to wring their hands with anguish and worry. One can imagine they are still trying to regroup after their standard bearer, Judge Robert Bork, left Capitol Hill in humiliating defeat after his nomination was rejected by the Senate.

During the Senate Judiciary Committee's hearings on the Bork nomination, some of the judge's vocal opposers did their best to portray him as a judicial prince of darkness. As politicians will, they tried to reduce complex matters to simple, black-and-white issues. Their distortions worked politically, but did not do justice to the original intent perspective.

For even though some original intent supporters may wear black hats (and prompt protests in the unlikeliest of places), they nonetheless present some Constitutional ideas which are valuable to the American polity. One such concept is the doctrine of "consent of the governed."

This doctrine is as old and venerable as the Constitution itself. Simply, it says that a government can only act with the assent of the country's citizens. The Founding Fathers embodied this concept in their political vision of constitutional democracy. They believed what Attorney General Edwin Meese III has stated, that "In a system of popular government, the people have the liberty and the legitimate power within certain limits to define the moral, political and legal content of their public lives." These limits are defined by the Constitution, which protects the rights of the minority in a state ruled by the majority.

When considering Meese's statement, it is irrelevant what one thinks of the man himself. It is the words themselves that are important, that powerfully echo through American democracy.

The concept of citizens' consent implies that each citizen has certain rights, including the right to have some say in how he is governed. This idea is taken for granted today, but in the 18th century it was a revolutionary force which allowed man to free himself from the bonds of repressive medieval society.

Now that the revolution is long over, however, Americans appear less interested in their political liberties, and are more passionate about concepts such as social equality.

Nineteenth-century political philosopher Alexis de Tocqueville observed this love of equality in citizens of democratic countries, noting "for equality their passion is ardent, insatiable, incessant, invincible."

One reason he saw for this was that "the advantages of equality are immediate" while the advantages of freedom "are shown only by the lapse of time."

Tocqueville saw a potential threat stemming from this love of equality. He feared that citizens would increasingly rely on the power of the central government to ensure their equality. This increasing dependence would result in the creation of a huge, despotic state which would put sharp restrictions on citizens' liberty in the name of protecting their equality. In all, Tocqueville warned of the dangers of giving up our liberties, our right to govern ourselves, even for causes which we might consider worthy.

In view of today's America, Tocqueville appears as much a prophet as he was a philosopher. The social legislation of the New Deal and "Great Society," with its programs of welfare and social security, has also led to an increased expansion and centralization of power in the federal government. In Constitutional terms, the threat of increased government power lies in the doctrine of judicial activism.

Judicial activists such as Supreme Court Associate Justice William J. Brennan argue that it is difficult, if not impossible, to understand the original intent of the Constitution's founders.

Furthermore, some state that the founders' intentions are irrelevant, because our morals and values have evolved in the last 200 years. Thus, judicial activists believe that judges should have significant power to interpret the Constitution in terms of "today's society."

As Stuart Taylor Jr., Supreme Court reporter for the New York Times, has noted, judicial activism has led to "triumphs of constitutional principle," such as desegregation. However, this doctrine has also led the Supreme Court to assume the role of policymaker on controversial moral and social issues — a role which belongs to the legislative branch, not the judiciary.

The landmark case of Roe v. Wade is a telling example of the dark side of judicial activism. Instead of leaving the hotly-debated moral issue of abortion for citizens in the individual states to decide, the Supreme Court assumed the role of final authority on the subject.

Such actions clearly violate the Constitutional concept of consent of the governed. As original intent scholar Gary McDowell stated, "The purpose of federalism," a main principle of American government, "is ... to allow the citizens of the several states to debate the great moral issues of our time, and to choose the moral tone they wish their communities to have."

In all, the doctrine of original intent does not have all of the answers. It does, however, remind us of founding principles of American government which we should not forget.

Natural rights are essential

By SUSAN TOLVE
Senior Reporter

The Constitution's bicentennial celebration, the controversy over Bork's nomination and Meese's recent vocalization of his jurisprudence have brought a fundamental issue to the forefront of the American public arena: how should the Constitution of the United States be interpreted?

All too often this issue is reduced to a gross simplification of two choices — a jurisprudence of original intent or an evolving "living Constitution." Besides the fact that these schools of thought are not always represented accurately, there is also a third view of interpretation commonly overlooked — the natural rights theory.

The natural rights position expounds the belief that to interpret correctly the U.S. Constitution, the document must be read in light of the principles of the Declaration of Independence. This is not a new theory rising out of recent Constitutional debates. In fact, one of the greatest proponents of the natural rights theory was former U.S. President Abraham Lincoln.

In 1857, Lincoln spoke against Chief Justice Taney's Supreme Court decision in the Dred Scott case. Lincoln did not refer to the Constitution to support his case, but to the Declaration of Independence.

He asserted that when the authors of the Declaration stated that all men were created equal, "they simply meant to declare the right so that the enforcement of it might follow as fast as circumstances should permit ...

"The assertion that 'all men are created equal' was of no practical use in effecting our separation from Great Britain, and was placed in the Declaration, not for that, but for future use."

In other words, when the authors declared our independence from England, they were not reacting merely to the situation at hand — breaking ties with their mother country — but they were setting forth principles by which to judge any government.

The Declaration states that to secure the rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, "governments are instituted among men deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

Until 1787, there had never been a government founded on reflection and choice instead of accident and violence. But what made the U.S. Constitution even more unique was this belief in the consent of the governed.

Harry V. Jaffa, professor of political philosophy at Claremont McKenna College and a natural rights proponent, has written extensively about the concept of the consent of the governed. According to Jaffa, this consent refers to much more than a willingness to be ruled.

Because the Declaration states that it was necessary for "the good people of these colonies" "to assume ... the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them," Americans could not consent to a government inconsistent with these ends.

Therefore, Jaffa argues that consent of the governed is not whatever men may agree upon, but it is an intelligent or an enlightened consent. For instance, Jaffa states, "there is no such thing as a right of people under the laws of nature to form Nazi or Bolshevik constitutions."

Without the self-evident principle of equality, consent of the governed has no meaning. The source of the just powers of government are derived from the proposition that all men are created equal. That all men are created equal means essentially that no man is by nature the ruler of any other man. Man's inherent equality requires a consent of the governed so that men may justly rule other men.

During the Civil War, the idea of consent of the governed became an important and a controversial issue. The South defended their right to secede from the Union by arguing that it was a withdrawal of consent.

Jaffa argues that "consent of the governed" had no real meaning to Southerners, however, because they denied the fundamental premise of the Declaration that "all men are created equal" by allowing slavery to exist.

Consent of the governed is not a dead issue buried with the end of the Civil War. Enlightened consent is still needed to maintain the just powers of government. And in larger terms, the Constitution still needs to be read in light of the broad, overarching views of the Declaration. The Declaration is not an historical document to be filed away for posterity, but the essential foundation of our government.

During this year of Constitutional celebration, Americans should not forget that our supreme law is informed by the principles of the Declaration — a document calling for the necessary consent of the governed and for the secure and of unalienable rights.

"We the people" lacks substance when the text of the Constitution is read in isolation from the overarching principles which inform it. The Declaration of Independence clarifies that "we the people" are created equal and are "endowed with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Talley thanks fans

To the Editor:

Many thanks to all of the Villanova football fans who came out and supported the team on the night game on Nov. 19. You created tremendous excitement and electricity in the stadium for the first time since our new program has come back.

I have received many calls from around the country complimenting the student body for their tremendous support of our football program. People were especially impressed with your enthusiasm long into the fourth quarter.

With your continued support we can have a great season in 1988. Our coaching staff and our players are very appreciative of your support and we hope that we can continue to make you proud. Again, my sincere thanks to the greatest fans in college football.

Andy Talley,

Meese defended

To the Editor:

I was amazed that the people associated with the Center for Peace and Justice Education organized a protest because U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese is "someone who's a known criminal."

These people, more than any other group on the campus, preach that citizens in the United States are innocent until proven guilty. This is true even for Meese.

Furthermore, according to the same article in the Nov. 13 issue of the Villanovan, "Reagan's reactionary program which includes reversing historical and landmark Supreme Court decisions of the last three decades."

These people, more than any other group on the campus, preach that citizens in the United States are innocent until proven guilty.

These people have a short historical memory because the Dred Scott decision and the Jim Crow Car decision were both at one time landmark Supreme Court decisions. Yes, the Supreme Court upheld the lower court decisions and made them into the law of the land.

If the reader ever rode in a Jim Crow car, as I did in 1944, he would realize what a grave injustice this was to our black citizens. The blacks rode the rails in abominable style while the whites traveled with class.

Security praised

To the Editor:

Finally, we have someone in charge of Security (and parking) who really has taken charge and some people complain. We now have control over authorized and unauthorized parking, which allows the rights of authorized parkers to be protected.

Why make an issue of the unauthorized parking when the real issue is now there is parking for those willing to pay for authorized parking?

As a tuition paying commuting student who works full time during the day as a prosecutor of welfare fraud for the state of Pennsylvania, I am pleased to be able to finally get the parking place I paid for, and I think that Security is to be commended for their handling of a difficult situation.

Blue Key thanked

To the Editor:

We wish to extend our thanks to the Blue Key Society for the Christmas party they are planning for Big Brothers/Big Sisters on Dec. 6. There will be a pinata, snacks, games (and, of course, Santa with a sack of toys. We are sure that the kids from Philadelphia will have a terrific time.

With all of the talk on campus of the many problems of groups not working together, this is a welcome change. Big Brothers/Big Sisters is donating their time and money as well.

It is this cooperation between Blue Key and Big Brothers/Big Sisters that will ensure that the 35 kids from inner-city Philadelphia will have a fantastic time.

This cooperation exemplifies the spirit of Christmas and that of Villanova.

Freud lecture criticized

By HOWARD H. COVITZ

On Nov. 10, Dr. Hans Eysenk presented two lectures. The first of these centered on his recent work and included results on the part played by biology in personality structure and the parts played by psychological makeup in the predisposition to cancers and cardio-vascular diseases.

A fascinating lecture and while the work was methodologically conventional, the results — in and of themselves — were sufficiently exciting to justify even the most banal of methods.

In the evening lecture, the annual Fritz Nova Memorial lecture, Eysenk failed to meet the rigorous requirements of scholarly research but instead — by innuendo, omission and misrepresentation — led the Villanova audience down the garden path towards accepting his view that "all" the works of Sigmund Freud should be relegated to the great repository of mythological thinking and whimsy.

Freud, himself, Eysenk continued, must be considered a "chronic liar" and the treatment Freud and his followers developed must be considered worthless.

A lecture such as Eysenk's is not difficult to construct, nor is it difficult to convince an audience that is unfamiliar with Freud's writings. Follow me, if you would, in examining Eysenk's method of leading on his audience.

Eysenk noted that Freud did not discover the unconscious and mentions Hartmann's earlier work in this matter. Eysenk fails to mention that Freud made no claims of having discovered the unconscious and, to the contrary, lists more than two dozen workers in the field of unconscious mentation predating his own works.

Eysenk remarks correctly that Freud admonished his patients not to write down their dreams and adds that now we know that dreams are modified by the dreamer after he arises. Eysenk makes no mention of the fact that Freud was well aware of what he called "secondary elaboration" of the dream contents and that it was, in part, his interest in this process that was most significantly distorted.

In this revision of the dream, one could see the physiology of the unconscious ego in operation. In failing to inform the audience of Freud's ten to eleven years on the problem fully but rather to believe that Freud was talking But there's much more to Eysenk's methods.

Eysenk reports that he was falsely accused in the early 1950s of saying that psychoanalysis was useless. I welcome you to read his "Uses and Abuses of Psychology" where he not only (Chapter: "What's wrong with Psychoanalysis") makes this claim, but compares Freud's school to a festering corpse.

Eysenk mentions a brave child development study by one of his group, leaving the audience ignorant of the pioneering works of Rene Spitz, Dorothy Burlingham, Anna Freud, Willi Hoffer, Jean Lampl deGroot, never mind the 40 years of pioneering child observation studies carried out by Margaret Mahler and her coworkers, Anni Bergman, Fred Pine and Daniel Stern.

The audience is left with but one possible conclusion: psychoanalysis is akin to arm-chair speculation and its founder was a dreamer.

Eysenk's lecture was replete with these misrepresentations and others and must be judged as lacking. The implication of its title, "The Fall and Decline of Sigmund Freud" was not demonstrated by the lecturer; Eysenk's bias and his willingness to alter the facts were demonstrated.

For those who attended Eysenk's invited lecture, I recommend careful examination of Eysenk's words and Freud's. When asked after his lecture about these discrepancies, Eysenk noted that he was, after all, only lecturing for an hour.

For those with questions about this matter, I shall be most pleased to quote chapter and verse. For a critical evaluation of Freud and of Eysenk's criticism, you might care to examine Paul Kline's [1972] "Fact and Fantasy in Freudian Theory."

Evaluate priorities

To the Editor:

In response to the article by the Rev. Bernard A. Lazor, O.S.A., in the Nov. 7 issue of the Villanovan, I would like to thank him for his inspiring insights on the true "core" of our Villanova education.

I do not think many of us take the time to realize the importance of being exposed to literature that inspires us to aspire to "values that are both intellectual and spiritual," as Lazor put it.

However, I think it is time that all of us, no matter what our majors are, take up the challenge of pursuing intellectual and spiritual values. The fact that we live in a consumeristic, self-centered, materialistic society which is increasingly becoming more and more apathetic to fundamental Christian values and the "common good" is an even greater reason to consider this task seriously.

As Catholic christians, we all have the responsibility, regardless of our career choices, to confribute to the amelioration of the world and its people in accordance with God's specifications — not our own.

It follows that there is no way we can possibly know what God wants from us unless we read His "guidebook" for humanity, the Bible, and discipline ourselves to live according to His Word.

So, the Bible really is for everyone who wants to make a truly significant contribution to God's world. Hopefully, this is the goal of every Villanova student; but in order to realize this goal, we must first recognize that the real "core" of our education is God's Word — and His will.

How we act upon these two facts is determined by the spiritual and intellectual values which we instill in ourselves while here at Villanova.

This undertaking will neither be easy nor popular; for a famous philosopher once said, "It is becoming so that the practice of ordinary moral virtue will require extraordinary moral courage." Observing the general state of affairs in the world today, I think this is a fairly accurate statement.

I also think it is fair to say that there is a strong positive correlation between a degenerative moral and intellectual value system and the problems facing and affecting all of us in the modern world.

Again I express my appreciation to Lazor for reminding me and everyone else what our real priorities should be. Additionally, I would like to share with everybody some more "words of wisdom," provided by an anonymous author. It is called "The Student's Prayer," and hopefully, it will provide the strength we will need for our "journey." It reads as follows:

Dear Father of all wisdom, grant me the ability to get understanding,
not just knowledge;
help me see in the learning process more of Your great plan for mankind, not just a means to my success.
Cause me to recognize and remember truth, not just facts;
remind me that You weigh my trying, not just my doing — and, Father, above all else, help me be more than a learner ... help me be a lesson in Your saving love to everyone You bring into my life.
Amen.

Efforts appreciated

To the Editor:

A thank you is in order for many individuals who made Villanova's bicentennial celebration the success that it was. When the event was first conceived it was just a "nice little idea." To bring the event to fruition involved the help of many individuals and offices.

From the beginning the support of the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, was unfailing. For one and one-half years the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president of Academic Affairs, gave administrative guidance, practical advice and continued encouragement.

Dean Steven T. Frankino of the Law School, other administrators and the support staff there were superb, not only in facilitating the relocation of the lecture, but in developing lists of individuals to be notified of the event and in giving supportive advice in working out the details for the program.

Furthermore, Marc Tuchman and the staff at the Connelly Center did a more than superlative job in both planning and executing the banquet side of the event.

A special contribution to the evening was made by the music activities department that provided the fine woodwind group which performed before and during the banquet.

As it should be at a university, the Security department responded quickly to our needs and [illegible] the visit of the many [illegible] attending our events. However, many tasks were performed by the Maintenance department who must feel at times like the mother whose work is only noticed when it is not done.

Through the fine touch of Eugene Ruane, director of Public Relations, many potential mistakes were avoided and difficulties minimized. Student helpers and colleagues made things run smoothly on the day of the event. Some of the student volunteers and members of my family spent hours in preparing the mailing of invitations weeks before. All of this help is much appreciated.

Among the people who should be recognized for their assistance are: Annette Elia, Arline Kerrigan, Dr. Lowell Gustafson, Connie Gustafson, Gonzalo Zurita, Folabi Olagbaju, Brian Cleary, Maria Schrems, George Schrems, Juanita Schrems, Lori Gillikin, Mike Pahides and Carolyn Sullivan.

We were most fortunate that Justice Scalia of the U.S. Supreme Court and the Attorney General Edwin Meese III as well as T. Kenneth Cribb, the assistant to the President of the United States for Domestic Affairs, joined with us to bring thoughtful attention to the Constitution.

It is often said that adversity brings out the best in individuals. That may be true, but I like to think that the good also brings out the best in people. Such was certainly my experience in the people who worked to make Villanova's bicentennial celebration a success. It seems to me that such a lesson is precisely what the Constitution is all about — bringing out the best in "We the People," not only in difficult times but also in good times.

Wanamaker's ushers in the holidays

By JACQUELINE GENTILE
Assistant Features Editor

'Tis the season to be jolly, and to take final exams. Do you find it difficult to get into the Christmas spirit as you get into studying? Are you singing the final exam blues instead of Christmas carols?

If this describes you, then a trip to John Wanamaker's department store in Philadelphia is the sure cure. Not only can you do all your Christmas shopping in one stop, but you will be filled with plenty of holiday cheer at the same time. If you manage to leave John Wanamaker's without being in the Christmas spirit, then you truly deserve the title of "Grinch."

A friend and I were filled with holiday cheer from the minute we entered Wanamaker's and witnessed the spectacular display of decorations: Christmas trees, wreaths, garland and literally thousands of dazzling white lights.

The master of ceremonies for this extravaganza is none other than Rudi, John Wanamaker's Christmas teddy bear. He is everywhere in the store. Hundreds of Rudis make up displays in virtually every department — big Rudis, little Rudis, short Rudis and fat Rudis. They all have plush white fur and are decked out in their most festive holiday garb: a red knit sweater with green reindeer and a red hat.

Of course we could not pass by Santa Land, located on the eighth floor — conveniently near the toy department. Watching the children approach this Christmas village with wide eyes and gaping mouths brought back childhood memories. We wished we were six years old again. (Then we could write Christmas lists instead of term papers.)

The scene was truly a breathtaking one with its animated figures, mounds of cottony snow and hundreds of glittering white lights. What we were interested in, however, was an interview with the head honcho Santa himself.

Of course this forced us to cut through some red tape. First we had to speak with Santa's head elf, who sent us to Irv, the Santa Land manager. But we arranged to get around the red tape pretty quickly when, after thoroughly impressing the Wanamaker staff with our Villanovan press credentials, we were granted an exclusive behind the scenes interview with Santa No. 3.

That is right kids. There is not just one but three actual Santa Clauses! We were disappointed too. (We guess that means 24 reindeer, unless they carpool.) Of course, we are only talking about Wanamaker's. What about all those other department stores and shopping malls?

According to Santa this is a pretty typical year as far as toys are concerned. There are no Rubik's Cube or Cabbage Patch doll fads. Santa said there were trucks and dolls, but sometimes kids make more difficult requests. "Take away my brother and bring me a new one."

Santa's reply: "Sorry, we only bring toys."

As we exited Santa's cozy abode in Christmas village, my partner and I exchanged glances and we instantly knew that we shared the same suspicion. There was something shady about this Santa. Could it be that Mrs. Claus was filling in for her hubby, or did Santa always wear eyeliner and a touch of pink blush? Oh well, I suppose that Santa Inc. is an equal opportunity employer.

If Santa is not enough to satisfy the tots, there is always the monorail that travels through the toy department. This gives the kids a bird's eye view of this year's best toys — so they can be sure to add to their list anything they may have forgotten. After all, we would not want mom and dad to have any spare cash after the holidays are over.

However, the train was for children only, and my partner and I were forced to deal with a little

V.U. law graduate lectures on criminal defense

By R. MICHAEL BULLOTTA
Features Editor

On Nov. 23, an alumnus of Villanova University and Villanova Law School returned to give a lecture to a group of undergraduates. This alumnus, however, is not just any ordinary graduate.

She is Patricia Dugan, a prominent and respected criminal defense attorney in Philadelphia. Dugan came to speak to the Villanova Pre-law Society in the west lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Dugan graduated from Villanova Law School seven years ago, and has been defending those accused of crimes ever since.

Dugan's former clients include the "Philadelphia Slasher," the man who was accused and convicted of murdering young women at bus stops, as well as one of the defendants in the equally highly publicized "Baby Killer" case.

The latter case involved a retarded girl who, shortly after giving birth, killed her baby and placed it in a trash can with the help of her retarded sister. The result of the case was that both sisters were found to be insane, thus not responsible in a strictly legal sense. They were both committed to a psychiatric facility where they are currently undergoing treatment for mental illness.

The question most frequently asked of her, said Dugan, is "How can you defend these kind of people?" When she was asked this common question at the end of the lecture, Dugan replied, "I do not always try to win in such cases, only to give my client a fair defense, to which he or she is entitled under the law. If a guilty person is set free, it is the result of the system not operating properly." It is this philosophy that allows Dugan to continue doing what she does.

Dugan told the audience that she had always known that she was going to be a defense attorney. Furthermore, she pointed out that it is very rare to find women criminal defense attorneys, especially in the Philadelphia area.

Dugan explained that being a woman has both helped and hurt her career. She stated that, while many of her clients choose her strictly because of her sex, many have shied away from her services for the same reason.

Dugan, who dresses and looks like Tyne Daly's character "Lacey" on the popular television drama "Cagney and Lacey," described the importance of appearance in a court room. She said, "If a jury likes you [the attorney], then the case will probably go in your favor."

Dugan further elaborated on this concept by explaining how

Spring trips previewed

By KAREN IOVINO
Staff Reporter

March 4-13 marks a much anticipated event at Villanova as well as many colleges across the country. It is Spring Break, a time to rest, relax, and forget about schoolwork for 10 whole days.

The last thing anyone wants to do over Spring Break is go home. This year the Villanova Student Union is offering three trips to Villanova students — Cancun, Jamaica and Switzerland.

The five Spring Break chairpersons include Carol Brennan and Sue Crowley, co-ordinating the Cancun trip; Steven McNally and Noel Falco, co-ordinating the Jamaica trip; and Greg Schrader, co-ordinating the trip to Switzerland.

For the sun lovers, the trip to Cancun on the Mexican Caribbean leaves on March 4, with an evening departure from Philadelphia.

Upon arrival you will be transferred to the Villas Marlin Cancun hotel. The hotel is on the beachfront and located within walking distance of the Sheraton, a popular spot for college students on Spring Break. All rooms at the Villas Marlin have ocean views, and the villas are set up in a duplex style with a kitchen, sitting room, bedroom and full bath.

Three swimming pools are located on the premises, one with a swim up bar, and just about all water sports imaginable are represented. Sounds pretty good after being cooped up studying for midterms.

Nightlife in Cancun is among the best available anywhere. With no drinking age to worry about, the many nightclubs and bars found in Cancun provide a perfect way to socialize and show off your newly acquired tan. Another "must see" is the new Hard Rock Cafe in Cancun.

The total cost of the Cancun trip is $537 (including a $25 security deposit). The Union expects up to 270 students to take advantage of the chance to bake in the Caribbean sun.

The trip to Jamaica leaves from Philadelphia March 6. Originally, this second trip was supposed to be to the Bahamas. However, the Bahamas do not want to become she tries to leave the right impression on the jury by wearing certain clothes. She said, "I'm superstitious, I never wear the same outfit twice in front of a jury."

She also stated that she always wears a red, white and blue dress at least once during every trial." And she saves her "virgin white" dress for her closing arguments. "Juries just love women in white," stated Dugan.

Currently, Patricia Dugan is involved in three separate cases which take up a considerable amount of her time. However, she still manages to find time to work on her doctorate in theology, and she will be traveling to Italy soon to study Roman law.

If you are interested in hearing speakers like Patricia Dugan, check the Pre-law Society board, located in Dougherty Hall, for the date and time of the next meeting.

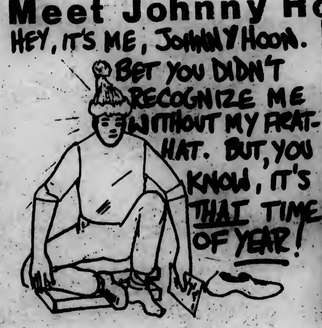
THE ART BIN



'Twas the night before finals
And all through the dorms,
Not a student was stirring
Like the calm before storms.
Coeds are studying
Awake like a bolt
Because they've been drinking
Cases of Jolt.
No one is sleeping
It's the studying woes;
Coffee and empty bottles
Of Vivarin and No-Doz.
Well, Mom, at college
Santa doesn't appear.
No, his busiest time
Is drawing near.
And so there are no toys
No blocks or dolls of vinyl.
You see, Santa's too busy
He's taking a final.

a Spring Break "hot spot" and are trying to deter students from vacationing there. Co-chairpeople McNally and Falco were faced with the problem of finding another location. After talking with several travel agents, Jamaica became the choice.

Jamaica spring breakers will be staying in a beachfront Holiday Inn. McNally describes it as "classy, one of the nicest hotels with many students staying in it." The Union is hoping for 100 students to go to Jamaica.

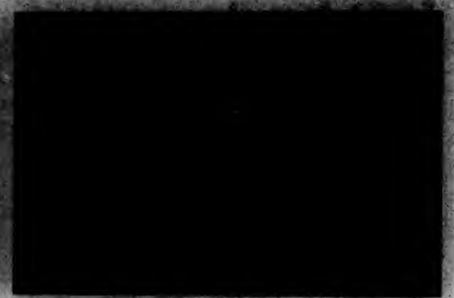
As in Cancun, no drinking age in Jamaica livens up the nightlife. Numerous bars, nightclubs and discos line the island. The cost of the trip will run from $575 to $600, but McNally points out that once you get to the island, goods and services are inexpensive. Arrival back home in Philadelphia is March 13.

If you are still not ready to give up on winter and trade in your ski suit for a bathing suit, the Union has created a trip just for you. Why not ski the Swiss Alps for a week? The trip leaves on March 5 from New York (a round-trip transfer from Villanova to New York is included in the cost of the trip).

The Switzerland trip is a new idea that the Union is trying this year, and they are hoping for a turnout of up to 70 people. The students will be accommodated in either the Post Hardermannli or the Harder Minerva, both in Interlaken.

The total trip will cost $792. This price includes a full dinner daily and taxes and gratuities at the hotel. The price of the tour is based on the 1.6 Swiss franc exchange rate.

Side trips can also be arranged to see Zurich, Geneva, or Basel, or any other nearby towns on the Swiss countryside.



If by now you have decided that you do not feel like going home but would rather use the week off to visit a paradise that before you have only dreamed of, these three trips offer great times at great prices. Whether you would rather bake in the sun or ski the slopes of Switzerland, the Union is sponsoring a trip to suit your tastes.

As McNally sums it up, "All three trips will be excellent. With the school behind you, a lot is looked into, including location and activities. Schools can also get cheaper rates." A dream vacation with your best friends and at a great price — what more could anyone want? These are three vacations that are too good to pass up.

more red tape in order to see the train in action. But again, our Villanovan status did the job and we were allowed to pass beyond the sign that read "No Adults Beyond This Point."

It may seem that everything is geared toward the kiddies, but for all you grown-ups, how about those festive Santa boxers?

Undoubtedly, the most spectacular event is the light show in the grand court. Hundreds of eager shoppers crowd the court as they wait for the next show. Or, as my partner and I did, one can enjoy the light display from the elegant restaurant on the terrace that overlooks the grand court.

The light show features a total of 80,000 lights, 20,000 of which are on the 60-foot-tall Christmas tree. In addition, several fountains spout up 2,300 gallons of water during the show. The whole extravaganza is narrated with clips from traditional Christmas stories such as Rudolph the Red Nosed Reindeer, and the show is accompanied by favorite Christmas music.

My partner and I left John Wanamaker's Christmas wonderland feeling a little sad knowing that hours of studying await us between now and Christmas, yet we still held the Christmas spirit in our hearts.

By IRENE V. LANGRAN
Staff Reporter

A little over a week ago, millions of American families gathered around tables for Thanksgiving dinners. My family was, as many other families undoubtedly were, faced with the annual dilemma — where to seat those left-handers. At our particular table, there were three of us.

Being a southpaw is not always practical. The world is really custom built for right-handed people. Notebook binders, erasable pens, teapots and even suits of armor have all been made for right-handed people.

Left-handed students often leave exams with arms feeling as if they were about to fall off, due to the lack of a proper desk. Most tools can pose problems for left-handed people. In response to this, stores such as one in Maryland have opened to sell tools specifically designed for left-handers.

Throughout history, left-handers have been seen in a largely negative light. Teachers have often forced children to write with their right hand. Dictionary definitions of "left-handed" define it as being awkward, clumsy, poor in penmenship, irrational, unskilled and even devious.

Left-handers were often identified as sinister. The practice of throwing salt over one's left shoulder is to ward off the evil spirits that come from that side.

Despite all this, about one out of every 10 people is a southpaw. There are many theories as to why people are right or left-handed. One theory suggests that people who choose the left hand want to be rebellious and want to "mess things up" on purpose.

One of the most accepted theories on this is one that suggests it has to do with which side of the brain is the dominant side.

The theory goes as follows: The left side of the brain controls the right part of the body. The left side of the brain is also that side of the brain which accounts for verbal, logical, rational, scientific and organized characteristics. The right side of the brain controls the left side of the body, and serves as an opposite, to balance out the left brain.

According to this theory, people dominated by the left brain are right-handed. They tend to be more rational and organized. Left-handers, who are dominated by the right side of the brain, are supposed to be just the opposite. These people are thought to be largely creative and imaginative.

No matter what theory you would like to accept, one thing seems to hold true. Left-handers are just plain different. Despite many negative attitudes throughout time, lefties seem to know one thing — Lefties are really alright.

Campus Ministry

By FR. RAY JACKSON

We are restless people. Whether it is rushing to finish homework so that we can watch television, or feeling stressed because we are caught in a traffic jam, our anxiety meter always seems to be in the red zone.

This is particularly true during the Christmas season when term papers are due and final exams loom in the darkness, as well as the pressures of shopping, buying gifts, writing cards and party-hopping. Psychologists recently coined the acronym SAD (Seasonal Affective Depression) in order to identify the resultant illness of a frenzied holiday season.

But we do not have to feel this way. God has offered us a better way. For Christians the season of Advent is a time of waiting. An expectant mother is our seasonal symbol. The anticipation of a newborn child, the Prince of Peace, the Word made flesh, invites us to replace the holiday frenzy with a reflective and prayerful waiting. Mary's "yes" to the angel Gabriel began the process of a new and wonderful presence of God within the human family.

Waiting, of course, requires patience. Yet patience is not a matter of desperately hoping for things to change. We generally behave the way we think, and if we are restless, anxious and uptight it is often because of an inability to see the whole picture.

Do we not believe that God has entered history? Are we not aware that the child of Mary is a sign of caring and love to a fearful world? Trusting that the God of creation, the giver of life, has come among us in the person of Jesus offers us a vision of life that is both challenging and comforting. We are challenged to love others, even our enemies; we are loved by God through Jesus and his faith community.

Our Advent waiting, a time of remembrance of God's love, should lead to healing and service. Because God loves us, we are called to forgive others, to confess our faults, to acknowledge our limits and ask for mercy. This is a true healing of our soul.

We may donate time at a shelter for the homeless or as a volunteer worker at a local soup kitchen. We can also give generously to the various agencies such as Catholic Charities and the United Way which help the needy.

Advent comes but once a year. Let us wait again in peace for Jesus, the Lord.

Sorority rush computerized

By KATIE REICHNER
Staff Reporter

Formal sorority rush will be computerized next semester, according to Trish LaMotta, the Panhellenic rush chairperson.

The new "Compute-A-Rush" system is expected to save a tremendous amount of time and energy in the often laborious rush process.

"The computer will be able to do in minutes, what has previously taken many people hours to do," said LaMotta. The new system will make party lists, invitations and name tags.

Even more time saving is the system's ability to generate bid lists, and complete bid matching tasks which in the past have created late nights for all sororities.

Although slightly nervous about the first computerized rush, LaMotta is hopeful for a more efficient, smoother and faster rush process in January.

New chapter vetoed

By JILL DEFORTE
Greek Page Editor

A decision not to colonize the national fraternity, Delta Sigma Phi, was recently reached by Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president of Student Life, and his staff.

This conclusion, according to Neville, was based on the extensive size of the current fraternity system at Villanova. Expansion is not a consideration at this time, nor will it be next semester. Neville added that there are presently at least two fraternities that need assistance in building membership.

Gene Stroz, a prospective Delta Sigma Phi brother, stated that the decision was "a great disappointment to the group."

The idea for establishing the fraternity on campus originally arose one year ago. At that time a group of approximately 35 interested students approached Gary Bonus, assistant director of Student Activities, for guidance.

They have since received the recognition of the national fraternity which is in favor of establishing a chapter at Villanova. Alumni support has also been strong and several area Penn State alumni have offered support, financial as well as otherwise.

Delta Sigma Phi was established in 1899 and currently holds the status of 12th largest fraternity in the country. Although Neville's outlook for the future of the fraternity was not hopeful, the students plan to pursue the request to colonize.

Stroz added, "All we were looking for was a chance and they wouldn't give us that chance."

IFC/Panhel workshop

By STEVE DELDUCO
Staff Reporter

On Nov. 14, the Northeastern Inter Fraternity Council (NEIFC) in cooperation with the Northeastern Panhellenic Council (NEPC) held their annual workshop at Gettysburg College.

The workshop, attended by roughly 30 Villanova Greeks and IFC advisor Gary Bonas, as well as representatives from some 10 other schools, consisted of a series of lectures dealing with various Greek concerns.

After an opening session and welcome, Greeks attended one of three lectures given mainly by Greek advisors from the representative schools or from the NEIFC or the NEPC.

During these lectures, the audience got ideas, either from the speaker or through group participation, on how to handle certain problems, or how to run programs within the IFC and Panhel as well as within individual Greek chapters.

After this first series of lectures, there was a luncheon in which Dr. Dru Bagwell, assistant vice chancellor of the University of Maryland and grand president of Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity, gave a speech on why one should become involved in fraternities or sororities.

Bagwell cited such things as social development, and development of leadership qualities as major benefits gained through the Greek system. He also discussed how experiences as a Greek could benefit one after graduation.

After the luncheon, there were two other lecture sessions. Topics covered in the day's lectures included the role of the IFC, drug and alcohol concerns, rush, pledge programs, alumni relations, sexual abuse in the Greek system and effective communication for leaders.

As a whole, the workshop was well-prepared and an informative experience for all those who attended.

Doctor speaks on arthritis

By MARYANN MOSA
Staff Reporter

On Nov. 10, AOII welcomed Dr. David Beven of the Philadelphia College of Osteopathic Medicine. Beven addressed an audience of AOII sisters and Villanova students on arthritis.

Beven gave a main overview of the disease and its major types using slides to illustrate his points.

Arthritis research is AOII's philanthropy. The Villanova chapter recently finished the Phantom Florist, one of its major fundraisers for research. Julie Barksdale, chairperson of philanthropy and fundraising, stated that over 800 roses were sold and delivered Oct. 30. Excess roses were donated to the Bryn Mawr Hospital and the Villanova chapel.

Philadelphia sparkles with spirit

By STEVEN McCHESNEY
Staff Reporter

The Christmas season in Philadelphia is a warm treat for the senses and the spirit. There is no better time to experience the charm of this city and its endearing traditions.

The stately beauty of Fairmount Park mansions, the unique character of the neighborhoods and the excitement of Center City shopping are enhanced by the holiday regalia. The urban tapestry becomes a harmonious blend of colonial grace, victorian fantasy and contemporary kitsch. In the coming weeks the season will be in full blossom. Here are a few sugestions for Yuletide events and sights to enjoy and enliven.

THE STORES

Wanamaker's (East Market at City Hall). The grande dame of Philadelphia's department stores. Beautifully decorated. Overwhelming Main Court with restaurant on the upper balcony to view the light show.

Strawbridge and Clothier's (8th and Market) Another Philadelphia favorite, features a walk-through Dickensian Christmas village. Great food hall.

The Gallery (10th and Market). Urban shopping mall with a few good stores. A lot of junk but worth a look.

Mellon Independence Center (7th and Market). Newly renovated historic buildings with shops and offices. A gem.

The Bourse (5th between Market and Chestnut). In the historic area, also a jewel of fine boutiques and gift shops. Christmas carolers, food and wine for shoppers. Gorgeous.

New Market/Headhouse Square (2nd and Pine). Charming pubs, knick knack shops and pastry shops. Close to South Street for the less conventional Christmas list.

Walnut Street (between 15th and 25th). High priced boutiques, Burberry's and Nan Duskin. Elegant window shopping for a student budget.

THE DISPLAYS

Center Square Towers (15th and Market). "Galaxy of Trees" in the lobby. There are 50 artificial trees all uniquely decorated by the Junior League. From Dec. 7 to Dec. 17.

Grand Court, Wanamaker's (East Market at City Hall). A four-story high spectacle of lights, music and dancing fountains relives the Christmas stories. For decades, a treat for children and adults alike.

The City Christmas Trees (West City Hall). The serenely lit trees make for a pretty picture with City Hall at night.

South Broad Street (from City Hall to Locust). Standing at Locust, a postcard perfect view of a row of white light trees suspended from the office buildings over the street. Walk to City Hall and enjoy the decorations of the banks and hotels.

The Great Train, Dollhouse and Toy Show (The Civic Center, 34th and Civic Center Boulevard). Everyone's Christmas morning dream come true. Dec. 12-13. (823-7400)

Many churches and schools throughout the city hold small concerts of sacred and popular music of the season. Keep your ears open for these intimate musical experiences.

THE BALLET

The Pennsylvania Ballet at the Academy of Music. No one should miss this production of Tchaikovsky's "The Nutcracker," one of the country's finest presentation of the Christmas tale of princes and sugar-plume fairies. Dec. 16-Jan. 2 Tickets $9-45. (735-5296)

(File Photo)

Two members of the Pennsylvania Ballet Company perform in "The Nutcracker" which is running Dec. 16-Jan. 2.

THE THEATER

"A Christmas Carol," dramatic rendition of the Dickens tale. Port of History Museum (Delaware Ave. at Walnut St.) The Philadelphia Area Repertory Theater. (922-1038)

These are just a few of the many wonderful things going on in town for the Christmas season. A 20-minute train ride takes you right to the middle of all of this. Get a map, make an effort, break away from the books and experience a Philadelphia Christmas.

Mellencamp raises the dead with his Jubilee

By KEVIN HECHT
Senior Reporter

To say it short and sweet, on two cold November nights in Philadelphia, John Cougar Mellencamp performed concerts that could have risen the dead.

The stocky, guitar wheeling hoosier rocked before capacity crowds that had not seen this much energy in concert since Springsteen last graced the Spectrum stage, and who probably will not see it again for some time to come.

Mellencamp, backed by the clever use of a diversified group of musicians, that included Lisa Germano on fiddle and accordianist John Cascella, got off to an explosive start with "Paper and Fire" and a searing rendition of "Jack and Diane."

The evening's songs were performed in a relentless succession that did not give the crowd, who remained on their feet throughout the entire show, a chance to rest. The first half of the concert was filled with new material from his latest release, The Lonesome Jubilee, and the audience, familiar with the new songs, were treated to well rehearsed and cleverly arranged versions of "Down and Out in Paradise," "Check It Out" and "Empty Hands."

Mellencamp also reached back for material from the 1985 release, Scarecrow, that included "Minutes to Memories," "Rumbleseat" and "Lonely Ol' Night." The chemistry among the band members was magnificent. The background vocals of Crystal Talifero and Pat Peterson added texture to flawlessly performed songs by band members that included Larry Crane and Mike Wanchic on guitar, bassist Toby Myers and Kenny Aronoff on the drums.

After an intermission, Mellencamp and the band returned with the familiar chords of "Smalltown" before diving into the past with "Thundering Hearts" and "Play Guitar."

The songs Mellencamp performs seem to touch an audience, with whom he has a sincere concern for, and he has a genuine chemistry with the fans who see his concerts that very few performers seem to have.

Mellencamp's concern for the American farmer's plight is clearly expressed in "Rain on the Scarecrow," and other songs in the set convey his concerns as well. "Hotdogs and Hamburgers" brilliantly describes the injustices faced by the American Indian, and "Empty Hands" explores the realm of those who have little left to call their own. These songs, as well as his sympathy with the American working class, seemed to draw Mellencamp and a crowd of all ages together throughout nights of simple, but emotionally charged music.

The highlight of the first show was an extended performance of "Pink Houses" as Mellencamp pulled a jean-clad fan onto the stage to sing the final verse. This song, as well as the preceeding set of "The Authority Song" and "Hurts so Good," raised the decibel level of the screaming crowd to an ear piercing maximum as the band returned for an encore performance of "Cherry Bomb" played in a fully lit house before a screaming mass of fans.

Although the Philadelphia Spectrum is a far cry from Mellencamp's humble Indiana roots, the hard working, original musician proved that he truly belongs there, as well as arenas across the country, playing music from his heart, music from one of the best.

Shrapnel in the Heart salutes Vietnam veterans

By ROBERT DUGGAN

Shrapnel in the Heart
by Laura Palmer
Random House
$22.95

Anyone who has ever visited or seen pictures of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C. is aware of the tremendously powerful effect it can have. Along with this general outpouring of feelings, it demands from even the most casual passerby an even greater phenomenon that few people are aware of.

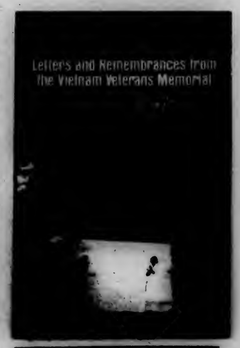
Since its dedication in 1982, thousands of letters, notes and poems have been left by mourners trying to communicate with those whose names are immortalized in the memorial's black granite. Laura Palmer, in her new book, Shrapnel in the Heart, gives us a glimpse at these tokens of love.

Palmer is a journalist who began her career covering the Vietnam War in Saigon. When she was assigned to do an article on the monument, she came across the museum where each one of these messages is stored. After spending an entire year sifting through these messages and tracking down some of their writers, she presents this book as her own message of love to those 58,182 lives lost in a war that helped shape her life.

Shrapnel in the Heart takes over where the monument left off. Where the monument gave the huge, forgotten masses a place to have their names inscribed, Palmer's book gives some of these names, faces and mothers and wives, and tells a story of sadness, love and courage so cold, black granite can ever convey.

Each of the 37 individual stories told begins with a picture of the deceased. The fact that the Vietnam War took its greatest toll on the young, strikes painfully as one looks into the innocent eyes of the baby-faced men the book centers upon.

Palmer then reprints the message left at the monument. Mothers writing to sons they know are in heaven; wives writing to husbands they will always love; girlfriends writing to men who would have become their husbands if they had only returned; children writing to fathers they have been told they resemble, but have never met.



These are the tokens of love that are not only expressions of sorrow, but also testimonies to the courage of these now gone, and those who have gone on without them, never forgetting.

Although most of the writers admit they know nothing of writing poetry, much of this correspondence takes the form of verse. Lacking the polish of a more accomplished hand, these poems shine more for the raw emotion they contain than for any specific poetic conventions. One writer remarked that her poems "wrote themselves" and it is this intense honesty and sincerity that makes them all the more memorable.

These messages are followed up by an interview with the writer. Reading these painful recountings of personal loss and how these people have dealt with their grief, I was struck by the inadequacy of films such as "Platoon." The war was fought just as much in America as it was in Vietnam, and these people are as much veterans as those who officially served. Where "Platoon" concentrated solely on Vietnam, Shrapnel in the Heart brings us the news from "the home front."

Palmer gives a highly detailed,

Tommyknockers invade Maine

The Tommyknockers
by Stephen King
G.P. Putnam's Sons

Stephen King continues to satisfy the appetites of his many die-hard fans by releasing his second novel in the last three months. The Tommyknockers is a novel which combines extraterrestrial forces with a small, unsuspecting town in order to create the ultimate in suspense and horror.

The action begins when novelist Bobbi Anderson accidentally trips over a small piece of metal in the ground. She attempts to remove the object, but is unsuccessful.

However, Anderson becomes obsessed with the object and begins to devote all of her time to digging it up. Meanwhile, her ex-lover and best friend Jim Gardener (Gard) is travelling with a poetry caravan throughout the state. Following a drunken brawl concerning nuclear power, Gard awakens after an eight-day blackout and is about to kill himself when he suddenly becomes aware that Anderson is in trouble.

He hitchhikes to Anderson's home in Haven (which is located near Derry, Maine, where It was set) and does not even recognize her because of her emaciated condition.

While she sleeps, he explores the house and discovers an array of inventions that have been created out of household appliances. The next day, after talking with Anderson, he finds out that she is telepathic and has experienced various physical and mental changes.

Gard does not like the object's effects on Anderson, but because of her persistence, he agrees to help her dig up what turns out to be a large, silver spaceship. Up to this point, the entire plot revolved around the lives of Anderson and Gard. However, as more and more of the ship becomes uncovered, it begins to affect the people who reside in the town of Haven.

Here, King introduces a variety of the townspeople and allows the reader to feel as though he knows them personally. He devotes a great deal of time to developing their characters and telling the reader their background and place in the community. They become a major part of the plot because they show the power that the ship possesses.

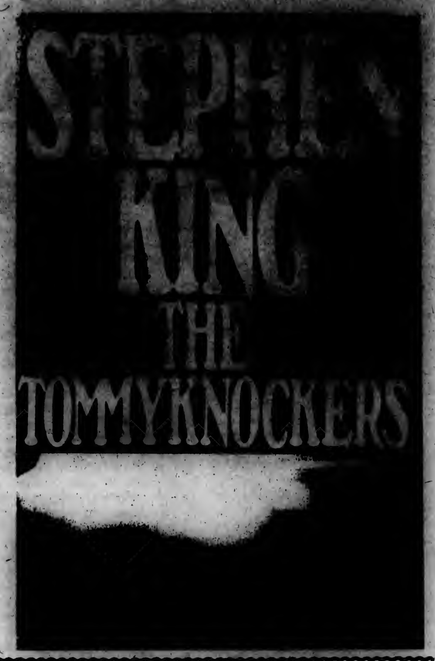
King also uses a very different technique when he explains the important scenes in the novel. He tells what happens first and then in the following chapter, shows what led up to the previous action.

It took me by surprise at first, but I became accustomed to it and this method added to the novel's appeal. As examples of this would be when King tells the audience Billy Brown and Hattie Pittsburgh disappear. After this occurrence, King proceeds to spend the next few chapters explaining what led up to this unbelievable occurrence.

Other strange happenings began to occur throughout the town. One woman had a picture of Jesus Christ sitting on her television set and it began to talk. Today.

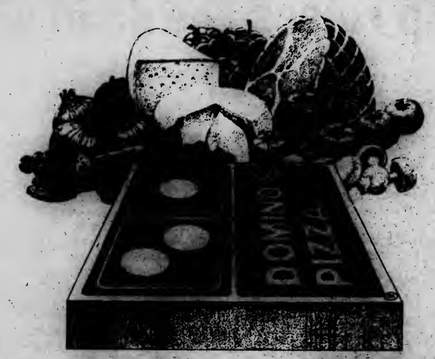
Beyond logic to undergo a transformation which was slowly turning them into telepathic Tommyknockers. King goes into great detail in this section of the novel, making the reader aware of all of the changes that the townspeople are experiencing inside their own minds as well as their bodies.

The Tommyknockers is a novel which combines extraterrestrial forces with a small, unsuspecting town in order to create the ultimate in suspense and horror.



At this point, the novel began to branch out into too many directions and this took away from its effectiveness. It would have been better if he would have kept developing the main characters of Anderson and Gard instead of spending so much time with the personal lives of many different people in Haven. Besides this one flaw, The Tommyknockers is one of King's better novels.

One interesting aspect about the novel is that King puts a great deal of emphasis on the problems and concerns of today's world. Through the character of Jim Gardener, he deals with the danger of nuclear power and how it threatens the well-being of the world each and every day.



He cites recent examples such as the accidents at Three Mile Island and Chernobyl to show his concerns about the world's safety. King also uses more violence and sex than usual to keep up with the times and hold the reader's undivided attention.

The novel takes a science-fiction approach that is not seen in other King story lines. He combines aliens from outer space with his customary horror technique to form an interesting combination.

Like every other Stephen King novel, The Tommyknockers is filled with suspense and leads up to a shocking conclusion that leaves the reader breathless. He seems to get better every time he writes a new novel, as he grabs the reader at the start and does not let go until the final page is turned.

The Big Generator satisfies the Spectrum

By TIM DANIELS
Staff Reporter

Yes rolled into the Spectrum under the energy of The Big Generator for two shows, Nov. 29 and 30. Returning for the first time since the 1984 summer tour supporting 90125, the band mixed recent material with an excellent complement of their classsics.

The impressive layout utilized the inclined stage of last tour. The white, daimond-shaped stage provided platforms for the keyboards and drums, along with runways to the left and right edges of the arena that the other performers often emplyed. The stage was oddly bare, with the keyboard stand notably scaled down and a remarkable lack of monitors for the players.

The band opened the show with the energetic "Almost Like Love." This proved to be a fine opener as Jon Anderson absorbed the excitement of the crowd, hopping throughout the song within his stately, ivory robes. Allen White received the initial individual introduction from Anderson as his drumming closed "Almost Like Love," one of four songs performed from the new album, The Big Generator. "Hold On" was the first song of three songs drawn from the 90125 material. Anderson's opening vocal performances would remain excellent through the entire show.

"Heart of the Sunrise" from the 1971 album Fragile was a delightful surprise. Bassist Chris Squire led the band into the song, which in Anderson's introductory assessment, "relates the power of the sun." Yes cooked the Spectrum, and was rewarded with a thundering ovation that was so enduring the band eventually took a seat on one of the monitors to await order.

Guitarist Trevor Raybin sang the lead to "Changes," but for the second song in a row, unmistakably missed his initial jump-in on guitar. This was probably accounted for by the mixing problems the band experienced throughout the show — instruments and vocals were repeatedly lost from the sound. Overall, however, the sound was good and set at an effective volume.

Smoke rolled over the stage as Squire oncce again paced the introduction for "Big Generator." This and the following song, "Aim High, Shoot Low," featured a number of acrobatic guitar parts by Raybin. The keyboards of Tony Kaye also emerged into prominence.

"Holy Lamb" lowered the mood with the soulful singing of Anderson. Raybin played acoustic guitar for the first time, accompanied by Kaye. Scenes of crashing seas were interestingly displayed on a 12-foot spherical ballon-video screen. Raybin followed with a fine acoustic solo that was very well received.

Anderson returned to the stage for "Owner of a Lonely Heart." Kaye's keyboards were featured in this, and the beginning to "Yours Is No Disgrace." During this, Raybin's solo was the best recreation of former guitarist Steve Howe's for the entire show. Squire, as always, held a phenomenal bass line. White finally helped Raybin out of this solo with his crashing drum beat.

Squire used his solo performance to produce "Amazing Grace," before leading the band into the epic, four section "And You and I." White's drumming throughout was his best of the night. Squire added harmonica to the fine lead guitar and keyboards for a sustained ending.

An all instrumental "Starship Trooper" was launched with Squire aiming his growling bass at each corner of the stage. Kaye's jam almost knocked over his keyboards. The Raybin reinterpretation of Howe's guitar came across better than it did last tour.

Yes made an odd choice to open the encore. However, "Love Will Find The Way," did receive a good response from the many fans of the new album. "I've Seen All Good People" really got the crowd singing. Anderson's vocals followed the keyboards of Kaye superbly.

The band left the stage only to return once again for their anthem, "Roundabout." Raybins acoustic introduction immediately identified the distinctive tune to the awaiting fans.

Yes definitely satisfied the Spectrum crowd with a very good two and a half hour show. They wisely did not get caught up with selling their new album by bombarding the crowd with The Big Generator. They performed many of their classics with the precision owed to them. Yes has proven that they love on in the 1980's.

Yes headlined a two-night stint at the Spectrum on Nov. 29 and 30.

BERMUDA COLLEGE WEEKS

When you break away this year, do it with style.

Your College Week in Bermuda is more than just sun, sand and surf.

Right from the first outrageous "College Bash" at Elbow Beach, it's a week of unrelenting pleasure.

Spectacular seaside buffet luncheons. A calypso and limbo festival like none other. Smashing dance-til-you-drop beach parties, featuring Bermuda's top rock, steel and calypso bands. Even a "Party Cruise." All compliments of the Bermuda Department of Tourism.

Bermuda is all of this—and much, much more. It's touring the island on our breezy mopeds.

It's jogging on quiet country roads—including an early morning 2-k "Fun Run" from Horseshoe Bay. It's exploring the treasures in our international shops, playing golf on eight great courses, and tennis on over 100 island-wide courts.

But most of all, it's the feeling you get on a tiny, flower-bedecked island, separated from everywhere and everything by 600 miles of sea.

This year, break away with style. See your Campus Travel Representative or Travel Agent for details.

*College Weeks packages not available week of April 10-16.

On the scene . . . Entertainment tidbits

By STEPHEN POWERS
Staff Reporter

Move over, Oprah and Donahue, there is a new daytime talk show on the horizon, and it will be hosted by none other than G. Gordon Liddy of Watergate fame.

The self-titled "talk-confrontation" series is slated to hit the air next fall. However, the pilot episode is being taped in New York later this month, and Liddy has lined up some pretty impressive guests, including Democratic Presidential candidate Jesse Jackson and Delaware Senator Joseph Biden.

The talk show comes on the heels of Liddy's budding acting career; he has appeared on such prime-time series as "Miami Vice," "Airwolf" and "Beans Baxter." And, Liddy will soon make the jump to the big screen — he plays an FBI instructor in the up-coming feature "G-Men." Can Ollie North's Hollywood debut be far behind? . . . On the movie scene, the Christmas film season has officially begun. Christmas is one of the year's prime movie seasons, when people tend to go out more and attendance at theaters increases, so the movie studios release their biggest films.

Arnold Schwarzenegger's "Running Man" promises to be one of the season's biggest hits. Also doing big business at the box-office in "Three Men and a Baby," featuring the trio of Tom Selleck, Ted Danson and Steve Guttenberg, and directed by Leonard Nimoy, the co-star and frequent director of the "Star Trek" movies.

John Hughes ("Sixteen Candles," and "The Breakfast Club") takes his first stab at "adult" movies with Steve Martin and John Candy in "Planes, Trains and Automobiles," which did extremely well in its opening weekend.

Rounding out the major releases are the critically acclaimed films "Nuts" starring Barbra Streisand and Richard Dreyfuss, and the Cher-Nicholas Cage comedy "Moonstruck," and Disney's re-release of the classic "Cinderella."

One movie that is not doing very well is "Teen Wolf Too," the sequel to the 1986 Michael J. Fox comedy hit. One of the reasons the original fared well was because it was released shortly after Fox's blockbuster "Back to the Future." Fox does not even appear in the sequel (he is too big of a star to do B-movies anymore); instead, Jason Bateman of NBC's "Valerie's Family" stars as Fox's cousin, who has also inherited the werewolf's curse.

Critics have trashed "Teen Wolf Too," and not even Bateman, who practically stole "Valerie" from former co-star Valerie harper, is able to save the film.

Pierce Brosnan is following the trend of television stars who are making the transition to feature films. Brosnan, who played the title role in "Remington Steele," is currently on location in India shooting "The Deceivers."

Another Brosnan film, "Raffin" (shot in Brosnan's native Ireland) is due out early next year. Brosnan has not given up TV entirely — he has a starring role in the NBC miniseries version of James Clavell's "Noble House," to air in May. He also continues to appear in those entertaining 007-style Diet Coke commercials. Fans may remember that Brosnan lost the James Bond role in "The Living Daylights" to Timothy Dalton when "Remington Steele" was briefly revived.

SHORT TAKES: Wheel of Fortune, currently the nation's number one rated game show, will soon be getting some competition in Philadelphia. "Win, Lose or Draw," a charades-style game hosted by Bert Convy, premieres on Channel 10 next month. "Win" has already substantially cut into "Wheel's" audience in other cities. However, "Wheel" producer King World is not worried. It is currently making plans for a game show version of the popular board game Monopoly, set to debut next fall.

Bad news for "Dynasty" fans (if there are any left): rumors are flying at ABC that the Wednesday night soap will go out of production permanently in March. "Dynasty" has been the victim of falling ratings for the past few years and is said to be on its last legs.

Last spring's hit "Lethal Weapon" is playing at Connelly Center tonight. The Mel Gibson action-thriller is first rate, and both Gibson and co-star Danny Glover ("The Color Purple") give fine performances. "Lethal Weapon" also happens to be on top of Billboard's video rental charts this week.

Belinda Carlisle's "Heaven is a Place on Hearth" tops Bill-board's singles chart. The "Dirty Dancing" soundtrack is the nation's most popular LP for the fourth week in a row.

Former PTL evangelists Jim and Tammy Bakker told "Entertainment Tonight" that they would love to be actual guests on "Church Chat," the PTL-style spoof on "Saturday Night Live." Last season, the Bakkers (played by "SNL" cast members) were grilled by the Church Lady (Dana Carvey).

Speaking of the Church Lady, we have not been seeing too much of her on this season's "SNL" episodes. Dana Carvey explains that he does not want to be pigeonholed in one role, and that he may have to "euthanize" the Church Lady later on in the season.

'Barfly' looks at the problems of alcoholism

By JOE MC GOWAN
Senior Reporter

"Barfly"
directed by Barbet Schroeder
Cannon Films

Barbet Schroeder's "Barfly" opens with the camera panning towards a seedy little Hollywood bar as a back alley brawl rages, and ends with the camera panning outwards from the same establishment while yet another brawl gets under way.

The combatants are the barman Eddie (Frank Stallone) and patron Henry Chinaski (Mickey Rourke), the latest silver screen alcoholic. As Chinaski, Rourke never has a sober moment, lurching around back streets and picking fights with Eddie, the bartender at his favorite dive. Though Rourke has never looked worse, this is his best role in ages.

"Barfly" follows Henry for a brief period of his career as an alcoholic. Though Henry is secretly enamored of writing and classical music, his working hours are spent staring into the bottom of the nearest bottle or glass. Henry simply does not want to be anything, and questions what rule there is that orders everyone to be something.

But Henry is something — an alcoholic. What little money he wins from a brawl he promptly spends at another bar. Meeting Wanda (Faye Dunaway), a fellow barfly, complicates things, and so does the arrival of Tully (Alice Krige), a wealthy magazine editor interested in publishing Henry's short stories.

Both Dunaway and Rourke have been touted as possible Oscar nominees for their roles, but Rourke's Henry captures the film with his desperate sense of humor.

Both Dunaway and Rourke have been touted as possible Oscar nominees for their roles, but Rourke's Henry captures the film with his desperate sense of humor. In one particular drunken stupor, Henry winds up in the wrong apartment and immediately raids the refrigerator and liquor cabinet. In another, armed with the money from a published story, he buys rounds of drinks for his fellow drunks, and then quickly picks a fight with the bartender.

All of "Barfly" is suffused with the darkest sense of humor possible. Henry's bar mates, in particular, are singled out for comic treatment. There are foul-mouthed, aging prostitutes and lifelong alcoholics where Henry drinks and drinks, and on the night that he buys the rounds, a virtual squadron of teetering old drunks stumbles happily into the bar.

Rourke's Henry is both funny and pitiable, and in this strange but demanding role Rourke excedes his prior performances in "The Pope of Greenwich Village," "The Year of the Dragon" and "9½ Weeks." And it is his Henry, the literate lush with the unkempt locks shading his bruised and unshaven face, that seems to be stumbling towards an Oscar nomination.

Russ Ceccola,
Thanks for the flowers. Now, about that hair . . .
Love,
your metal chicks

Weatherman promotes patriotism in first novel

America Is My Neighborhood
by Willard Scott
Simon and Schuster

A chunky, heavy set man nicely dressed in a blue jacket, striped tie and light blue cowboy hat displays a round-faced grin from rosy cheek to rosy cheek accompanied by a thumb pushed away from a closed hand pointing to an intriguing background.

It is a neighborhood with a long two-way street, cars nestled together on the sides under leafless trees. Houses stretch as far as the eye can see, and are covered by a beautiful sky made of cascading blue darkening to the heavens.

A new building is being erected in the corner of the scene, probably a shopping mall where wives can teach innocent daughters how to put money back into the business cycle. Hey, it is good for society, right dad! This neighborhood most likely resembles yours, except for one thing; this setting is the book cover for Willard Scott's first book, AMERICA, Is My Neighborhood.

For those of you not familiar with Willard Scott, he is the humorous weatherman for the "Today" show with hosts Jane Pauley and, your friend and mine, Bryant Gumball. He has established a home in the hearts of most Americans, and only enhances his patriotic charm with this inspirational book.

Scott gained recognition as more than just your average weatherman when he went against the advice of his superiors and congratulated a man named Uncle Clarence on his 100th birthday. From then on the requests have been coming in from all over the country to announce 100th birthdays, and this special group has been given the distinction as The Century Club.

Scott claims, "It is through them, and only through them, that we will be able to build an effective bridge from our past to the future."

Nowadays, it seems everybody is writing novels, yet I felt this was well done. A cute and delightful book, but Shakespeare can rest easy because this is no literary threat to his works. Willard Scott does not claim to be any great genius, like Kurt Vonnegut, in this book. He simply offers stories of some amazing people he has met on his expansive travels through the United States.

Before each chapter begins, Scott shows a photo to enrich the reading, and even exhibits himself dressed up as Carmen Miranda, Boy George and Ronald McDonald. This is truly a book that has something to say about the diversity and charm of America. Most stories come from either New York, California, or my state, Pennsylvania.

Scott goes from a geniune old-fashioned milkman; to a brave child who overcame leukemia; a house unbelievably decorated for Christmas and a mayor who is so close to the people his phone number is still listed in the local phone book.

I was very excited to see a friend from this immediate area who was given a chapter. His name is Jim Murray and he resides in Rosemont. Former General Manager of the Philadelphia Eagles, Murray was the inspiration behind the very successful and heart-warming Ronald McDonald Houses, which sprouted from the Eagles Fly For Leukemia, begun by Murray.

I really enjoyed Scott's wit, and the book is sure to be a success because it is obvious Scott wrote this for America, and not for the fame of the weatherman or the "Today" show.

personalized portrait of each story. With a minimum of moralizing, she gives the simple, honest facts and lets the words of those who have lost speak for themselves. Anything she would add would be purely superfluous. It is through this discretion that Palmer speaks volumes about her personal concern for these people.

Amidst the great barrage of Vietnam awareness today, this book is a fine example of what non-fiction can do that fiction cannot. Movies and novels can carry important messages, but the reality of books such as this carries these messages much, much further.

Profound sadness does permeate this book, as it would any story of irreparable loss, but this sadness is tempered with a love and a courage "that bombs cannot shatter and bullets cannot kill." The author describes her purpose best when she writes, "The Vietnam Veterans Memorial enabled a nation to say, 'They were ours.'" This book offers the simple rejoinder "Yes, and he was mine."

Streisand explores sanity in compelling drama

By ELANA ROSE STARR
Staff Reporter

"Nuts" directed by Martin Ritt

After a four-year hiatus from the big screen, Barbra Streisand makes a triumphant return in "Nuts," a compelling drama about a woman who must do battle in court to prove her sanity.

Claudia Draper is a high-class call girl who has killed one of her "johns" in self-defense and is facing charges of first-degree manslaughter. The big-name attorney hired by Draper's parents pleads that she is incompetent to stand trial and attempts to have her declared legally insane. Draper, however, wants a trial and decides to fight those trying to lock her away, perhaps forever, in an institution.

Streisand gives a well-modulated performance as Draper. Often accused by her detractors of stridence and histrionics, Streisand does incorporate those elements in her portrayal, but only when appropriate. Draper is a very complex woman, and Streisand imbues her with humor, honor, intelligence and wistfulness, as well as belligerence. Most importantly, Streisand's Draper is wholly believable.

As with most of her films, Streisand is definitely the star and the center of attention. However, considering the acting luminaries who co-star — including Richard Dreyfuss, Eli Wallach, James Whitmore, and Maureen Stapleton and Karl Malden as her parents — this is no mean feat.

Dreyfuss, who plays Draper's beleaguered court-appointed attorney, is particularly good, which comes as no surprise. In less than two years, he has turned out stellar performances in four other tours-de-force (in "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," "Tin Men," "Stand By Me" and "Stake Out").

Martin Ritt, with films such as "Hud" and "Norma Rae" to his credit, is known as a "humanist director," and thus was the perfect choice to direct "Nuts," with its questioning theme of how to define sanity, and who among us is sane. He very pointedly draws analogies between the hallowed courtrooms and the mental hospital; both have metal bars on every window, and the psychiatrists and some of the legal minds seem a lot crazier than some of the so-called insane patients.

Ritt's camera work is excellent, as well. While most of the action occurs either in the courtroom or the mental hospital (the film is based on a stage play by Tom Topor), Ritt's fluid camera keeps the film from stagnating. He also interjects artful flashbacks, chronicling both the murder and scenes from Draper's childhood.

Much of the film's success must also be credited to its script-writers, Darryl Ponicsan ("Taps," "Vision Quest"), Alvin Sargeant ("Paper Moon," "Ordinary People") and Tom Topor. Until "Nuts," Ponicsan (who has a walk-on in this film) and Sargeant had always worked solo. However, through an oversight, both men were hired as the screenwriters for "Nuts," and they agreed to collaborate with Topor. The three produced a sizzling script that is both poignant and spiked with humor.

With "Yentl," her last film, Steisand wore many hats (including producer, director and singer-songwriter, as well as star), and with "Nuts" she has done the same. Once again, Streisand is the producer, and it has been said that she had a hand in the screenplay, as well. She also wrote the film's musical score.

When "Yentl" failed to receive any major Academy Award nominations, many of Streisand's fans were disgruntled. Some claimed that the film was ignored as retribution for Streisand's trying to break into Hollywood's Old Boy network.

Whatever the reasons for the snub, it will not happen again with "Nuts." This film is a sure bet to garner several Oscar nominations, including two for Streisand, as producer and best actress.

Music for the Masses provides easy listening

Music for the Masses
Depeche Mode
Sire Records Company

Depeche Mode's newest album Music for the Masses does not quite live up to its name. Although it proved to be enjoyable, it can not be certain whether all the "masses" would enjoy this album.

Music for the Masses is mellower than their previous album Black Celebration. It lacks the danceable tunes their last album had, but Depeche Mode still continues to produce a good album. Although it may seem mellower, a steady beat is there to provide catchiness and unforgettable songs.

The members of this London based band include: Andrew Fletcher, Martin Gore, Alan Wilder and David Gahan. Gore writes all the songs and Gahan does the lead vocals. All of Depeche Mode's songs are synthesized. Depeche Mode proves that the use of synthesizers creates some new and innovative music.

Music for the Masses debuted high in America and remains very high on the British album charts. The first song on the album, "Never Let Me Down Again" is an excellent tune and it currently tops the dance track charts. Danceable is not exactly the word for it — it is more like almost danceable. The video for "Never Let Me Down Again" is also getting a great deal of airplay on MTV.

The second song, "The Things You Said" is a personal favorite of mine. It is a pretty and a gentle tune, both lyrically and musically. An example of some lyrics are: "I heard it from a friend/ About the things you said/ They know me better than that . . . They know my weaknesses."

"Strangelove," the next song on the album is also on the dance track charts. "Strangelove" is probably the most upbeat song on the entire album. It might even be the candidate for their next video.

On Side 2 another ballad, "Nothing," has strong yet simple and short lyrics. For example, "Life/ Is full of surprises/ It advertises/ Nothing."

Also worth noting on the second side is "Pleasure, Little Treasure," another one of those pop-ish upbeat songs. The use of the [illegible] makes [illegible] and [illegible] lyrics like "Everybody looking for a reason to live/ If you're looking for a reason/ Two reasons maybe."

The remaining [illegible] songs on the second side and are all instrumentals. After listening to them you get to know why they were "extras." For example one song "Pimpf" is a scary, haunting, almost devilish type song. "Pimpf" is something that you would hear as a theme to a horror movie.

All the songs, excluding the "extras," are an example of Depeche Mode's best work. Every song has an individuality about it. Sometimes the meaning of the lyrics are hard to understand, though the words themselves are clear cut and simple. The songs are memorable and the lyrics are sung with crispness and clarity.

Although it will not reach all the masses, Depeche Mode's new album will certainly reach quite a few. Depeche Mode provides for easy listening and is doing well on the charts.

Depeche Mode fans should definitely purchase Music for the Masses. If something different is what you are looking for, the group is definitely ready for new fans to appreicate their fine music.

Interview with Beru Revue proves insightful

By DIANE DRAGONETTE
Staff Reporter

One of Philadelphia's most popular bands, Beru Revue, thrives on keeping the fun in music. Beru Revue guarantees an unforgettable night out each time they hit the stage. During a recent interview with Bob Beru and Greg Davis, I gained some interesting insights about the band.

Beru Revue has been rocking the Phildelphia area for a little over six years. Lead singer, Beru, enthralls audiences with his charismatic personality while Davis tears the roof off with red-hot guitar playing. Germaine Phelps, the sole female member, masters keyboards and guitar as the percussion section provides the pulse with Johnny Sacks on bass and Tom Pinto on drums. Together these five unique personalities create the zany atmosphere that is Beru Revue.

Jimi Hendrix, Led Zeppelin and David Bowie are a few of the band's many influences. When describing Beru Revue's music, Davis commented, "Basically we're a rock band, but we don't like to put a category on it and limit ourselves. Each song takes on a different direction."

Beru Revue's live shows are the most addictive and unusual spectacles that I have ever attended. The audience participates throughout the entire show, mimicking Beru's every move. Beru explained, "We just go out there, because when we communicate with the crowd through eye contact and smiles, it's not calculated moves."

When I first saw Beru Revue, they used props and costume to supplement their show. Beru discussed why the band has cut down on the theatrics. "The props began to take the focus away from the band and get in the way of our communication with the audience." Some props still sneak in occasionally, but the five people on stage are what makes Beru Revue's show a special event.

Beru Revue's live shows are the most addictive and unusual spectacles I have ever attended.

Although Beru Revue is based in Philadelphia, the band has brought their show to various clubs along the East Coast. One of Beru Revue's most exciting gigs was opening up for Culture Club at the Spectrum. Davis said, "The Spectrum was the most memorable in the sense that it was our dream to play there. We also have a lot of very memorable club gigs."

In 1981, Beru Revue released an EP entitled I Got A Job and it was followed by the live LP Be Careful Tonight. The band is currently in the studio working on material for a second independent LP. When asked for a release date, Davis and Beru both responded, "soon." The album will be available in the tri-state area as all as Maryland and lower New York.

When Beru Revue writes songs and puts out an album, they are more concerned with quality than popularity. Beru explained, "It's more important that our album will stand up to time. I want to put out an album that will mean something to someone at a certain point in their life rather than have an album which will be a hit for a month and then sit in the closet."

Davis continued, "Another important factor with our album will be using the freedoms of the studio without losing that live feel."

When offering suggestions for college bands, Beru joked, "Take economics, take accounting."

Davis concluded, "Be yourself. Don't get discouraged after three bad shows because something always breaks down, and it's never going to be perfect. If you can live it, then go with it."

What the members of Beru Revue do best is be themselves. Beru Revue rocks hard and delivers much more than the value of a cover charge. Treat yourself to a night out with Beru Revue and discover what good times are all about.

Lizzy Borden screeches Visual Lies at Pulsations

By RUSS CECCOLA
Senior Reporter

Pulsations Night Club in nearby Glen Mills, Pa. hosted yet another in their "Metal Mondays" concert series Nov. 23. Lizzy Borden and Shok Paris are touring the country together in support of their latest albums, and local favorites Deadly Belssing hopped onto the bill, too. The show was incredible and all of the bands put out their best.

Deadly Blessing opened their show with "Search and Destroy," one of the tunes from their album that will be released soon. The band has a strong following in their hometown, Philadelphia, and this was their second appearance at Pulsations.

The featured performer of the night was the underrated excellence of the band and singer, both of the same name, Lizzy Borden.

Other songs included "Medusa," "Deliver Us From Evil" and their theme song, "Deadly Blessing." The band's great combination of fast metal, melody and thrash will make them a force to be reckoned with in the future.

Shok Paris is touring in support of their second release, Steel and Starlight. The band's previous album, Go For The Throat, did well in the metal market and put the state of Ohio on the map as a contributor to the metal legions. Shok Paris played a few songs from Steel and Starlight as well as tracks from their first release.

Shok Paris consists of Vic Hix (vocals), Ken Erb and Eric Marderwald (guitars), Kel Berkshire (bass) and Jan Roll (drums). They performed "Hot on Your Feet," "Fallin' For You," "Steel and Starlight" and the single from the album, "Go Down Fighting," as their last number. Shok Paris exhibited an energy that only can be experienced live and their name will easily become more well known.

The featured performer of the night was the underrated excellence of the band and singer, both of the same name, Lizzy Borden. Lizzy Borden, the band, is made up of Lizzy (vocals), Gene Allen and J. Holmes (guitars), Joey Scott (drums) and Mychal Davis (bass). The guys in the band are fun people and very dedicated to creating melodic, horrific metal.

Past shows have seen Lizzy covered in blood and doing such controversial things as beating up Santa Claus with a baseball bat and killing others with his famous axe. On this year's tour, Lizzy eliminated almost all of the blood gimmicks in keeping with the concept of the new album, Visual Lies. However, Lizzy still spit blood during "Visions" and ripped apart a little teddy bear.

Lizzy Borden played almost all of the songs from Visual Lies. Opening with "Den of Thieves," Lizzy Borden also performed "Lord of the Flies," "Outcast," "Eyes of a Stranger," the hit song "Me Against the World," and "Shock" from Visual Lies. Mixing these newer, more polished songs with the older, gut-wrenching classics like "Red Rum," "Love Kills" and "Give Em the Axe" proved to be an especially effective setup for the live show.

Lizzy Borden saved "Shock" for an encore and came back to do their great anthem, "American Metal," for another encore. In between, the dialogue that is the song "Terror Rising" was played to excite the crowd even more. Balloons, dropped on the crowd from the Pulsations space ship, riled up the audience even more to bang their heads in appreciation for Lizzy Borden's appearance.

Lizzy's screeching vocals and the other band members' talents combine well live to show that Lizzy Borden is about to break the barrier to larger concert halls.

Dokken rocks with new explosive metal album

By JEFF GILLIES
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Back For The Attack
Dokken
Elektra/Asylum Records
★★½

Back For The Attack, the latest release from Dokken, offers hard rock and heavy metal fans a solid, 13 song collection of vivacious rock and roll. After the huge success of Dokken's last album, Under Lock and Key, there was a great deal of pressure on the band to produce an album that could follow it without simply replicating it. Apparently, the band responds well to pressure. Back For The Attack is the group's fourth album, and although it is distinctly Dokken, it is by no means Under Lock And Key 2.

Even though I feel Back For The Attack is not as good as the band's previous efforts, it still rocks hard on its own right. After all, there really is not one bad song on the album. This is an impressive accomplishment considering that there are 13 songs on it.

Side 1 opens with "Kiss of Death," a scorching, fast paced tune which combines the talents of the entire band. Guitarist George Lynch starts the song off with a steady, repeated riff. His playing is well complimented by the incredible drumming of Mick Brown. In my opinion, Lynch and Brown are two of the most underrated heavy metal musicians around today.

The screaming vibrations from Lynch's guitar, fading into a powerful drum beat, introduce the next song. "Prisoner" is comparable to "Breaking the Chains" from the album of the same name, in that the lyrics talk about the "chains of love." A heavy set drum beat and a strong bass undertone keep the song flowing until it ends abruptly as singer Don Dokken shouts the chorus.

Even though I feel Back for the Attack is not as good as the band's previous efforts, it still rocks hard on its right.

"Night By Night" and "Standing in the Shadows" are showcases for the talents of Lynch and Brown. The drumming of Brown is nothing short of overpowering, much in the style of Led Zeppelin's late great John Bonham. Lynch has proven himself to be an innovative and skilled guitarist. His work throughout the album is simply spectacular.

"Heaven Sent" begins with Jeff Pilson's bass and is quickly followed by lightly tapped cymbals. This emerges into a typical heavy metal rhythm. Dokken's voice is strong and sure, as he does an excellent job of carrying the lyrics. Lynch performs a dazzling solo and dominates the end of the song as echoing vocals bring it to a close.

The last song of the side, "Mr. Scary," is not up to par with the rest of the album. Although it is entertaining and contains some amazing artistry from Brown and Lynch, this instrumental tends to be repetitive and somewhat unoriginal. Dokken has much more talent than this song would lead one to believe.

"So Many Tears," the first track on Side 2 is a slower paced tune with a steady beat. The song is nothing great, but nevertheless, it is good hard rock and a well chosen lead for the next song.

"Burning Like a Flame," the album's first single is well written and has each band member at the peak level of performance. The lyrics which tell of a love that was never expected to last surprise everyone as it continues "burning like a flame."

The raw power which Dokken emits is evident in songs such as "Burning Like A Flame." This power can also be felt as you listen to "Lost Behind the Wall," which is dominated by Lynch and Brown. The same can be said of "Stop Fighting Love" and "Cry of the Gypsy."

"Sleepless Nights" explodes through the speakers with a Dokken scream, which fades into the resounding chords that flow effortlessly from Lynch's guitar. The song is mostly about love, yet has some sexual overtones such as the line "you're all I need on a sleepless night."

Closing Back For The Attack is my personal favorite song on the album. "Dream Warriors," which was used as the theme song for the movie "A Nightmare On Elm Street 3," makes the album complete. Eerie and haunting sound effects combine with a slow but mighty drum tempo, emanating into a forceful guitar and bass played simultaneously. Dokken sings at his best, mixing the styles of "Into the Fire" and "In My Dreams." The high and low points in the song contrast brilliantly to produce a sound that is very different from the straightforward approach on the other tracks on the album.

Back For The Attack is a well written and well produced album, proving Dokken is as strong as ever. In support of Back For The Attack, the band is currently touring with Aerosmith. I strongly recommend this album to anyone who likes hard rock. As Dokken fans would say, be prepared to do some "rokken with Dokken" when you listen to Back For The Attack.

Cooper terrifies audience at The Tower Theater

By RUSS CECCOLA
Senior Reporter

On Nov. 20 and Nov. 21, Philadelphia witnessed the bloodiest, most horrifying stage show in the music world in the form of Alice Cooper. Bringing his grotesque toys of the macabre to the Tower Theater, Cooper showed an extremely receptive audience why he has earned his place as the father of theatrical concerts. In support of his latest album, Raise Your Fist and Yell, Cooper dragged along the newest Poison ripoffs, Faster Pussycat, as an opening act. Ace Frehley's Comet also played some dates on Cooper's tour, but cancelled the engagement prior to playing Philadelphia.

First off, Faster Pussycat deserves no mention near such a classic artist as Cooper. How they made their way onto his tour is a mystery in my head. The band has musical potential, but definitely needs to cut down on their idiotic stage antics. Instead of prancing around on the stage as if their band was the greatest in the world, Faster Pussycat needs to adopt an unassuming attitude and concentrate on the music.

Faster Pussycat's music and appearance is a merging of Poison and Guns N' Roses. Their music is loud, fast and heavily blues-laden. The quintet that includes Taime Downs (vocals), Brent Muscat and Greg Steele (guitars), Mark Michals (drums) and Eric Stacy (bass) ripped into "Don't Change That Song" and proceeded to play six more tunes from their debut album.

Faster Pussycat made the mistake of doing one cover song that turned out to be extremely awful — "Honky Tonk Woman." The band desecrated a classic Stones song and should have kept to their own tunes, like "Bathroom Wall," "Cathouse," "Smash Alley" and "Babylon" a track that pokes fun at rap music.

Cooper, on the other hand, put on the most monumental show (in the true meaning of the word) that I have seen since his last tour. On the Constrictor/ "The Nightmare Returns" tour of last year, Cooper showed the world that he had permanently ended his musical hiatus. With his Raise Your Fist and Yell/ "Live in the Flesh" tour of this year, Cooper pulled out all the stops and mixed his greatest songs with excellent new tunes and a stage show that was more like a full-length conceptual horror video movie.

Cooper tore into a surprising opener and the most promising song from Constrictor, "Teenage Frankenstein," after making his appearance on stage while knocking down a stone statue. The tune included the illusion of the disappearance of the performer in the Frankenstein monster costume, a magic trick Cooper initiated on last year's tour.

He went on to perform 17 more songs, an impressive selection of newer and older tunes, in a surprisingly short set — about one-and-one-half hours. Having seen the show both nights, I can honestly say that the concert was orchestrated and timed exquisitely, with all of the neat things that happen blending well with the music.

Also impressive in the concert was the excellence of the musicians that Cooper is using on this tour. Kane Roberts acts as lead guitarist and is also receiving high acclaims for his debut solo album. One of his solos featured his fire-blowing machine gun guitar. Jonny Dime (guitars), Ken K. Mary (drums), Steve Steele (bass) and Paul Horowitz (keyboards) round out Cooper's band and complement his sneering vocals with their talents.

Classic Cooper songs that were featured were: "Billion Dollar Babies," "No More Mr. Nice Guy," "Is It My Body," "Eighteen," "Go To Hell," "Devil's Food" and "Black Widow," featuring a giant spider on stage, which Cooper later dismembers. Other great stage effects and plenty of blood were used in the beheading of the vengeful mother in "Dead Babies," the impaling of the spirit in "Prince of Darkness," the throat slashing of the Gail performer and subsequent abuse in the trip of "Chop, Chop, Chop," "Gail" and "Roses on White Lace" and the incredibly theatric hanging of Cooper in "Killer."

When Cooper re-entered the stage in white top hat and tails, the audience went wild as he sang his most popular and well-known anthem, "School's Out." He saved the newest single, "Freedom," and "Under My Wheels" for an encore and left Philadelphia and this reviewer awed at his performance. The band, performers, stage crew and Cooper himself all deserved a lot of credit for the work they do in a night's show.

The show was Cooper at his best and was chock full of enough blood and horror elements to make any Cooper fan happy. I even managed to scour up one of his blood balloons after the show and it sits proudly in a jar in my bedroom. If Cooper comes back to Philadelphia, do not miss the concert. It comes off as a good horror flick, and even my friends who never heard his music before were highly impressed.

High school basketball stars accept bid to 'Nova

By AMGAD SABONGVI
Staff Reporter

Because of Villanova's failure to sign any recruits for this season, it was no secret that Coach Rollie Massimino and his staff had to come up big in this year's recruiting efforts. And come up big they did.

During the early signing period, Villanova landed three prominent high school recruits. On Nov. 11, the first day of the week-long signing period, Chris Walker and Greg Woodard committed in writing and Marc Dowdell verbally committed to sign in April.

Walker, a 5'10" guard from Houston, Texas, is ranked in the top 100 of this year's senior class by virtually all recruiting publications. "He handles the ball and runs a team really well. He's an ideal point guard," said Massimino. The departure of senior Pat Enright next year will enhance the presence of Walker, who should provide needed backup to Kenny Wilson at the lead guard position.

Woodard will provide needed depth at the shooting guard or small forward position. A 6'6" lefty sharpshooter from McQuaid Jesuit high school in Rochester, N.Y., Woodard compares to former Villanova star Harold Jenson. "He's an outstanding shooter with tremendous range. He's a needed addition because of the three-point rule," noted Massimino.

With a 90-plus average and a hard work ethic, Woodard should excel both on the court and in the classroom.

The third and probably the most prized recruit of the trio, is blue-chip forward Dowdell of Christian Brothers Academy in Lincroft, N.J. Dowdell, a 6'8" forward, has great shooting range and also loves to play inside. He is, according to most scouts, an all-around player who ranks in the top 10 among players on the East Coast. Like Woodard, Dowdell is also a fine student as he posts a 94 average in school.

'Nova is still actively pursuing a big man (power foward/center) to complete an already fine class.

Villanova was not the only Big East school to have a good recruiting year. Thus far, Georgetown, Syracuse and St. John's have all assembled outstanding recruiting classes.

Georgetown was successful in signing the highest touted recruit in the country — 6'10" Aloisio Mourning, an excellent defender who averaged 10 blocks a game last year. Also headed for Georgetown is 6'6" Milton Bell.

Syracuse was also very successful as they grabbed six recruits. Among these were highly touted 6'8" forward Billy Owens of Carlisle, PA and 6'5" David Johnson of Morgan City, LA.

St. John's signed the top two prospects of the talent-packed New York City Catholic League. 6'10" post player Robert Werdann from Archbishop Malloy in Queens and slithery 6'7" Malik Sealy from Tolentine High School in the Bronx both decided to stay home and play for the Queens College.

The Big East conference easily won the recruiting war this year as Providence, Boston College and Connecticut also lured nationally ranked players.

Women swimmers fall to Pitt.

By KARLA BECKNER
Staff Reporter

In their second meet of the season, on Nov. 24, the Villanova women's swimming and diving team was defeated by defending Big East conference champions, the University of Pittsburgh, 151-118. The loss drops the team to 0-2 overall, 0-1 in the Big East.

The Wildcats grabbed five first-place finishes during the course of the meet. Junior Mary Mayfield took the 100-meter breaststroke in a time of 1:08.59 while junior Susie Schroeder won the 200-meter breaststroke in 2:32.66. Sophomore Laurel Fournier finished in front in the 100-meter freestyle with a 53.56 time.

In the relays, the team of freshmen Beth Capobianco, senior Liz Kennedy, freshman Eileen McCaffrey and junior Terri Messenger captured first in the 200-meter freestyle relay, and the 200-meter medley relay team of Fournier, Danielle Mackey, Mayfield and Messenger set a school and pool record of 1:50.13 with their first-place effort.

In the 100-meter backstroke, Pittsburgh swimmer Sandy Albright eclipsed the old pool record of 59.61 set by Kim Schrager in 1982 with her 57.61 first-place clocking. Messenger touched right behind her for a close second-place finish in 58.99, setting a new school record. Mackey came in with a 59.01 also under the old record.

The Wildcats, with their two toughest meets behind them, faced Monmouth University at home yesterday at 4 p.m. and are preparing to take on James Madison University tomorrow at 1 p.m. in the John E. du Pont Swimming Center.

Doggett, Walton excel for Wildcat Boxing Club

By Tara Siligato
Staff Reporter

On Nov. 20 The Villanova boxing team presented "Catfights" International in the Jake Nevin Field House. What a show it was!

Villanova hosted this exhibition to show Villanova University what the team could do. The card of the evening listed 12 bouts against teams such as Lafayette, Lehigh, West Chester, Dickinson and Shippensburg.

It was given the approval of the National Collegiate Boxing Association (NCBA). Friday night's participants were competitors in the Eastern Collegiate Boxing Association. Each bout consisteed of three rounds of two-minute intervals.

Although well prepared, the Villanova 'Cats did not do as well as they hoped, winning only three bouts. Chuck Doggett beat Bill Falcone of West Chester University; freshman Vinny Tricarico made an impressive showing beating Dave Wood, also of West Chester.

The featured bout was "Jersey Joe" Walton against Shawn Cassidy of West Chester University. It was an exciting bout, fueled by a great amount of fan support. Walton received the outstanding boxer trophy at the end of the night for his efforts.

One of Friday night's bouts featured 'Cat against 'Cat. Sophomore Joe Alcorn and freshman Ange Coppa battled it out only to come to a draw. Both have equal, yet different, abilities.

We look forward to an exciting boxing season this February. With all the new talent and potential and with the guidance of coach Chad Atkinson, the boxing team may prove to be a winner.

Hockey outlasts Fairfield, 6-4

By JOHN F. SWIFT
Staff Reporter

The Villanova ice hockey team split the final two games of their recent homestand at the Haverford Skatium last weekend.

On Nov. 21, the Ice Cats notched their first-ever victory over Fairfield by the count of 6-4. The 'Cats came out with fire in their eyes and stormed to a 3-0 lead after the first period.

Villanova tacked on one more goal in the second before the Stags roared back and knotted the game at four apiece early in the third period. This, however, was the Ice Cats day as they scored the final two goals of the game to hold on for the victory.

Freshman George Schneider had two goals and senior goalie Dave Duffy made 27 saves for Villanova in the win.

On Nov. 22, the Ice Cats ran into a very tough Canisius squad. The game was tied at two after the first period and things looked promising for Villanova. Midway through the second period, Canisius held a 4-3 over this fiesty Villanova team.

In the final period and a half, like a bolt of lightning, Canisius erupted for five unanswered goals to hand the Ice Cats a convincing 9-3 defeat. Sophomore Bob Ward tallied twice and senior Brian Fitzgerald added a goal and an assist in the contest.

Freshman goalie Jimmy Clark made an astounding 47 saves in the loss for Villanova.

With the win and the loss, the Ice cats overall record is 4-6 and they stand at 3-3 in the ECAC South Conference with an excellent chance to make the conference playoffs.

This weekend Villanova takes to the road where they have dropped three of the four games they have played this season. They play at St. John's on Dec. 5 and at Quinnipiac on Dec. 6.

year. "We proved we can play with anybody in the country," stated Greis. "We have come together as a team and showed that we are a better team than last year."

Also satisfied with the team's performance was Head Coach Rollie Massimino. "I'm very pleased. It was a great trip. We played hard and beat some extremely talented teams. We'll be a better team for going there." In beating Nebraska, Massimino won his 15th straight opening day contest at Villanova.

With a second place finish in a tournament that consisted of some top ranked teams, the 'Cats certainly appear prepared to face the tough Big East competition which lies ahead.

Men's swim team moves 4-0

By Amy C. Spencer

The men's swim team raced to another victory on Nov. 24 as they beat George Washington University by the large margin of 36 points in a 65-29 final score. This impressive win kept their winning streak alive.

The 'Cats, who have won every dual meet they have competed in so far this season, now sport a record of four wins and no losses overall this fall, and a 1-0 record in the Big East Conference. The 'Cats seem to be the team to beat this season, having won by an average of 40 points in their first four meets.

The Wildcats dominated the meet by capturing first place in nine of the 11 total events. Junior Chris Craft, a consistent victor, was the pace setter for Villanova.

Craft was able to achieve three wins in the meet. He got off to a good start by cruising to a victory in the 200-meter freestyle with a time of 1:44.94. Craft then went on to race to a first place in the 100-meter butterfly with a clocking of 52.57.

His third and final victory of the day came in the last event of the meet, the 400-meter freestyle relay, in which he swam the anchor leg.

The other members of the victorious relay team were sophomore Lou Dearstyne, junior Blaise Matthews and freshman Brian Stagg. The relay team swam to victory with a time of 3:12.53.

This weekend, the swim team travels to University of Notre Dame to compete in the National Catholic Swim Championships. The 'Cats will try to keep their win streak alive as they face the best Catholic schools in the nation.

Syracuse stops 'Nova

By MONICA BYRNE

The women's volleyball team recently concluded its season with the Big East Conference Championships in Providence, R.I., where 'Nova ousted Boston College and Connecticut but suffered a loss to Providence and a heartbreaker to Syracuse. The latter defeat prevented the 'Cats from competing in the semifinals.

On Nov. 20, Villanova took on B.C. and won 3-0 (15-8, 15-5, 15-11). Debbie Opitz led the spikers with nine kills and 21 digs.

Villanova then challenged Connecticut on Saturday and, thanks to the efforts of Helen Hnat (13 kills), the team posted a 3-0 win (15-8, 15-13, 15-4). Unfortunately, this would be the 'Cats last victory of the '87 season. On Saturday afternoon 'Nova was easily defeated 3-0 (8-15, 8-15, 7-15) by host and eventual tourney champion Providence.

The same night, Villanova shook off the loss and matched up against Syracuse in what would be their final regular season game. With fire in their eyes and the feeling of survival in their hearts, the spikers attacked and captured the first game 15-8.

Syracuse overcame the 'Cats in the second (8-15) only to be defeated 15-10 in the third. 'Nova then surrendered 5-15 in the fourth and fell 15-13 in the emotional, tie-breaking fifth game.

Athlete of the Week

This weeks Saco East Athlete of the Week is Lori Reiter.

Reiter, a senior, is a member of Villanova's volleyball team that split four matches in the Big East Tournament last week. Unfortunately the team dropped the final game to Syracuse and barely missed a berth in the semi-finals.

Reiter, who registered 26 digs in the loss to Syracuse, was named to the All-Tournament team following the championship game.

Reiter, who transfered from Colorado State in 1986, is regarded as one of the most talented setters in the Big East.

touchdowns in the last six minutes. Do not buy those playoff tickets yet.

Following their '83 world championship, center Moses Malone's terse prediction of the 76ers future was, "we gonna' 'peat and 'peat and 'peat."

After failing to reach the NBA finals for the next two years, owner Harold Katz shipped Malone to Washington in exchange for Jeff Ruland and Cliff Robinson.

Ruland's bum knee ended his career early and the trade proved to be a monumental mistake.

Even with Malone, the 76ers seemed headed to mediocrity. The four players who ran the Philly fastbreak to perfection were Bobby Jones, Andrew Toney, Julius Erving and Maurice Cheeks. With Jones and Erving retired and Toney's career basically over, only Cheeks remains.

Charles Barkley is now the heart and soul of the team, but his thin supporting cast will keep him from soaring to the NBA finals.

Cheeks inspired play, Robinson's scoring and Roy Hinson's on-again, off-again performances are not enough. Forty-five wins would be a minor miracle. And the fans know it.

FLYERS

While Philadelphia's other three teams have slumped through the mid-'80s, the Flyers have kept the dreams of Philadelphians alive with Stanley Cup final appearances in '85 and '87.

This season would be no different, Canada Cup stars Brian Propp, Rick Tocchet and Ron Hextall would keep the Flyers on top again.

For the first time in years, Spectrum fans have booed their beloved Flyers on a consistent basis.

Unless, of course, Ron Hextall misses the first eight games and then slumps through the first few months, Mark Howe suffers from a bad back, Brad McCrimmon is traded and Doug Crossman and Brian Propp disappear.

Thus far in '87, the Flyers have vaguely resembled the Bobby Clarke led Broad St. Bullies of the past, or even the Stanley Cup finalist squad they were one year ago.

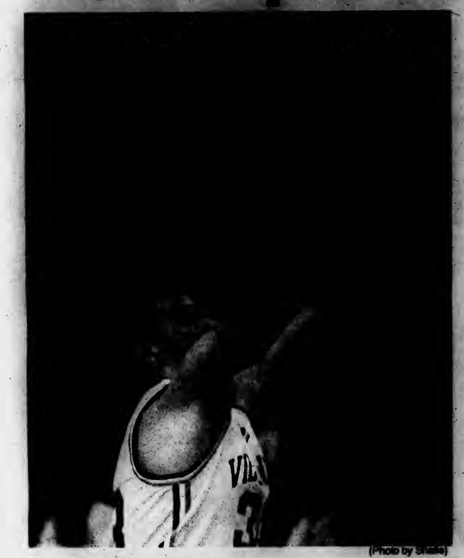
The Villanova wrestling team opened its campaign last week by taking on Delaware Valley and LaSalle Nov. 20 and Drexel Nov. 24. Both of these matches were also the beginning of Villanova's home dual meet schedule.

The Blue Hens from Delaware stung the 'Cats with a convincing 31-11 victory in the opener of Friday's double-header card. The Wildcats, however, came back strong in the nightcap and took a 24-23 thriller from the Explorers of LaSalle.

Freshman Lyndon Campbell (134 pounds) and junior Tom Rogers (167 pounds) both were double-winners for the victorious Wildcats.

Next, the Drexel Dragons came into the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse for a big match against the Wildcats. The Dragons trounced the 'Cats by a 33-10 score as Villanova was handed its second loss of the season last Tuesday night.



On the bright side for the 'Cats, Campbell and Rogers each raised their individual records to a spotless 6-0. Campbell topped Drexel's Paul Zarbatany (16-6) and Rogers edged the Dragon's Rob Miller (3-0).

Freshman John Erickson was the only other winner for Villanova on the night, defeating the Dragon's Steve Hill (9-4) in the 150 pound category.

After one week of action the 'Cats record stands at 1-2. They take to the road next for two dual matches at Edinboro State Dec. 1 and at Virginia State on Dec. 5.

'Nova captures second in Maui Classic

Sophomore center Tom Greis tossed in 18 points against Nebraska in the season opener on Nov. 27.

The 1987-88 rendition of the men's basketball team is off to a roaring start. The 'Cats placed second in the Hawaiian Airlines Maui Classic, where they beat Nebraska and Illinois before being topped by Iowa.

In the opener Villanova faced the Cornhuskers of Nebraska and came up with a 70-53 victory.

The Wildcats started off quickly. Two Tom Greis turn-around hook shots, and a base line jumper by Doug West gave the 'Cats an early lead.

Cornhusker forward Henry Buchanan got a hot hand and stuck two three-pointers to get Nebraska back into the game. The rest of the half was a seesaw battle that saw the lead change several times. At the end of the half V.U. led 36-32.

In the second half, the 'Cats exploded. Mark Plansky and West, who had a somewhat quiet first half, led a Wildcat 10-2 spurt to start the half.

Also effective for the Wildcats was the inside game. Greis showed excellent shooting touch and tossed in a team high 18 points. He also registered six rebounds.

Starting power forward Rodney Taylor was also a strong force underneath. The 6'6 sophomore grabbed seven rebounds and scored eight points. Both players gave the Wildcats strength at the post.

The next game for Nova was against the Illinois Fighting Illini, a top Big Ten club. The contest was close throughout finally ended with a winning hook shot, compliments of Tom Greis.

"Time was ticking down, I posted up and West hit me with a nice pass. I just turned around and shot it," commented the 7'2" Greis.

It was a great game for the 'Cats all around. The team shot 60.5% from the field to come up with a 78-76 victory.

While junior forward West shot 10 for 14 and scored 20 points, senior Plansky grabbed eight rebounds and compiled 14 points. Both Greis and Kenny Wilson chipped in 12 points.

Sophomore forward Barry Bekkedam summed up the win by saying, "we played well, we're really coming together. Last year we would have lost this type of game, this year we won."

Next for V.U. was the sixth-ranked Iowa Hawkeyes for the championship. Unfortunately this game was scarred by poor officiating, but in fairness to Iowa the poor calls went both ways.

Iowa featured a relentless press that Villanova seemed able to handle in the first half, which ended 38-37 in favor of V.U.

In the second half, fatigue set in. The effects of three straight games and a lightening quick Iowa press began to take their toll. "The press really affected us. We had to be constantly concentrating. In the second half we got a little tired and made a few mistakes" said Greis.

Foul trouble also hampered the 'Cats in the second half. Plansky, West, Greis and Bekkedam had three fouls early in the second half and all ended with four fouls.

As a result, Villanova suffered a 28-6 draught and eventually fell by a score of 97-74.

Wilson poured in a game high 20 points while West scored 18. Plansky added 13 points in the losing effort.

Football toppled by 11-0 Holy Cross

By JOHN G. RICCO

The matchup long awaited by Villanova football fans ended with frustration as the undefeated Holy Cross Crusaders (11-0) took the Wildcats (6-4) 39-6 in their game played on Nov. 19. The contest, broadcast nationally by ESPN, was a relatively tight one until midway through the third quarter when the high powered Crusader offense began to pull away.

Villanova Head Coach Andy Talley and the rest of the 'Cats were disappointed more with the way they played than with the actual loss itself. "We knew we were better than what we showed and wanted to give a better account of ourselves on national television," commented the third-year coach.

For a while it looked as if the Wildcats would give an excellent account of themselves. Though the Villanova offense was unable to get on track all game, the V.U. defense rose to the challenge in the first half, refusing to go down without a fight.

Holy Cross took its first possession and quickly marched 62 yards down to the V.U. six-yard line, but the defense, led by linebacker John O'Brien, stiffened, and forced the Crusaders to settle for a 22-yard field goal.

A Holy Cross turnover ended the Crusaders next offensive series as cornerback Art Condodina recovered a fumble by Heisman Trophy-candidate Gordie Lockbaum in Crusader territory.

Quarterback Kirk Schulz moved the Wildcats down to the H.C. 19-yard line, however kicker Tom Withka's 36-yard field goal attempt fell short.

Following another Crusader field goal early in the second quarter, Lockbaum scored the first touchdown of the game on a 20-yard pass from quarterback Jeff Wiley. The touchdown came with 6:35 left in the half and upped Holy Cross' lead to 12-0, a score which would remain until halftime.

Though the offense had been shut out, the fact that they had been able to move the ball in the first half coupled with the defense's inspired play kept the Wildcat fans optimistic about a second half comeback.

"I figured we had missed some opportunities in the first half and that we would come back in the second and capitalize on them," said Talley.

Holy Cross, however, had other ideas. The Crusaders put together scoring drives of 54 and 48 yards in the third quarter to give them a 25-0 lead and virtually seal their first unbeaten, untied season since 1918.

The first touchdown came on a five-yard plunge by fullback Tom Kelleher, who finished with 105 yards rushing, and the second came when Lockbaum dashed two yards for a score.

The lone bright spot for the V.U. offense came with just over 10 minutes remaining in the game. The Wildcats, down 32-0, had a second down and nine at the Holy Cross 47 when Schulz hit receiver Bobby Brady with an eight-yard pass. Brady turned and lateraled to running back Ron Sency who completed the "hook and ladder" play running 39 yards for the score.

Despite his team's large lead, Holy Cross Head Coach Mark Duffner kept his first-string offense in long enough to post two more fourth-quarter touchdowns, giving the Crusaders their 39-6 win.

Though the final margin was large, the loss does not take anything away from the Wildcats' fine season. "We've come a long way this year," commented Talley, "I think we are right where we want to be for 1988."

Mediocrity hits Philly sports

By JIM BOWMAN

For citizens who have endured garbage strikes and neighborhood bombings, one should expect the people of Philadelpia to demand sports teams who exemplified ruggedness, enthusiasm and pride.

In fact, the fans of Philadelphia will settle for nothing less than a champion. Philadelphia's four major sports teams have appeared in nine championships this decade, but only the '80 Phillies and '83 76ers enjoyed world championship parades down Broad Street.

Memories of past successes may be all Philadelphians have to enjoy. Currently, all four teams support records below .500.

Shortly afterward, club President Bill Giles declared the Phillies the "team of the '80's." However his prediction, as well as key players Larry Bowa, Garry Maddox, Tug McGraw and Steve Carlton, fizzled away.

The mid-'80's have instead been the setting for rebuilding. Questionable front office moves, shaky pitching and dismal cluth-hitting have plagued the Phillies for the past three seasons.

Former Yankee executive Woody Woodward arrived in October to provide objective evaluations of the team that finished 80-82, despite preseason predictions of a pennant.

Driscoll announces retirement

University community reacts

By SHARON A. WATERS
Assistant News Editor

Various members of the Villanova community recently praised the accomplishments of the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, during his 13-year term and expressed their feeling that his retirement was a loss for the University.

Everyone interviewed cited different achievements of Driscoll, yet all agreed that academic excellence increased during his term.

Dr. Helen K. Lafferty, assistant to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, commended Driscoll's role in increasing academic excellence, saying, "The importance of academic excellence was the clear message under Driscoll both as vice president of academic affairs and University president. It was his leadership and vision that provided Villanova its step into national recognition."

Lafferty added that Driscoll's commitment to academic excellence was most evident when Villanova received its Phi Beta Kappa [a prestigious arts and sciences honor society] chapter. According to Lafferty, "This recognition sets us apart not only

Says time and circumstances seemed right for decision

By NOEL E. FALCO

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., announced his plans to retire as president of Villanova University at a Dec. 8 meeting of the University's Board of Trustees. His retirement will be effective as of August.

Driscoll, 64, said health was "a major consideration" in his decision to step down but "not the only one by a long shot," according to a Philadelphia Inquirer article.

Eugene J. Ruane, director of public relations at the University, said that health was a factor, but in addition Driscoll will have held the office for 13 years in August.

"He's forced to ponder his mortality, perhaps. You think maybe there are things you'd enjoy more," Ruane said.

Driscoll underwent quintuple bypass surgery last spring and was fitted with a pacemaker. Ruane said this operation was a success and returned Driscoll to comparatively normal health.

Driscoll, who was elected president in 1975, told the board that much of what he set out to do 12 years ago has been accomplished. He said that both the time and circumstances seemed right for his decision, according to a University press release.

It is the expectation of both the board and Driscoll that he will continue to be associated with the work of the University in the future said the release. The position he will hold has yet to be decided.

Search committee appointed

A search subcommittee of the board of trustees has been appointed by the Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A., chairman of the Board of Trustees and Driscoll's predecessor as president. This committee will search for candidates for the position and will forwards its president's findings to the board, said Student Government President Phil Brach, a student member of the

With the beginning of the 1988 spring semester at Villanova University, many standing committees of the University Senate are studying and discussing new proposals to be presented to the Senate for approval.

The academic policy committee is in the midst of a year of consolidation and research after having passed four major motions through the Senate during the 1986-87 school year, according to Chairperson Dr. Harry R. Strack, political science professor.

This year they are working on proposals which deal with academic advisement, academic scholarships, the standards and practices of the University College and the making of all course syllabi available for student inspection, said Strack.

He also encourages and invites members of the University community with severe academic policy concerns or proposals to convey them to the academic policy committee.

The athletic advisory committee has met on two occasions this school year and has discussed points made during the recent evaluation of the University, said Basil DiSipio, committee chairperson. The committee would like to take an active role in Senate meetings and assist the athletic director in setting policy, he added.

The Senate budget committee currently working on a budget proposal to be presented to the Senate for the 1988-89 school year. "Our responsibility is to monitor the preparations of the University budget. In addition to that we test to see that the priorities as determined by the planning and priorities committee are considered in the budget," said Chairperson Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance.

He said that each member of the committee is currently pursuing certain priorities, which will all be voted on to determine whether they have or have not been met financially.

An overall vote will then be made to reveal the new budget. The budget proposal, said Clay, should be comparable to the University's needs and should meet the proposals researched by members of the committee.

"Two basic principles that are always there are the student tuition and the faculty salaries," he said. In earlier meetings this year, the variances which occurred in the budget were addressed. Clay said it is the committee's responsibility to make certain that these variances are in line with the original budget.

The faculty affairs committee spent the fall semester compiling a list of schools in direct competition with Villanova, said Dr. Michael J. Hones, chairperson and physics professor. The charge came from the executive committee which asked the faculty affairs committee, in conjunction with the faculty council, to draw up the list. It was then presented to the Senate in October.

In November, a proposal which came from the faculty council concerning a recommendation for salary increments and benefits for the 1988-89 school year was brought up. Both the faculty affairs committee and the faculty council approved the recommendation, Hones said.

He added that this will result in a cost-of-living increase and an additional increase in the faculty's

Wildcats pounce, break into Top 20

By DOUG SCANCARELLA
Sports Editor

After Villanova's men's basketball team took second in the Maui Classic, won the Philadelphia Jostens tournament, and went 3 and 1 in a four-game homestand, the 'Cats cruised through the Christmas break, downing teams like Syracuse University and St. John's University. After break, Villanova was able to upend University of Connecticut and Seton Hall University. 'Nova presently ranks 18th in the nation in the AP (Associated Press).

The break began on Dec. 27, when the 'Cats were pitted against Auburn in the first round of the Cotton States Classic in Atlanta, Ga. The Wildcats lost this game 65-64, but it was not until a Jeff Moore last second chip shot that Villanova was put away.

V.U. led most of the way, but with five seconds left, Moore, who threw in 26 points, tossed a shot up from the foul line. The ball caromed off the rim, but Moore followed his shot beautifully, grabbed the rebound and laid the ball in for an Auburn victory. Doug West and Mark Plansky led the 'Cats with 17 points apiece.

'Nova rebounded quickly and defeated the College of William and Mary 76-57 in the consolation game. The win set the stage for a five-game winning streak which V.U. enjoyed over break.

Next was a return to duPont where the 'Cats battled Virginia to a 63-54 victory. The inside game was very effective, as Tom Greis grabbed 11 rebounds while Rodney Taylor added 10. Kenny Wilson led the squad in scoring with 16 points.

The following Monday Villanova traveled north to battle St. John's. The Wildcats, led by a Doug West 21-point effort, topped the Redmen 69-62.

The 'Cats played hard-nosed defense, holding Matt Brust to only six points and keeping heralded guards "Boo" Harvey and Michael Porter in check for most of the game.

The win was all the more impressive considering V.U. held off a late St. John's surge in front of 6,008 screaming Redmen fans at Alumni Hall, a place Villanova has not won in since 1984.

Journalist Woods to speak

Villanova Student Union press release

Famed journalist Donald Woods will give a lecture on Tuesday, Feb. 2 at 8 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. The lecture is sponsored by the Villanova Student Union.

Donald Woods is a fifth-generation white South African descended from British and Irish pioneers who settled in South Africa in 1820. He studied law at the University of Cape Town before entering journalism, and became editor in chief of the long-established South African newspaper, the Daily Dispatch, in 1965 at the age of 31.

His editorial attacks on the racial policy of apartheid drew increasing fire from the South African government and from many white readers of the newspaper, and during 12 years of editorship he was prosecuted in court seven times by the state under South Africa's strict publication laws restricting citicism of governmental policy.

In 1977 he was arrested and punished without legal process for publishing details of the killing of his friend, the young black leader Steve Biko, by officers of the state security police.

He was subjected to banning orders, being forbidden to write, to speak publicly, to be quoted in the press, to speak with more than one other person at a time or even to be in a room with more than one other person. This virtual house arrest was imposed for a five-year period.

But three months after his arrest, following personal attacks on members of his family and even on his five-year-old daughter by officers of the state security police, he escaped with his wife and five children across the border into the black-ruled country of Lesotho. The family reached London, England, where they now live. Woods now works as a writer, broadcaster and lecturer on apartheid.

Since reaching London in 1978 he has been appointed director of the Lincoln trust, a foundation which supplies information about apartheid to the international media, and in 1985 he was appointed special adviser to the 49-national Commonwealth Secretariat in London.

The author of three books on South Africa, "Biko," a biography which was translated into twelve languages, "Asking for Trouble," an award-winning autobiography, and "Black and White," he travels extensively throughout the world, briefing governments and addressing audiences on the subject of apartheid.

For several years he has toured American campuses, urging divestment as a means of bringing economic pressure to bear on the South African government to end apartheid.

The story of his escape from South Africa, disguised as a priest, has been told in a British television documentary drama recently screened on Cable News Network in the U.S. His books are the basis of "Cry Freedom," a motion picture produced and directed by Sir Richard Attenborough, who made the film "Gandhi."

Tickets will cost $2.

Worker struck by car

duPont cited for violations

By E.H. McELDOWNEY
Staff Reporter

John E. duPont, head wrestling coach of Villanova, pleaded guilty to a charge of hit and run concerning an accident which occurred near the Stanford Hall driveway Dec. 9, 1987, at 3:11 p.m., according to a Radnor Township police report.

Lonnie Harris Jr., an employee of the Henkels and McCoy firm, sustained injuries from the accident.

Harris was taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital and released later that night. Neither Radnor Police nor Bryn Mawr Hospital would disclose information concerning the extent of his injuries.

The police report stated that Harris was standing in the center of South Ithan Avenue "with his arm raised to stop traffic so that a cement truck which was in the middle of Ithan Avenue could move into position to pour concrete."

At this time a dark grey Lincoln town car, "moving south on Ithan at 15 to 20 mph struck Harris, forcing him onto the hood of the Lincoln. The Lincoln stopped and Harris slid off onto the ground."

duPont "got out of his car and attempted to lift Mr. Harris to his feet, telling him he wasn't hurt that bad," according to the report.

duPont "was at the scene about five minutes and told a witness he was the Villanova wrestling coach but left before police or ambulance arrived," according to the report.

At 3:40 p.m., duPont came to the Radnor Township police station. The police report reads, "He said he was driving south on Ithan Avenue near Aldwyn Lane when [a] pedestrian (Harris) ran out in front of him. duPont said he was going 15 mph at the time of the accident. He stopped his car, got out and asked the pedestrian if he was hurt.

"duPont said he told [the] pedestrian and witness that he was the wrestling coach at Villanova and was on his way to catch a plane to a meet in Minnesota. He felt the pedestrian not seriously injured, thought he had sufficiently identified himself to people at the scene and left," according to the police report.

duPont was cited on a charge of hit and run, which involves a failure in "duty to give information and aid," according to the Radnor traffic code. He paid a fine of $42.50, a source at the Radnor court office said this week.

Market crash affects jobs

By BRIDGET A. KELLEHER
Staff Reporter

Despite the stock market crash in October, job opportunities for college graduates will be more plentiful this year than last, according to a recent Michigan State University survey of employers in business, industry, government and education.

The surveys showed that before the stock market plunge, companies intended to hire 5.5 percent more graduates than last year.

"But after the 'crash' of Oct. 19, companies scaled back their hiring plans by 1.7 percent," the Michigan State University survey said.

These findings have been corroborated by the results of a survey taken by Manpower Inc., the world's largest temporary service concern.

This study of more than 13,000 companies indicated that 21 percent of businesses plan to increase their work force in the coming quarter, compared to only 19 percent last year. In addition, those planning to cut their work force in the first quarter dropped to 12 percent this year from 14 percent a year ago.

Dr. Robert D. Stokes, director of career development at Villanova, agrees with these findings. He has yet to see a dramatic decrease in recruitment on campus.

He stated that "layoffs and cutbacks seemed to have affected above-entry-level positions. The crash has not had a significant impact on entry positions for the Wall Street firms."

However, he does foresee firms being more selective in their recruiting. "The faucet of job opportunities is being closed a little bit, but not being shut off," Stokes said.

A Villanova alumnus working with a major Wall Street frim agreed with Stokes. In a telephone interview, he said he believed that "no one will stop coming to college campuses. They will just be more cautious in their hiring."

The outlook for M.B.A.'s [masters of business administration] is not quite as clear. In an interview with the College Placement Council [C.P.C.], Inc., Lee Junkans, director of career services and

College of Nursing receives grant

The College of Nursing has been awarded a $300,000 advanced training grant by the Department of Health and Human Services, division of nursing. The funding will be used to extend the present graduate program in nursing administration to offer a specific concentration in the administration of community health nursing services.

The expansion, which has already started, responds to a need in our region for training in this sub-specialty. According to College of Nursing Dean M. Louise Fitzpatrick, as hospital costs rise, growing numbers of the elderly and sick utilize community health services. The funding will facilitate the training of nurses for administrative positions in this growing health services setting.

Evaluation nears completion

By DANTE J. SCALA
News Editor

The Program Evaluation Committee [PEC] is close to finishing its two-year study of Villanova, said PEC chairperson Dr. Angelo Armenti on Monday.

Armenti said the University Values Survey, which was conducted late last year, would be available this week. The PEC's final report will be completed by early February, he said.

The completion of the report will mark the end of the committee's study and analysis of the University. In the fall of 1985, the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, created the PEC and charged it with "evaluating all existing academic and non-academic programs," according to a PEC newsletter.

Driscoll also told the committee "to analyze certain proposed programs" and to recommend how to allocate University resources, including funding, "on a program-by-program basis."

Since that time, the PEC has run a wide-ranging series of studies, which have included both internal and external evaluations. A number of non-University evaluators came to Villanova in 1987 to analyze various programs, including Student Life, Food Services and Security.

Values Survey

Among the PEC members' duties was to conduct a survey which would examine the personal values of the Villanova community.

In August 1986, the University attempted to survey about 3,000 members of the Villanova community, but only 25 percent responded. The low rate of response, along with the fact that the survey was a "generic tool not specifically suited" to Villanova, prompted Driscoll to authorize a new poll, said Armenti in November.

The new poll, which was conducted by the Human Organization Science [HOS] Institute, was mainly composed of 30 questions which asked those surveyed what importance they attributed to various objectives of the University's Mission statement. The HOS Institute attempted to survey about 1,600 faculty, students, administrators, staff and alumni. The polling process began Oct. 15.

The latest poll will be acceptable, said Armenti. He said there has been an "excellent return" of the surveys, with a response rate of over 50 percent. In all, Armenti said the latest Values Survey will describe how the Villanova community "views [its] Mission statement."

The Final Report

The final PEC report, which will be written by Armenti with committee input, will make recommendations which could affect the funding of a number of academic departments.

The report will make "resource allocation recommendations" for bachelors' and masters' programs in the University's colleges and schools, said Armenti. The PEC will advise that a program's funding should be increased, decreased or should remain the same.

In a sense, the PEC's final report will only be the "beginning" of the process, said Armenti. After the report is issued, there will be a three-month period of study and comment.

V.U. Professor enters U.S. Senate race

By STEVE D'ANGELO
Staff Reporter

Dr. John J. Logue, political science professor, declared Jan. 14 that he would enter the U.S. Senate race.

Logue said he seeks to gain the nomination of the Pennsylvania Democratic party by focusing on what he calls "old ideas." These include "enforceable law, peace and justice, economic and social progress and fiscal responsibility."

Logue said he will apply these "old ideas" to new situations and problems if elected.

Logue, in addition to giving courses in American foreign policy, comparative foreign policy and international organization at Villanova, also directs the University's Common Heritage Institute.

The institute, which Logue founded in 1959, is a "think tank" which studies international affairs. It is especially interested in such topics as the United Nations, arms control and disarmament.

In 1982, Logue made his most recent attempt to gain the senate nomination. He has tried unsuccessfully four previous times.

Logue finished second in the three-way race in 1982, receiving 24 percent of the statewide vote.

Logue has been active in the Philadelphia area politically in addition to his work at Villanova.

In August 1987, Logue's Common Heritage Institute organized a symposium on strengthening the United Nations, which took place at Independence Hall. The symposium examined how the Philadelphia of 1787 can help us understand the world of 1987.

In December, a resolution proposed by Logue, entitled the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, was signed into law by President Reagan. The act will set up a commission to examine the United Nations and recommend ways to improve its organization.

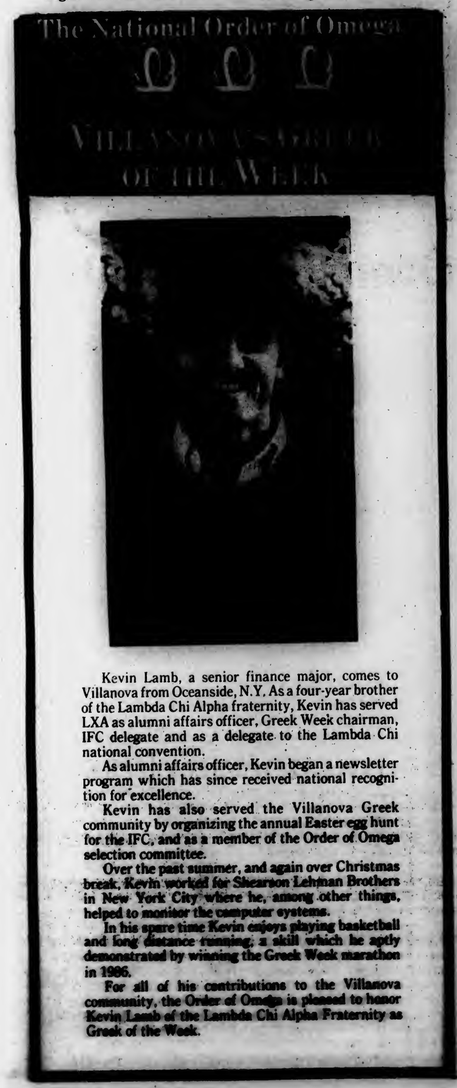
Logue believes that "the job of this generation is to abolish war by restructuring and strengthening the United Nations."

On Oct. 12, Logue lectured at the University of Leningrad on restructuring the United Nations. A guest of the Soviet Peace Committee, Logue presented the Soviet students with the reforms he believed would strengthen the world economy and guarantee national security.

In his current campaign, Logue seeks to gain the Senate seat by focusing on specific subjects, such as the idea of a world law enforced by a global organization.

Logue supports "an international organization which has the power, authority and funding to keep the peace and promote economic and social justice and human rights."

He said that "it is an idea which is getting lost as the executive and legislative branches of our government compete for the title of 'best U.N. basher.' " Logue says he can be a U.N. reconstructor rather than a "U.N. basher" by establishing his reforms.



Logue also expressed his views on the INF (intermediate range nuclear forces) treaty in his campaign announcement. "I welcome the INF treaty ... but I believe that if the U.N. remains weak and impotent we will probably see a continuation of the arms race ... more nations getting their own nuclear arsenals," he said.

Logue also summed up the remainder of his platform. "I will address these and other major issues facing our country, including the need for jobs at adequate wages, quality education, decent housing, universal health care, protection of the environment and securing the legitimate rights of all citizens."

Dr. John J. Logue, political science professor, recently announced his candidacy for the U.S. Senate.

Kevin Lamb, a senior finance major, comes to Villanova from Oceanside, N.Y. As a four-year brother of the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity, Kevin has served LXA as alumni affairs officer, Greek Week chairman, IFC delegate and as a delegate to the Lambda Chi national convention.

As alumni affairs officer, Kevin began a newsletter program which has since received national recognition for excellence.

Kevin has also served the Villanova Greek community by organizing the annual Easter egg hunt for the IFC, and as a member of the Order of Omega selection committee.

Over the past summer, and again over Christmas break, Kevin worked for Shearson Lehman Brothers in New York City where he, among other things, helped to monitor the computer systems.

In his spare time Kevin enjoys playing basketball and long distance running, a skill which he aptly demonstrated by winning the Greek Week marathon in 1986.

For all of his contributions to the Villanova community, the Order of Omega is pleased to honor Kevin Lamb of the Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity as Greek of the Week.

Candidates profiled

In 1988, for the first time in their lives, many of Villanova's 8,000 undergraduates will have an opportunity to aid in choosing America's leadership in the November presidential elections.

The profiles will give basic descriptions of the candidates, their stands on the issues, their experience in government and other pertinent information.

Republican Senator Robert Dole

By G.J. DONNELLY
Staff Reporter

Although Republican Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas is labeled as a conservative Ronald Reagan loyalist and as the Administration's point man in the Senate, he also has a tendency to be independent and politically assertive.

As the Senate's Republican leader for the past four years, Dole has shown himself to be, in the words of U.S. News and World Report, "a master legislator who reconciles his talent to the causes of others. He has shown some leadership on budget issues, and perhaps his most far-reaching achievement was salvaging the teetering Social Security system in 1983."

Dole's basic positions on the issues seem to echo those of President Ronald Reagan's past seven years in office with few differences. His views on the defense budget coincide with those of the Administration, stressing production of MX and Midgetman missiles as well as that of the Strategic Defense Initiative, popularly known as "Star Wars."

However, according to the Philadelphia Inquirer, the main focus of his campaign is on correcting the massive federal deficit through closing tax loopholes and some deductions, a line-item veto, a balanced budget amendment and Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, which calls for automatic across-the-board cuts in spending should the federal government be unable to meet certain budget deficit reductions on its own.

On foreign policy, Dole favors arms for the Nicaraguan contras opposing the Sandinista regime. Despite early reservations, he supports the recently signed Intermediate Nuclear Forces [INF] Treaty between the U.S. and the Soviet Union.

He differs with the Administration on the issue of Social Security. In 1985, while he was majority leader of the Senate, Dole supported a deficit reduction passage that placed a one-year freeze on cost of living increases and continues to defend that proposal in his campaign.

Dole is no stranger to presidential campaigning. He was Gerald Ford's vice-presidential running mate in 1976 and ran for the nomination on his own in 1980.

Although recent polls show Dole trailing in the nationwide poll of Republicans to George Bush, he is leading in Iowa, where a Republican primary takes place Feb. 8.

Democratic Governor Michael Dukakis

By G.J. DONNELLY
Staff Reporter

Democratic Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts is a liberal anomaly. Although he is liberal on social issues such as abortion and in foreign policy matters, Dukakis has a cooperative "let's make a deal" approach with business which distinguishes him from his competitors.

His pro-business philosophy came out of the success he has had transforming what was once jokingly referred to as "Taxachusetts" to a state with the lowest unemployment in the nation (3.2 percent) and a tax burden (10 percent) which is below the national average.

Despite his success in lowering tax rates, Dukakis is not afraid to raise taxes as a last resort, according to the Philadelphia Inquirer. However, he will first attempt to collect $110 billion "in what he claims are unpaid taxes."

His position on the budget calls for spending restraint and revenue increases through stricter enforcement of tax laws. He is also willing to protect some businesses for five years to aid them in becoming competitive.

However, he is unwilling to touch Social Security or to increase federal spending on such defense projects as the MX or Midgetman missiles. He is also cool to the proposal of deploying the Strategic Defense Initiative, or "Star Wars" defense system, though he is willing to continue research.

But he will not continue to aid the Nicaraguan contras against the Sandinista regime. Dukakis also opposes Administration support for reflagging Kuwaiti oil tankers in the Gulf of Sidra. Instead, he urges the invoking of the War Powers Resolution, which requires the President to obtain Congressional approval for military action.

Although Dukakis is new to presidential contention, according to a February 1986 article in Business Week, he was tapped to be Walter Mondale's running mate in 1984, after Geraldine Ferraro. "He was willing," the article stated.

Senate has quiet semester

By DANTE J. SCALA
News Editor

Discussion and debate should charge the floor of the University Senate this semester after virtually disappearing during the fall series of meetings.

Senate Chairperson Dr. Philip Maurone said Monday that the University's 1988-89 budget and the final report of the Program Evaluation Committee, which has been studying and evaluating Villanova for two years, will be major issues in upcoming meetings.

In addition, there will be a student-run campaign to gain a Senate recommendation for co-ed dorms, said Student Government President Phil Brach on Monday.

If early signs prove true, the Senate's spring semester should differ significantly from its last one, when the general meetings were short, quiet and to the point.

A quiet but efficient semester

One of the reasons for the subdued tone of last semester's general meetings was a lack of "real emotional issues," said Maurone.

Faculty Senator Dr. John A. Doody, faculty council chairperson, agreed, saying that there were no substantive proposals brought before the Senate which could have changed how the University community lives.

Brach pointed out that "two major issues that have been occupying the Senate's time for years," the Fall Break and grading system debates, were resolved by the Senate during the 1986-87 term.

Another factor which led to the brevity of last semester's meetings was the Senate executive committee's efforts to "streamline" the Senate's operation procedures, said Maurone.

He cited the executive committee's decision to have student and faculty senators give reports presenting their proposals for tuition costs and faculty salaries, respectively. Since the presentations were in the form of reports, they were not subject to debate and approval.

Maurone said that the budget deliberation will be better because of the early information offered by the proposals. Student Senator John Lewis, a member of the Senate budget committee, agreed, saying that the proposals aided in providing a better structure for the budget debate.

Lewis said it was good to have budgetary facts and analysis early in the school year, and hoped there would be no "information rush" as the Senate vote on the budget drew near.

Maurone also said that the executive committee had met with the planning and priorities committee before the latter's report came to the Senate floor for approval. The early meeting aided in avoiding arguments over the report at the general meeting, he said.

Maurone and Lewis agreed that there has been much work going on behind the scenes in the Senate committees.

In all, "The Senate's starting to run smoother," said Maurone.

Upcoming issues

The recently placid nature of the Senate is likely to change as the senators begin to discuss major issues.

The Senate will decide in March whether to accept the administration's proposed University budget, said Maurone. The issue of the budget has been a bone of contention in the past.

Last year, the Senate attempted to approve the budget with two amendments which would have aided faculty and students. The Board of Trustees, which holds final decision-making power on the budget issue, eventually struck the amendments down and approved the budget.

In retrospect, Maurone described the Senate action as an "empty gesture" which "gave them [the trustees] carte blanche to do what they wanted." He said that the Senate has the power to accept or reject the budget in its entirety, and then make recommendations.

Also, the Senate will decide in April whether to accept the Program Evaluation Committee's final report in its entirety. The report is the culmination of a wide-ranging study and analysis of University programs, and its recommendations could affect the funding of academic departments.

In addition, Brach said Monday that Student Government will have a report on co-ed dorms, including surveys of alumni, parents, faculty and students. He said he regards the issue of co-ed dorms as a major one for the spring semester.

R.O.T.C. commissions delayed

By DEBBIE GROSS
Staff Reporter

"Faced with an overabundance of officers, the Air Force and Navy Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) may ask seniors graduating from college this spring to leave the programs or postpone their commissions," according to a Jan. 14, 1988 issue of the College Press Service.

However, Capt. Charles D. Shields, Jr., USN, Villanova University's chairperson of Naval Sciences, recently said, "Villanova does not have much of a problem, because of its rigid acceptance policy."

There are currently 68 seniors on Naval R.O.T.C. scholarships and two that are not, but according to Shields, the two do not need to worry. "Those two seniors who are not on scholarship right now will receive their commission on Oct. 1 instead of May 20," he said.

In 1986, according to the College Press Service, "Congress, concerned that there were too many officers in the military, ordered the nation's military to cut their officer ranks."

Shields said that according to a recent Navy Times article, the U.S. secretary of defense had rescinded the U.S. Navy decision to take out officers. Therefore, there was a decision to decrease funds for scholarships among R.O.T.C. programs, said Shields.

Once again, Shields did not see this as a problem. "Villanova is one of the five largest of the existing 65 programs in the U.S., even though we do not have an extremely large amount of students, and it [Villanova's NROTC] will stay out of this problem because of the excellent performance of the students."

In addition, Shields said that "the battalion scored highly last semester, with one-half achieving a 3.03 or better overall."

Shields said that the total battalion average can be raised again next semester with more "concentrated effort and discipline."

Pete Burke, a senior Naval ROTC member, stated that there was a lot of discussion about the cuts in scholarships and commissions among the battalion.

He felt that after "four years of college in a prestigious unit, having been trained by an excellent staff, and having been trained and disciplined to lead men into combat," it was not right to delay commissions until October.

"Most of us didn't go to interviews and will have no type of income during those five months before commissioning," Burke said.

"Therefore, most of us will be working in McDonald's to stay afloat before commissioning," he added.

Advisement poll results released

By MAUREEN STAPLETON
Staff Reporter

Villanova does not have a major academic advisement problem, concluded a Student Government report based on a student poll it conducted in November.

However, only 34.2 percent of those surveyed said they "understood the advisement system as incoming freshmen."

"Advisement is a crucial aspect of education, and every single student should know at least the name of his/her advisor," recommended the report, which was compiled by Kristin A. Switala, assistant secretary of academic affairs for Student Government.

In all, 71.7 percent of the 1,054 students polled knew who their advisors were, and 62.8 percent had met with their advisors.

In the school-by-school breakdown, 91.2 percent of the nursing students surveyed knew who their advisors were, along with 80.2 percent of engineering students surveyed and 78.9 percent of arts and sciences students surveyed.

In contrast, only 53.2 percent of College of Commerce and Finance students knew who their advisor was.

According to Dr. Richard Ruane, advisor of all freshmen in the College of Commerce and Finance, "Most of the students, by far, would not have to meet with me."

In response to the poll, Dr. Helen K. Lafferty, assistant to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said, "I was delighted to see students felt they had received such good advisements, because we make a concerted effort to discuss with them possibilities and alternatives in their program of study."

About 15 percent of those surveyed in the Colleges of Arts and Sciences and Engineering "had had any major problems due to lack of advisement." Almost 18 percent of students surveyed from the College of Commerce and Finance had such problems, while less than 9 percent of nursing students surveyed reported such difficulties.

According to the Student Government report, the survey project was run by Mark Holobetz, secretary of academic affairs for Student Government, and Switala in response to "numerous complaints concerning the advisement system."

The report concluded, "Because advisement succeeds only when both advisor and advisee interact concernfully, we ask that advisors take the time to help us with our academic questions and problems, and that we students get to know our advisors better."

King's dream said to be unrealized

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s dream of racial equality has not yet been achieved, according to his daughter, Yolanda King, but opposition to recognition of his birthday as a federal holiday seems to be diminishing.

President Ronald Reagan authorized King's birthday as a federal holiday in 1983, but some campuses did not want to add the holiday to their tight schedules. Debates ensued, but most calendar issues surrounding King's birthday have been settled.

King planned to shut down the federal government through massive acts of civil disobedience before his assasination in 1968. He planned to continue these actions until ending poverty became a government priority. "That was his last dream," his daughter said.

U. of Penn. food donations decrease

More efficient food purchasing has led to a curtailing of the food donation program at the University of Pennsylvania.

The annual holiday contributions to the University City Hospitality Center have decreased since last year. According to Eric Pisauro, a student who works at the Hospitality Center, Penn's contributions have almost stopped.

Dining Service Director William Canney said that all perishable leftovers are still contributed to the program.

Spying suspected in U.S. libraries

According to the F.B.I. [Federal Bureau of Investigation], Soviet agents are using American libraries and students to research technial but unclassified information.

As a result the F.B.I. has asked librarians for the names of foreign students who access data bases and certain books.

College librarians, however, are reluctant to help. They contest that F.B.I. involvement violates constitutional rights to a free flow of information and interferes with the librarians' own professional ethics.

Some librarians said the F.B.I.'s program has already had a negative effect on some students.

Thirty-six states have confidentiality laws that forbid librarians to share information about library use, including New York, the focus of the F.B.I.'s program.

The program is the latest in a series of F.B.I. involvements in campus activities, dating back at least to the early 1950s.

retirement plan. The faculty affairs committee, along with the faculty council, has also asked that the deans recommend a figure which they would choose for merit equity adjustments, he said.

Hones said there was also a misunderstanding of one of the articles in the protocol for the periodic selection of chairpersons. A small committee was formed in December to look into rewriting and updating the language in the article.

For the spring semester they have discussed a resolution which came from the academic policy committee recommending that the faculty teaching load be reduced from 12 to nine contact hours. They plan to wait for the Program Evaluation Committee report to come out before they review the issue any further, Hones said.

He also said that a resolution was passed on a non-smoking policy which prohibits smoking from all public areas of the campus. "Smoking will be permitted only in designated areas," he said. "This is basically in line with what the township of Radnor has done, and is very similar to what the House in Harrisburg has done."

The members of the social action committee have not made any official proposals to the Senate. However, many concerns have been addressed, according to Chairperson Dr. Jean Lorge, associate professor of the College of Nursing.

These include the University's divestiture in South Africa and an update on the handling of it. In addition, the committee will soon get a report on affirmative action that will review recruitment efforts for minorities, including financial packages.

The committee is also concerned with faculty recruitment of minorities, and it hopes to send a proposal to the Senate concerning increased efforts in this area, Lorge said.

The student life committee presented a budget report during the fall semester which involved tuition increases and financial competition with other schools. It was discussed that the main priority should be to increase endowment, according to the minutes of the committee's Oct. 9 meeting.

The committee has addressed a number of proposals for the semester, said Chairperson Sean Closkey. Among these are a tailgate in the spring and further research on the issue of co-ed dormitories. Another area to be investigated is the possible "drying out" of campus, which some members, including Closkey, oppose.

Student drinking persists

By the College Press Service

While anti-drinking rules cost Marquette University cheerleaders their jobs during the holiday break and could land two North Carolina State students in jail, a California State University [CSU] at Dominquez Hills professor concluded campus attitudes still encourage students to drink.

Students, added CSU's Dr. David Nasatir in reporting the results of the University of California at Berkeley study he helped direct, seem to be drinking as much as they always have, despite intense campus efforts to the contrary.

Most schools around the U.S. have cranked up "alcohol awareness" policies since 1985, when federal laws forced states to raise their legal drinking ages from 18 to 21.

To get liability insurance, colleges had to demonstrate to insurance companies they were keeping their underaged students from drinking liquor.

But the Berkeley study suggested there has been no profound increase or decrease in student drinking since the new policies began.

The reason is that many schools, Nasatir said, "are lax in observing violations of the drinking minimum age." Alcohol, moreover, is often an integral part of social and athletic events, and the "awareness" programs, by not recognizing alcohol's role, are rendered ineffective.

Nasatir's research, part of an ongoing study of campus alcohol use, noted fraternities have helped keep general student drinking rates high. "Young men living in fraternities seem to drink more often and larger quantities than any other group of similar young men in dormitories, or with roommates."

"It's not clear whether that's because fraternities recruit drinkers or manufacture drinkers," Nasatir continued. "But that seems to be a phenomenon that holds true on all campuses with fraternities."

A solution, he suggested, might be to crack down on people and groups who serve liquor to students. "This has a chilling effect on individual willingness to serve alcohol."

At Marquette, however, a group of cheerleaders quit in December instead of tolerating a crackdown.

Eleven cheerleaders quit the Milwaukee college's squad after school officials suspended two cheerleaders for swiping some leftover bottles of champagne from a private party.

"They said they could no longer cheer" with two members suspended for something they all took part in or knew about, said Mark McCarthy, Marquette's associate dean of students.

At the same time Raleigh, N.C., police, charged two North Carolina State students with counterfeiting drivers' licenses and selling them to classmates to use them to buy alcohol.

The two students built a large cardboard replica of a license. They would then take photos of customers standing in front of the replica, and process the resultant artwork as a fake license.

The students, each charged with two counts of counterfeiting and selling drivers' licenses, could serve three years in prison if found guilty.

The University of Washington [UW], however, may have been overzealous in attempts to control drinking. The school, facing a lawsuit from the American Civil Liberties Union and several UW law students, agreed not to search fans attending football games for alcohol. At the beginning of the 1987 season, university police had stepped up efforts to combat alcohol use during football games.

But administrators, heeding protests, agreed to halt the searches, at least for the last game of the season.

Senior celebration successful

By LYNN PERDEK
Staff Reporter

On Dec. 5, the Villanova Union sponsored the Senior 100 Days Celebration held at Popcorn's nightclub in King of Prussia.

At the time of the party, questions remained as to whether there would be any more Senior Days parties, and whether they would be held in the same place and format as the first party, according to Lucyna Gorski, director of the Student Activities Office.

Gorski said that the party was completely successful and that no problems arose that night.

As a result of the party's success, Gorski said that it is her intention to hold two more Senior Days parties this year. One of those parties would be held with 50 days left until graduation and the other will be scheduled during Senior Week.

The first Days party was held from 5-9 p.m. at Popcorn's, which was open only to Villanova students, who were allowed to stay without paying the cover price.

Gorski said that this format worked out very well and will probably be the way the next one is run.

Gorski said she will meet with members of the Blue Key Society, who will probably sponsor the 50 Days party. After these discussions, more permanent plans will be made.

According to Gorski, the earlier time of the party did not have an effect on the number of people that attended.

She said that 99 percent of the people who were asked said they were happy with the party and with the nightclub itself.

Gorski was pleased with the nearby location of the club and with the people that they dealt with there.

The only complaint that the students voiced, according to Gorski, was that the drink prices at Popcorn's were rather high.

Gorski, however, is not concerned with negotiating lower prices for alcoholic drinks because "how much the students drink should not be determined by the school."

Also, the University Senate will vote in April to accept or reject the final report in its entirety, said Dr. Philip Maurone, Senate chairperson. The Senate will also make its own recommendations for the report at that time, said Maurone.

Finally, Driscoll and the Board of Trustees will make the final decision in July on what changes will be made at the University, based on the PEC recommendations, said Armenti. Though this decision will be made while Driscoll is still in office, the implementation of changes will be made by the new president, said Armenti.

University reacts to Driscoll's announcement

because of its testimony to our current academic status but its promise to the future."

Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance, praised the academic strides Villanova made under Driscoll's term.

Clay and other administrators pointed to the business school's various accreditations obtained under Driscoll's presidency. The College of Commerce and Finance received accounting, M.B.A. [masters of business administration] and taxation programs [sponsored jointly with the Law School] accreditations, according to Clay.

Concerning Driscoll's role in the accreditations, Clay stated that Driscoll "supported us [the College of Commerce and Finance] with enough resources to enable us to make accreditation standards."

M. Louise Fitzpatrick, dean of the College of Nursing, said Driscoll offered "wonderful administration support" to the nursing school by offering graduate as well as undergraduate programs and encouraging recruitment of better faculty.

Most importantly, Driscoll "recognized changes in health policy and health care and their effect on the preparation of nurses" and provided the necessary resources to prepare the future nurses for a "complex, technologically advanced health care system," said Fitzpatrick.

Since the College of Nursing role of preparing students to help others is in accordance with the Christian message of Villanova, Fitzpatrick said that Driscoll was "even more supportive because he appreciates what we're [the College of Nursing] trying to do."

Eugene J. Ruane, director of Public Relations, commented that Driscoll's presidency was "an important time in the life of the University" and Driscoll was "the right man at the right time."

Concerning academics and athletics, Ruane stated, "Driscoll emphasized the student in the student-athlete."

Ruane said the drop and return of the football program at Villanova put football into perspective and showed the University's emphasis on academics.

Dr. John A. Doody, philosophy chairperson, said, "The prestige of the University outside the Villanova area has greatly increased under his presidency ... and the administration has really increased its commitment to academic excellence."

Doody hoped that the next president would continue a commitment of striving for academic excellence. Although he looks for a president who would want Villanova to compete with the "Georgetowns" and "Notre Dames" of Catholic higher education, Doody said he would settle for a president fighting for Villanova to be the equivalent of Boston College or Fordham.

Doody said that Villanova has already been moving toward these Catholic universities of highest academic standards.

Commenting on Driscoll's presidency, Dr. Michael E. Burke, director of the honors program, said it was a time of tremendous growth of the quality of faculty and students and of the reputation of the University itself.

Comparing Villanova today to when Driscoll first became president, Burke said, "There's a dramatic difference, certainly academic ... in the caliber of faculty and students."

Besides promoting academic growth, Driscoll created the Program Evaluation Committee [PEC] in the fall of 1985 to examine all aspects of the University.

Dr. Helen K. Lafferty, assistant to the dean of Arts and Sciences, praised the accomplishments of the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president.

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, commended Driscoll's efforts and persistence in establishing the committee and guiding it through its evaluation of the University. Stack considered the evaluation important because it studied all facets, both academic and non-academic, of Villanova and "can help strengthen the school."

Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president of Student Life, praised the University evaluation because it will provide a review of the University's present programs and the allocation of resources for them.

The Rev. George F. Riley, O.S.A., vice president of University relations, praised Driscoll's work during his presidency in the area of fundraising, calling him a "tireless worker" who put "incredible demands on himself."

Evidence of Driscoll's fundraising efforts can be seen in the success of the Covenant campaigns.

According to Riley, Driscoll was an "integral part of Covenant I and II ... both campaigns exceeded goals netting $35 million over and above annual programs."

Riley added that Driscoll "had a great understanding of the difficulties of real-world fundraising."

The construction of new buildings on campus during Driscoll's term was mentioned as an accomplishment by all interviewed, especially the Student Life administration. Representatives from the student life branch of Villanova praised Driscoll's support in improving the quality of student life at the University through the new construction.

Neville named him "a champion of students' needs" and said that Driscoll was "most supportive" from the student life perspective. According to Neville, the construction of two new dorms on south campus, the duPont Pavilion, the Connelly Center and the proposed building of two future dorms all enhanced the students' quality of life at the University.

Concerning the building of the duPont Pavilion, Stack praised the integration of both intramural and varsity sports without one outweighing the other. Both varsity and intramural sports facilities were needed at Villanova, and under the direction of Driscoll, the duPont Pavilion met the needs of both areas of sports, which ultimately benefited the students, according to Stack.

Concerning interaction with the student population, Phil Brach, Student Government president, considered Driscoll more available to students than most University presidents, citing that Student Government meets with Driscoll several times a year and that students serve on Board of Trustees committees.

Stack also considered Driscoll to be in touch with the student body, and described him as a "personable man" who "personally would like to be more available" to students.

Stack added that because of the nature of the job of University president, students would not normally see Driscoll walking around on campus, mingling informally with the students. As president, Driscoll must deal not only with students, but also with alumni, faculty, staff and the community at large.

Stack added that Driscoll has people working for him who keep him aware of students' needs.

Looking ahead to the next president, several of those interviewed identified characteristics they hoped to find in Driscoll's successor.

Neville looks for a president who is "as sympathetic to student affairs" as Driscoll and who is "attentive to the needs of ever increasing the quality of education here, both in the classroom and out of it."

Brach said that Driscoll "understood the meaning of Villanova as well as anyone can," and that there is "nothing new I would look for" in a new president.

Brach would also like a young president who would be "one generation closer to understanding [student] issues." He also felt there were "merits in having someone who can be here [at the University] a long time."

Other accomplishments under Driscoll's presidency, according to those interviewed, included Villanova's rise in national recognition, the increase in computer ability and the renovation and updating of old facilities throughout the campus.

Ruane listed the committee members, which include six trustees: Thomas F. Devine, Esq., Edward J. Caughlin III, Joseph J. Donahue, Dr. Margaret M. Healy, Rev. William J. Drupa, O.S.A. and John J. Quindlen.

He also listed five constituent representatives: Brach, Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance, staff member Katharine Lawless, Dr. Philip Maurone, University Senate chairperson, physics professor, and alumnus Edward Riley.

Driscoll years reviewed

By NOEL E. FALCO
News Editor

With his recent announcement of his plans for retirement, the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., will shortly end his 13 years as University president in August. His is the longest presidency in Villanova's 145-year history.

At the time of his election in July 1975, Driscoll was serving as vice president for Academic Affairs at Villanova. He succeeded the Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A., who is now chairperson of the Board of Trustees.

Driscoll came to Villanova from Merrimack College in Andover, Mass., where he was religious superior of the Augustinian community and a member of the Board of Trustees.

A Villanova alumnus himself, Driscoll graduated in 1948 and then earned both his master's degree and his doctorate in philosophy at Catholic University.

Ordained in 1951, he began a teaching career at Archbishop Carroll High School in Washington, D.C., shortly afterwards.

Driscoll served as a philosophy teacher after being transferred to Merrimack in 1956. He later became vice president and dean.

Assigned to Villanova in the mid-1960s, Driscoll arrived during a time when college campuses nationwide witnessed protests and student demands for a stronger voice in university governance.

Driscoll, as vice president, was a major force in student-University relations that created the University Senate at Villanova.

In July 1975, he became Villanova's 30th president. When he spoke on the future of Villanova in an inaugural ceremony speech on Sept. 27, 1975, he emphasized financial and faculty problems, according to the Oct. 8, 1975, Villanovan.

The article also said that Driscoll was encouraged by "fairly good" financial prospects and increased freshman enrollment that year. He "assured the audience that athletics will still be an important part of campus life ... [though] no additional funds will be allocated for sports."

He also commented, "Salary and tuition are Senate priorities that will be observed."

During Driscoll's presidency, the University has received academic and athletic recognition as quality programs were developed. Villanova was twice named one of America's best universities in U.S. News and World Report as its student body became increasingly select and geographically diverse under Driscoll.

The faculty has expanded and has been recognized for intellectual distinction. The academic curriculum has become more challenging and innovative and stresses a values-centered education that was lauded by college presidents in a national poll.

Driscoll's term also saw the purchase of land extending the borders of campus, the construction of new dormitories and a dining facility, the completion of Connelly Center and the duPont Pavilion and the renovation of numerous buildings. A comprehensive internal evaluation of all University programs is nearing completion as well.

The University's first national fundraising campaign, the Covenant, was instituted by Driscoll in 1977 to help offset the costs of expansion. The Covenant's two phases have raised more than $34 million over a 10-year period, and a third phase is being planned.

Implement wisdom and cooperation

With the upcoming change in the University's presidential position, cooperation among Villanova officials is more vital than ever to ensure that Villanova will continue to flourish. With a constant emphasis on the Catholic tradition and academics, Villanova's future depends upon the wisdom exhibited by the Board of Trustees, the Senate, faculty, administration, staff and students concerning many important University issues.

The University is currently in a transitional period as the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, retires in August, and the search committee looks for and the Board of Trustees decides upon a new president. Many decisions that will be made during this time will play an integral part in the shaping of Villanova. Decisions on issues such as the University budget, faculty salaries, tuition rates, student housing, financial aid and academic scholarships will help dictate Villanova's future national reputation. The soon-to-be-released University-wide program evaluation results will help show Villanova its weaknesses and provide helpful advice to correct its problems.

Villanova is a widely respected institution of higher learning. In order to remain outstanding, the University must balance academics and athletics, faculty salaries and tuition rates.

The University must provide an affordable education to students of all races and creeds to become a more diversified institution.

While competitive salaries are necessary to attract and keep the best and brightest faculty members, the University must not look to tuition increases to fill the gap. Increased endowment, additional campaigns like Covenant I and II and more financial aid to students are needed to keep Villanova balanced.

The program evaluation results should offer an outsider's view of our positive as well as negative aspects. The University must take the findings to heart, continue to excel in our successful areas and implement suggested methods or programs to reduce our negative aspects.

In short, Villanova is a very prestigious and well respected school. During this integral transitional time, University officials must look to their wisdom to make important decisions and continue to cooperate to flourish.

Wanted: Youth and experience

As the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, prepares to retire, Villanova is faced with the task of finding his successor. The University's new presidential search committee should look for an individual who is young but has experience as a leader, understands the Villanova approach to learning, continues the Catholic tradition and looks forward to the Villanova of the 1990s.

The Board of Trustees should look for a president who will meet regularly with student leaders and understand their pressing concerns. The president should stand behind many of the Senate's recommendations and show a continued support for high academic standards, including the best possible faculty and administration members.

The new president should also be a visible leader outside of campus and be concerned with national and world issues that affect Villanovans.

Villanova is a fine institution with the potential to be one of the very best in the nation. An effective leader is a must for the University to achieve such goals.

Driscoll has demonstrated time and time again how a good president should act. He should lead. Let the new president lead Villanova with highest honors into the 1990s.

Outdoor graduation urged

To the Editor:

I was very disheartened during Christmas break this year when the postman delivered the "Parent's Connection" newsletter from Villanova.

"Why?" would be the question which would come from most inquiring minds, especially when it was the newsletter, not the report of grades, which caused my mood of depression.

However, a schedule of commencement ceremonies for 1988 was contained within the pages of the newsletter. This schedule has the commencement ceremony for the College of Arts and Sciences and the College of Nursing to be held at 10 a.m. on May 22, and the ceremony for the College of Commerce & Finance and the College of Engineering at 2 p.m. of the same day.

I know for a fact that I am not alone when I state that I am disenchanted with the University's decision to hold a segregated graduation indoors. Why must the Class of 1988 suffer as a result of last year's fiasco?

It is not just to hold us responsible or accountable for the events which occurred at the ceremony for the Class of 1987. I had a sibling who graduated in 1986 outdoors and as a unified class. It was wonderful to be seated with my parents and grandparents and share in my brother's joy as he received his diploma.

There were no repercussions from this graduation exercise, hence 1987's graduation was supposed to follow the same pattern. Since it did not, the Class of 1988 is to be stereotyped to be the same as out predecessors of 1987.

Villanova, in deciding to hold graduation indoors, is limiting our celebration of accomplishment to four or possibly five family members. This limitation on the amount of tickets does not take into consideration those students who have large immediate families or the fact that grandparents would have to be chosen or left out. How could they ask us to choose among family members?

Has anyone thought about the poor acoustics in the duPont Pavilion? Or the stifling heat one experiences while present for extended periods of time in the building?

Another factor which I believe is important is the chaos and disorder which will surely be the result of having four colleges graduate only four hours apart in one building. By the time the parents leave the Pavilion from the 10 a.m. graduation, and the parents from the 2 p.m. graduation file in, there is bound to be some pushing, shoving and tempers flaring.

Besides, who would blame the parents for wanting to get "a good seat" from which to view their child's graduation? Who wants to sit up in the rafters? How will the University conduct and enforce an orderly process?

I know that I am not alone when I state that I am disenchanted with the University's decision to hold a segregated graduation indoors.

Furthermore, just as with all major events at the University, there will be extreme difficulties parking in the main lots. Must my parents drive out to Pennsylvania and park in the lot at 8 a.m. in order to be within a short distance of the Pavilion for my ceremony which will be at 2 p.m.?

Graduating unified and outdoors (weather permitting) would be a wonderful culmination of the four years spent earning our diplomas here at Villanova. None of us have been together as a class since orientation.

Unifying us as we prepare to face new challenges would strengthen our feeling of togetherness and allow us the opportunity to share our classmates' accomplishments whether they are engineers, nurses, accountants or English majors.

The University should take into consideration how seniors and their families feel. Each senior I have spoken with is strongly opposed to an indoor, segregated graduation. Nevertheless, letters written in the past have obviously fallen on deaf ears.

Won't anyone at this University have compassion upon the graduating seniors and make our graduation one to remember fondly and one we can share with all of our family and friends, without the stigma of disappointment?

I do not think it would be a problem to move graduation outdoors or to unify it. Sure it would require some scheduling changes, but I believe a few minor difficulties would be easier to overcome rather than the problems aforementioned. Why not poll the students and/or their families? Give us the opportunity to be responsible enough to make our own decision with regard to graduation!

Send the seniors a questionnaire or poll us at the next Days Party, but all we ask is that the University give us the chance to share our achievements with our whole families and our fellow students and friends.

Driscoll brought national attention to Villanova

By JOHANNE C. SHARP
Editor in Chief

Over the last decade or so the vast majority of well-read Americans have in one way or another become aware of Villanova University. The relatively small Catholic institution has brought national recognition to the infamous Main Line. The 1985 NCAA Men's Basketball Championship brought instant notoriety to the underdog Wildcats. The decision to drop the Wildcat football program also made national news in 1981 and showed the nation the University's emphasis on academics. The return of the football program in 1985 was also broadcast across the country and demonstrated that Villanova put athletics into perspective on the college campus. The University told the nation that the student-athlete was attending Villanova to get an education first, and play sports second. More recently, the inclusion of the University in U.S. News and World Report survey as the No. 1 Most Comprehensive School in the East highlights the integrity of Villanova.

The unprecented success and prestige of Villanova must be attributed to the highly qualified facility, administration and staff members as well as the increased academic standards of the Villanova students.

But most importantly we must look to the leader of Villanova, the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, who has given so much of himself to lead Villanova to such success in the past 13 years. Driscoll, who has recently announced his retirement, has been called a tireless worker and an inspiration to others and has shown Villanova the way toward academic excellence and spiritual growth.

Driscoll was always at the forefront of both Covenant I and Covenant II campaigns which netted over $35 million over and above the annual programs, according to the Rev. George F. Riley, O.S.A., vice president for University Relations.

In addition, the recent installation of the Phi Beta Kappa chapter at Villanova demonstrated the academic excellence the University has achieved. Under Driscoll, the accounting, M.B.A. (master's of business administration) and taxation programs have gained accreditation and the recruitment of better nursing faculty members has been implemented.

Great strides in campus expansion have also taken place under Driscoll. During the last decade the Connelly Center, duPont Pavilion, Katharine and St. Monica's halls and the south campus dining facility have been built.

Increased hours of dormitory visitation and the short lived success of Jake's Place have increased the social atmosphere at the University. Over 120 clubs have an active enrollment and perform many worthwhile activities including feeding the homeless, tutoring underprivileged children, sponsoring Special Olympics and entertaining neighborhood trick or treaters at Halloween.

The recent program evaluation has been instituted under Driscoll and should serve as an important method of recognizing our weaknesses which is certainly necessary to further our excellence.

In short, Villanova has taken tremendous strides in the academic world under Driscoll. His unending support and work has thrust Villanova into the national limelight on many occasions and we can only hope his successor can continue the trend. Driscoll has been the strong backbone of Villanova for the last 13 years and will be greatly missed. He has set the highest possible standards for the University and it is our duty as a team to fulfill these standards to continue to pursue the goals of our leader.

Academic freedom disrupts Catholic teachings

By GERALD A. LEE

Forty-five years ago I enrolled in the engineering school and graduated as a naval V-12 trainee in 1945.

There was little time for the humanities during those hectic war years. Our subjects were mostly in our major except for four courses in English and religion — the Roman Catholic religion, to be sure. To this day I remember Fathers Dunne and McFadden (happily with us today) discoursing on the pre-eminent concepts taught by the Augustinians.

The idea was truth, and the concept was defined in its subjective (what you think truth to be) and objective (what truth is in reality) meanings.

If one subjectively arrived at "truth" at variance with objective truth, he was in error. Surely, we all thought, it is objective truth that appears as Villanova's "Veritas."

As far as I know, every Catholic in those days was an orthodox Catholic (though we did not view ourselves as such, then). The Pope: infallible. The teaching Magisterium: accepted and respected.

However, the Catholic community had its disbelievers. They had the good sense to leave the Church rather than hang around to reform it.

In this period, we are hammered with "dissent," "dialog," and "academic freedom" — all buzz words advertising disloyalty to Rome when they are used to connote a relationship in the religious that belongs strictly in the secular.

We have the former president of Notre Dame University saying that the schema (John Paul II's statement on what constitutes right from wrong teaching in Catholic colleges and universities) "is an attempt to lay down universal rules to define Catholic education for all areas of the world."

He concludes, "that just isn't realistic." Why not? Are we one and Catholic (again, Roman, to be sure) or are we seeking to be something else?

The executive director of the Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities charges that the schema would have the local bishop "control the theologians."

What if a theologian teaches error at his Catholic university, and gets away with it? Who will admonish him, and, if not convince him of his heresy, silence him? His peers at the university? They hired him. Charles Curran (ex-Catholic University of America theology professor) complained of "Humane Vitae" (actually before it was promulgated in 1968, but he was not disciplined until 1986. That is a long time for truth to overtake error.

Villanova's Charles L. Cherry, assistant vice president of Academic Affairs, says the schema has a "chilling effect on Catholic universities in regard to the appointment of faculty among other things."

What chilling effect does dissent from Rome have on loyal, orthodox (both words need not be used together) faculty, students, alumni and parents of students and would be students? Plenty.

And what degree of disloyalty exists on Villanova's campus when Cherry can make public statements at variance with Rome with impunity, together with Michael E. Burke, director of the honors program, who says, "Rome has no clear sense of higher education in the United States." No clear sense? Rome knew what rightfully to do with Curran (albeit belatedly). Burke continues, "Here (at Villanova) professors are relatively free to teach as they desire."

God knows what those "turned off" by and from Rome "desire (to teach)." Is their meaning of so-called "academic freedom" an operative higher in priority than truth? Is Villanova teaching the authentic meanings in "Humanae Vitae," "Familiari's Consortio" and "Humani Generis"? I pray so. But I wonder.

Is academic freedom an issue or a red herring? Is the $500 million "We (Catholic universities) would stand to lose (in government assistance) if we conformed to the dictates of the Church (ex-president of Notre Dame University Hesburgh)," the real reason many if not most so-called Catholic universities are upset with Rome's call to orthodoxy?

Is the American Roman Catholic higher education community seeking "first the Kingdom of God" or the $500 million? And are they in good conscience with the latter choice?

Finally, one looks at the other piece of disturbing news on the front page of the Nov. 6 issue of the Villanovan, to learn the areas where Villanova students disagree with Church teachings. In a miniscule poll of our students recently conducted: 97 percent believe in disagreement with the Pope; 94 percent claim pre-marital sex is not wrong in all cases; 93 percent disagree that using artificial means of birth control is wrong; 14.3 percent believe abortion should be illegal in all circumstances. And on and on and on reflecting an ever expanding disloyalty and disobedience to Rome.

Assuming the poll is valid, I wonder where did our kids learn such rot? Is Villanova reaping the errors sown by the Currans, Hesburghs, Cherrys and Burkes? If the mini-poll is accurate, we have a disaster the likes of which church adversaries of my day could heardly have imagined: the Church being overthrown from within.

But wait. There is always the Holy Spirit to guide us from subjective to objective truth and to lead us to "Veritas" that is as immutable as God: that truth promised "to make us free." And, yes, in this university community, academically free.

Radnor House policy unfair

By R. MICHAEL BULLOTTA
Features Editor

The advertisement on the inside cover of the new student directory reads: "Radnor House Condominium, high-rise living for students on the way up!" However, a more accurate description would be: "Radnor House Condominium, high-rise living that makes you feel like you're back in the dormitory!"

On Nov. 13, the Radnor House Condominium Association sent out an update to owners which described a new regulation regarding noisy students. The regulation calls for a "$300 first offense fine for noisy behavior that requires notification by [Radnor House] security."

I was later informed that "first offense" really means that violators are allowed one warning. If the security is "forced" to come back a second time, a $300 fine is automatically tacked on to the owner's monthly association dues.

It is all too obvious that there are many problems with such a regulation. First, what exactly constitutes noisy behavior? Furthermore, who decides which instances are actually violations?

When asked these important questions at a recent executive board meeting, Radnor House Association President Daniel A. Lejeune, the one principally responsible for the regulation, acknowledged that it is a totally subjective rule with which no objective criteria can be used.

Furthermore, the ultimate judgment of guilt rests with the full or part-time security guard that happens to report a violation. Nothing further needs to be explicitly stated about the credibility problem.

While it must be acknowledged that a minority of students living in Radnor House create nuisances for their neighbors, one must not forget the basic facts.

One of the most important being that many students own their condominiums and are not paying rent. As owners, they deserve certain privileges. An obvious privilege is the right to a say in the regulations that affect their building, of which they own one portion.

Furthermore students have a right to be free from discrimination. The Radnor House Association unjustly distinguishes between "students" and "residents" in their memorandums, as well as in their policies. This only serves to further polarize the population residing at Radnor House. All students receive the unearned reputation of being loud, antagonistic vandals.

Equally damaging to overall peaceful cohabitation is the stereotype students hold of the non-students. Many feel that they are looked down upon by all of the older residents in the building, which is simply not true.

As an owner, I want my investment to appreciate in value, which means that any vandalism or similar problems occurring in the building are contrary to my interests. I support all reasonable regulations that minimize extreme behavior that interferes with the rights of other residents and protect my investment.

However, I am thoroughly opposed to the repressive and irrational regulation recently adopted by the Radnor House administration.

As a student, I resent being treated like I am living in a university-controlled dormitory. After all, I think $70,000 is a little much to pay to live in Sullivan Hall.

Take pride in Villanova's campus

To the Editor:

As a senior who grew up near Villanova, I have been a part of the Villanova community for some time now. We are truly a unique institution, one which is gaining in prestige and leadership.

For a suburban campus, with a lot of tradition and pride, our efforts to clean up after ourselves have been disgraceful and embarrassing.

But for any Villanova student who takes notice of his or her surroundings, the fall semester was like living in a zoo.

For a suburban campus, with a lot of tradition and pride, our efforts to clean up after ourselves have been disgraceful and embarrassing. For me, it is difficult to walk through the quad or in front of the Connelly Center because I get too upset at all the newspapers, cups and plates which litter the center of our campus. Doesn't anyone care? This problem is a piece of the puzzle which should not fit, but we let it.

The spring semester can prove if we students really do have "Wildcat Pride." A simple solution to this ugly situation is a sincere group effort — something which should sound familiar enough. After all, wasn't it our individual efforts which got us into Villanova in the first place? Now that we are here, let us do the job.

Support AIDS research

To the Editor:

When will the President wake up to reality? He continues to purchase another unneeded nuclear weapon system of mass destruction, the B-1 bomber, at a final cost of more than $280 million per plane. Meanwhile, across the nation and the world people are dying in a ravaging AIDS epidemic.

Surely, by canceling the B-1, S.D.I. and other unneeded nuclear weapon systems, enough money would be freed to find cures for AIDS, most cancers and probably feed and shelter the homeless and still go a long way toward balancing the budget.

The F.D.A. must wake up to the reality also. While people die of AIDS here in America, AIDS sufferers elsewhere are being saved with AIDS drugs which the F.D.A. stubbornly delays to test, approve and manufacture. The F.D.A. must wake up and cease its anti-humane AIDS policy immediately.

The Supreme Court must wake up to reality also and recognize that the true marriage bond is one of strong love and mutual sharing, not merely a piece of paper. It must recognize this and the need to grant nothing less than full human, civil and economic rights and privileges to all people, regardless of sexual preferences.

I urge everyone to wake up the President, Supreme Court, F.D.A. and Congress by sending them copies of this letter. Let us all do our part and make a donation to AIDS charities also.

Parking policy questioned

To the Editor:

I am directing this letter to Chief Rowan Kelly, director of security or any Security guards or anyone else who can answer a few questions I have about parking policies.

Over bréak, I needed to do some work on campus late at night and, following those stupid rules in the handbook, decided to register my car to park past 2:30 a.m. I went to the main gate and told the officer that I wanted to register my car. I expected a simple recording of window tag number, but instead got rude responses (not that they bothered me, because I can be ruder) and a list of questions, the answers of which are none of Security's business.

First, I was asked until what time I wanted my car registered. How was I supposed to know how long I was going to be there? Anyway, I was told impatiently by a Security guard, who really had nothing better to do at the time, that I had to give them the time until which I planned to stay at school, after which my car would be subject to towing. He then told me that the window tag surpasses registration after 7 a.m. I told him to register me until 7 a.m. and figured that that was the end of it. Wrong!

The guard then wanted to know where I would be, if I was going to stay there all the time, a phone number where I could be reached and the purpose of my stay. What do they need to know that information for? They surely don't ask you that when you pull into the lot in the morning.

First, what is so special about those five early morning hours that requires registration? Do monsters come out of the ground and roam the parking lot, creating destruction at will, and Security is trying to protect the students from them?

Does Kelly himself get a tank and a list of the registered car owners and ride through the lots in those hours, crushing all unregistered vehicles like a proverbial Angel of Death? Shouldn't the tag that I paid $50 for in September entitle me to unlimited parking instead of excluding five hours a day for unknown reasons?

Why all the questions about my intentions, Kelly? This isn't Nazi Germany or Russia, and I certainly do not carry a bomb around campus.

In my opinion, which is shared by most others, only those people (parents and visiting friends staying overnight) who don't have window tags should have to register their cars, overnight or otherwise. Why isn't this the policy?

I would really like an answer and an explanation of this openly idiotic and reasonless policy that has spawned many car towings unnecessarily, because of the existence of "special" hours of window tag validity.

Request for styrofoam boycott

To the Editors:

I would like to bring to the attention of my fellow students a recent issue of concern. There has been a growing nation-wide interest in the effects of disposal of non-biodegradable paper products, in particular, that of styrofoam.

Mayor Ed Koch of New York has called for a halt in the purchase of all styrofoam cups, plates and other products. It seems that styrofoam does not decompose and thus results in the straining of landfills. Its negative effects are compounded by the dangerous chemicals emited when styrofoam is burned.

Koch does not stand alone in his efforts. This past October, the entire community of Berkley, California banned fastfood restaurants such as McDonalds. They found their use of foam packaging to be most undesirable. Residents, legislators and students in Vermont, Rhode Island and Seattle have adopted similar steps.

At Villanova we witness an abundance of styrofoam products in our cafeterias. I believe it is a dual responsibility of the students and members of the food service to take action against the destruction of our environment by banning any further use.

Suitable substitutions for styrofoam have been researched and found to be equivalent in quality and usefulness. A minor inconvenience now may well prevent long term, dangerous results.

Comments on protest

To the Editor:

Several weeks ago one of the priests, The Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, vice president for Academic Affairs, I believe, said that it would be impolite for the students to mount a protest against Attorney General Edwin Meese, III.

It is refreshing to see that only a dozen students were impolite, and they were from the Peace and Justice group. And this out of a student body of 6,000.

Strange, isn't it?

Curriculum lacks Catholic tradition

To the Editor:

At least heroic New York Archbishop O'Connor has refused to advocate condoms to fight AIDS, as the traitors in the United States Catholic Conference have suggested. (Really, condoms don't even prevent pregnancy reliably.)

One can, in general, blame the decline of the faithfulness to the traditional Roman Catholic religion on the American bishops, who as a whole have not provided the "man in the pew" with any strong courageous Catholic leadership.

We loyal to the Pope and Catholic tradition have said this for 20 years, including publications ran by layman suchas Fidelity magazine started by E. Michael Jones (who was fired from a Catholic university for strongly supporting the Faith in the face of the heresy of the school), and the Wanderer newspaper (which reportedly Cardinal Ratzinger, the Pope's right hand man, carries with him in his back pocket.) Without the latter high quality periodical, I would have not so successfully completed my M.A.

The large archdiocesan high school my third child attended neglected Roman Catholic tradition and teaching so much, that the children who graduated with her whom I questioned did not know who St. Augustine or St. Thomas Aquinas were. Also, when asked, they stated that Martin Luther was "a black preacher."

In 1986, I got my Masters degree in philosophy from Villanova University. I could have gotten such without taking one course in the philosophy of St. Thomas Aquinas. The most popular philosophers among graduate students there were Friedrich Wilhelm Nietzche, Hitler's drug taking insane mentor, and Martin Heidegger (the atheist who stated in the 1920s disgustingly that because the German people were complacent like "fish in a stream," all deserved to be "plunged into dred"). Later Hitler obliged him his wish.

It is a mystery why in a Catholic school there is a course on Heidegger and not one on his intellectual superior and contemporary Dietrich Von Hildebrand, an exemplary Catholic thinker. Von Hildebrand escaped from Germany with his life while Heidegger was left in peace by Hitler.

One would think from examining the graduate offerings that Catholic philosophy died in the Middle Ages. Of course it did not. However, how many graduate students work on modern Catholic giants such as Marcel, Gilson, Maritain, Chesterton, or Belloc. Have they even heard of them? Our modern Catholic institutions are suffering from historical and philosophical amnesia.

When one falls into mortal sin, (as have many of us Catholics have by our adopting liberalism's barbaric moral code), the first thing that decays is the intellect. ("A fish rots at the head first.") This fact explains why the "baptized Democrats" of the U.S. Catholic Conference (USCC) issue statements which are in contrast to the genuine Catholic religion, such as their pastoral on the economy, which is in reality an endorsement of leftist political philosophy of the Democratic party. (They also support the communist thugs, enemies of the Church, who now run Nicaragua). We can contrast this tripe with true Catholic social teaching as put forth by Pope Leo XIII and confirmed by later popes.

While society is crumbling and souls are being lost all around them, the USCC has decided to use its time to cater to the spoiled whining women's lib movement by planning another anti-Catholic irrelevant pastoral, this time on "women."

Thank you

We would like to thank all of the members of the RSA (especially Paul Clementi) for their work on the Advent giving tree. Six hundred needy people in the Philadelphia area received gifts of clothing this past Christmas — thanks to the generosity of the Villanova community and St. Thomas of Villanova parish. The letters that we have received back from many of these families have been moving. So, please feel good, Villanova, you have shown one of your better sides!

Local groundhog to predict coming of Spring

By KAREN IOVINO
Staff Reporter

Regardless of the snow still present on the ground, as soon as the second semester rolls around, students' thoughts automatically turn to spring. How much longer until the warmer weather comes along? Feb. 2 is Groundhog's Day, a foolproof test to judge how long winter will remain with us.

All it takes to observe the exciting activities of Groundhog's Day firsthand is a trip to the Philadelphia Zoo. There, at 10:30 a.m., one-year-old female groundhog named Werzel will emerge from her burrow and attempt to forecast the onset of spring on the basis of whether she sees her shadow. Legend has it that if she does, winter will stay for six more weeks; if she does not see her shadow, spring will come early.

If Groundhog's Day is not enough of a special event to get you to the zoo on a cold February morning, you can enjoy one of Philadlephia's most famous spots at your leisure. Rates went up this year for the first time since 1985, but prices of admission into the zoo are still very reasonable. A full day adult ticket is $4.50, with lower rates for children and senior citizens, and discount rates for groups of 15 or more.

During November, December, January and February admission is free on Mondays. The Zoo also donates free tickets to special groups through the Disadvantaged Children's Fund, giving out 61,000 free admissions last year alone.

Expressing his concern over the slight increase in rates, Philadelphia Zoo President Bill Donaldson states, "We continue to plan many events and activities here where admission is discounted, or, in many cases, free."

Whether your motives for going to the Philadelphia Zoo center around Feb. 2 and Werzel the groundhog, or simply an entertaining way to spend an afternoon, the zoo offers a unique way to have a good time. When was the last time you visited the zoo? Werzel is waiting for you!

Villanova alumni celebrate together in Pittsburgh

By KRISTIN A. SWITALA
Staff Reporter

"V for Villanova, V for Victory!" the cry sounded around the barbecue pits and soda barrels. Nearly 70 alumni and current students laughed merrily and sang our fight song; members of the class of 1959 and 1989 joined together to celebrate those good old college days.

Incoming freshman chatted with upperclassmen to get the inside scoop on majors, football, fraternities, sororities and to find out if there really is a beach in front of Sheehan Hall. Alumni offered tips to business majors and engineering seniors on which corporations have the best benefits, and compared experiences in married life with their former classmates.

No, this is not homecoming or orientation. It is a scene from the annual Wildcat Summer Picnic, sponsored by the Western Pennsylvania Alumni Association, for alumni, students and incoming freshmen living in the Pittsburgh area. According to Dan Carapellucci, president, our 1987-88 freshman are "so quick, so witty; they know how to talk and present themselves — that's so impressive."

After 20 years of work and organization, the WPAA is going strong, thanks to Carapellucci and fellow officers Ray Hartung, vice president; Maryann Hazelhuhn, treasurer; Charlie Beuchel, secretary; John Elash, Frank Polito and Paul Smith.

Each summer, this alumni club holds a gala local picnic for Villanova alumni and students. Along with other alumni nationwide, they participate in the admissions Liasion Office Representative program, through which they receive the names of local students who have been accepted at Villanova. These incoming freshmen are then invited to the picnic, where they are informally introduced to our school by our prominent alumni and students in the Pittsburgh area.

This picnic is just one activity sponsored by one of Villanova's 60 worldwide alumni clubs. Last year over 200 special events were sponsored by the Villanova Alumni Association, stated Alumni Director Robert J. Capone. Reunions, homecoming celebrations, sporting banquets, local picnics and trips are just some of the programs that Villanova's alumni run each year.

Alumni involvement in the Pittsburgh club has been steadily increasing, according to Capone, as more graduates accept administrative positions in the corporate center. This, along with Big East competition, promotes Villanova's image tremendously in the area. This aids in the recruiting of academically and athletically gifted students.

To those currently studying at Villanova, Carapellucci advises to not "worry about a specific field if you are unsure. Just learn how to talk, to be compassionate, to not hide your emotions. It's the person who can involve himself with the emotions of the other person who's going to get ahead in the long run."

Break gives student rest, rays and rock and roll

By R. MICHAEL BULLOTTA
Features Editor

When Christmas break arrives, students at Villanova are presented with four weeks of free time to do whatever their hearts desire. They are given an opportune chance to get ahead of the game.

This year I vowed to spend my time productively, working at my law messenger job during the week and studying for the Law School Aptitude Test on the weekends.

Not surprisingly, I ended up doing neither. Like many students, much of my time was invested in the payless profession of the home soap opera critic. At one point, I had committed to memory the characters and storylines of five different daytime dramas, two of which were broadcast at the same time. This statistic still scares me today.

As I look in the mirror and see my fading tan lines, I am reminded of one week that I can look back on with no regrets; one week of my vacation that was well spent.

The expression on my best friend's face when the ski report on the radio exclaimed, "There are no ski conditions whatsoever in the state of Michigan," was less than enthusiastic. It was then that I realized drastic measures were called for.

"Don't you have an aunt that lives in Clearwater, Florida?" I asked my friend. He nodded and grinned eagerly, and everything was settled.

Neither of us had any summer clothes home with us since we had not anticipated such an excursion. But, after agreeing that there is no existing law that would prevent us from buying some shorts when we got to Florida, we packed the car. Two hours after hearing the pessimistic snow report, we found ourselves on our way to enjoy nature's other extreme.

The 22-hour drive was not exactly a tantalizing experience. With the energy obtained from the wholesome goodness of Mountain Dew and Cheetos, we made the drive without stopping for sleep. Playing the popular memorization game that begins, "I'm going to Florida and I'm bringing a . . ." also helped fill the hours. Incidently, I thought I would never survive my friend's continuous playing of the soundtrack from "Rocky IV."

We arrived at our destination just before noon. It was sunny and 80 degrees — just another day in paradise. We spent our obligatory half-hour visiting and conversing with Aunt Gertrude. Then, before unpacking, we proceeded to the Gulf of Mexico.

The sand was warm and soft, and provided us with a most comfortable bed for relieving our exhausted state of consciousness.

The next few days were carbon copies of the first, and most of our time was spent rubbing greasy oil on ourselves and paying homage to the celebrated Coppertone god.

We spent our evenings patronizing local nightclubs, sporting our bronze status acquired from the day's tanning session. There was one particular night, in one particular club, that was particularly interesting.

As my buddy and I were sitting at a table in an overcrowded nightclub, we heard the DJ announce that he was signing up participants for the night's main event, a lip-synch contest. The winner of the contest would receive $100.

My friend scanned the club and made a brilliant observation. He commented that the average patron appeared to be of a less sophisticated genre. Bluntly put, it was the kind of crowd you would find at the championship wrestling finals, or the monster truck pull at the sports arena. With this in mind, my friend stated that he was going to enter the contest and urged me to do the same. Since the night was still in diapers, and my liquid nerves had not kicked in yet, I gracefully declined.

My pal signed up to do a lip-synch to his favorite dance song by Prince called "Lets Go Crazy." Later that evening, that is exactly what I did, as I found myself, too, enlisting as a contestant. My stage name was Armando Gonzalez, my song — "La Bamba."

For a while, we both felt very confident; that is, until the "celebraties" arrived. I was in the men's room when I sighted the first look-alike. I was innocently washing my hands, when in walked a man who I mistook for Michael Jackson. I said "Hi" to "Michael" and wished him good luck, knowing it was I who would need it.

When I returned to my table, and my now anxious friend, I was informed that look-alikes of Mick Jagger, Bruce Springsteen, and Heart were spotted on the premises preparing for the contest. It was now all too clear that the other contestants were not like us, two spontaneous partygoers, but professionals who were trained and accomplished in their craft.

It would have been easy, at that point, to be overwhelmed with intimidation and drop out of the competition. "No," I said to my friend, "The show must go on. We can't disappoint our fans." My friend politely brought me back down to earth and reminded me that we have no fans and that I was not really Richie Valens. After some persuading, and a round of B-52s, my buddy finally agreed to go on.

Time passed, and I had all but forgotten about the contest, when the DJ. announced; "Our first contestant tonight is Armando Gonzalez doing 'La Bamba!' " Since I had signed up last, I was called on stage first.

When I stood up, my knees felt shaky, and I suddenly became tense. I could not believe what I got myself into. Then I realized that I had to go on and I somehow slipped into the character of the legendary rock star. I rolled up my jeans, exposing my pennyloafers, and slipped on my Wayfarers. The rest is history.

Much to our surprise, the crowd really seemed to appreciate our performances. Needless to say, neither of us won the $100 first prize. That honor went to "Mick Jaggar."

However, the prize was not important. The memories we took home from the trip are more valuable than mere green and white paper. We took home something we could never spend.

But even more valuable still, is the lesson to be learned from my vacation. The lesson is a simple one. When you run out of things to do, simply use your imagination and be spontaneous. Take it from Armando Gonzalez, the most fun things in life are those done on the spur of the moment. So, why not just kick back and live a little? Your fans are counting on you.

Ski Club conquers Killington

By ALLEN AMBROSINO
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Many people have a problem finding something exciting to do over the month-long Christmas vacation. Villanova's Ski Club presented an alternative to sitting at home by offering a ski trip to Killington for College Week from Jan. 3-8. For $340, students spent five action-packed days in a luxury condominium while being able to enjoy unlimited skiing on each of Killington's six mountains.

The only unpleasant parts of the trip were the eight-hour bus rides we had to endure to and from Vermont. My bus was overcrowded and one unlucky person was forced to stand throughout the entire trip. However, everyone tried to make the best of the situation by cooperating with one another. Hopefully, next year the transportation problem will be dealt with in a more efficient manner.

When we arrived at the slopes, the difficult ride was more than compensated for by the luxurious condominiums that we were given for the week. They were furnished with a color television, VCR, microwave oven and, of course, a fireplace. Because of the extremely low temperatures, the fireplace came in very handy at the end of a long day of skiing.

After the ski lifts closed at 4 p.m., people from colleges all over the United States jumped out of their ski outfits and got ready to go our and enjoy the nightlife. Shuttle buses came every 20 minutes which enabled everyone to take advantage of nightclubs such as The Pickle Barrel and the Wobbly Barn. All of these places were geared towards College Week as they provided a different type of party every night.

The highlight of the week was the fantastic skiing. This was my first time on the slopes and I definitely was not disappointed. The first day was very frustrating as my skis would not do a single thing I wanted them to.

However, the instructors at Killington taught me the basics. I was able to ski many of the slopes with relative ease, despite icy conditions. I never thought that it would be possible to enjoy subzero temperatures (-40° with the windchill factor), but the 107 trails at Killington kept me occupied all of the time.

Besides the actual skiing, there were breathtaking views wherever you looked from the chairlifts and the peaks of the six mountains. If any of you visit Killington in the near future, you should take the 25-minute ride on the gondola to Killington peak. It is picturesque to say the least.

The Ski Club should be commended for an excellent job of organizing the trip to Killington. It was a good way to meet a lot of new people and a great way to spend part of Christmas vacation.

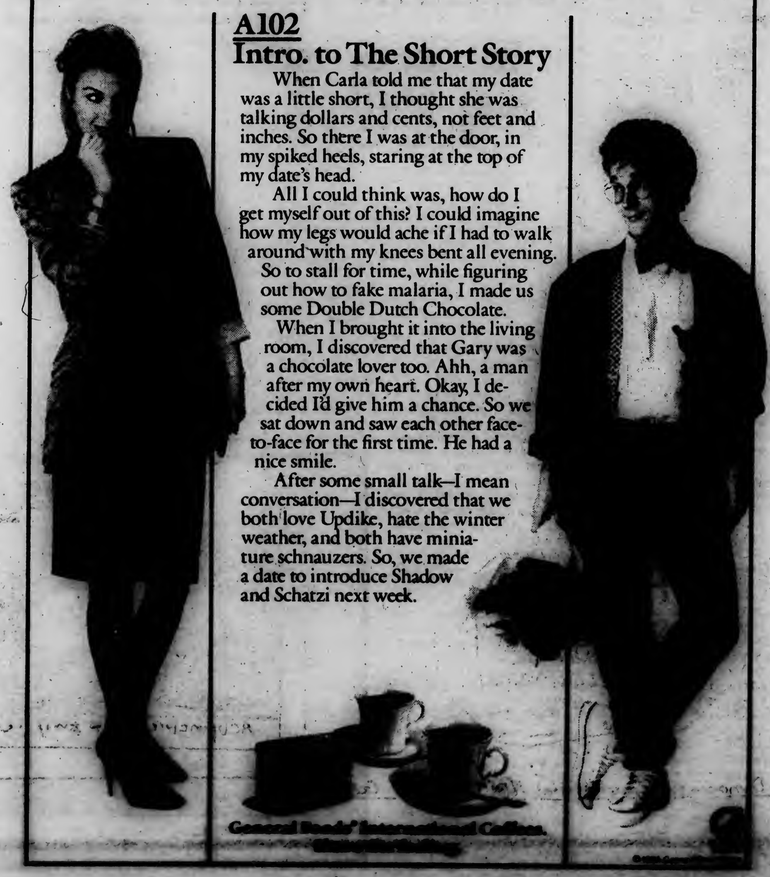
Campus Ministry: A time for renewal

By the REV.
RAY JACKSON, O.S.A.

Beginning a new semester calls us to renewal and vision. Perhaps we have shopped for clothing, purchased new books, re-examined the directions of our academic careers or promised ourselves to bring more self-discipline to our study habits. Yet we should not overlook the need for renewal of our spiritual life.



Spiritual renewal for Christians involves a fresh commitment to Christ, since the heart and center of our faith in God is in and through the person of Jesus. The gospel writers proclaim Him as the Word of God, for example, the one who has given definitive meaning to the understanding of the ultimate mystery. Jesus tells us that He is the way, the truth, and the life. What does that mean?

The way of Jesus was a paradox. He lived fully by dying to self, taking up his cross and laying down his life so the human family might find its way to God. He cured the blind, healed lepers, forgave the adulteress and challenged the hypocracy of the self-righteous. He did all of this so that we might follow His example of healing the wounds of injustice, restraining the hostility within ourselves and naming the evils in our society.

The truth of Jesus was the love of God. His life and message proclaimed the great love of God for his people. As a Jew, Jesus shared this good news of God's love with his Hebrew sisters and brothers. But, He made clear that, henceforth, God's mercy, kindness and forgiveness was to be extended to all the world. Jesus, as prince of peace, is the truth of God's peace for the human family.

Finally, Jesus is life. For those willing to accept Him, He becomes the source of freshness, energy, strength and comfort. His way is often hard since we must reject our selfish impulses, forgive our enemies and reach out in love and charity to the least among us. Yet, in all this, His presence in prayer and Eucharist provides us with the determination to follow him unreservedly.

Ultimately, we find life everlasting in Jesus Christ. As we begin a new semester, let us take a new hope in him as the way, the truth and the life.

Intro. to The Short Story

When Carla told me that my date was a little short, I thought she was talking dollars and cents, not feet and inches. So there I was at the door, in my spiked heels, staring at the top of my date's head.

All I could think was, how do I get myself out of this? I could imagine how my legs would ache if I had to walk around with my knees bent all evening.

So to stall for time, while figuring out how to fake malaria, I made us some Double Dutch Chocolate.

When I brought it into the living room, I discovered that Gary was a chocolate lover too. Ahh, a man after my own heart. Okay, I decided I'd give him a chance. So we sat down and saw each other face-to-face for the first time. He had a nice smile.

After some small talk—I mean conversation—I discovered that we both love Updike, hate the winter weather, and both have miniature schnauzers. So, we made a date to introduce Shadow and Schatzi next week.

Peace Corps offers incentive program for grads

By JACQUELINE GENTILE
Assistant Features Editor

What are your plans after college? Graduate school? Entry into the ever dreaded "real world"? Either way, there's no getting around paying off those student loans — until recently that is.

The Peace Corps is now offering an incentive program for college students. The Student Loan Forgiveness provision of the Higher Education Act of 1986 allows Peace Corps volunteers with a National Direct Student Loan (NDSL) to have a percentage of their loans eliminated with each year of service.

For the first two complete years of Peace Corps service, 15 percent of a volunteer's loan, plus interest, is canceled each year. For each of a volunteer's third and fourth complete years of service, 20 percent of his or her loan, plus interest, is eliminated.

This provision only applies to NDSLs taken out on or after July 1, 1987. In addition, these borrowers are only eligible for the loan forgiveness provision if they do not have an outstanding balance on the NDSL program. Moreover, the Loan Forgiveness provision applies only to the NDSL program. The Peace Corps has no authority to forgive loans in other programs, such as the GSL prgram. Finally, there is not loan foregiveness of NDSLs taken out after Peace Corps service.

For undergraduates, $9,000 is the maximum loan amount for which NDSL Forgiveness applies. For graduate students, $18,000 is the maximum amount.

Even with the incentive of the student loan forgiveness provision, why would a college graduate postpone putting to use his or her skills in today's prosperous and competitive market?

The Peace Corps, in fact, does allow volunteers to put to use their skills and to gain valuable job credentials and experience which employers look favorably upon. Peace Corps volunteers can do work in several fields, including agriculture, forestry, fish culture, health and nutrition, education, engineering, industrial arts and small business and cooperative development.

The Peace Corps also allows volunteers the opportunity to travel. Today, almost 6,000 people work in 63 countries in Africa, Asia, the Pacific, South and Central America and the Caribbean.

Finally, the Peace Corps gives individuals the opportunity to help people in developing countries and to experience life in a different culture.

Anyone who is 18 years old is eligible to be a Peace Corps volunteer. There is no upper age limit regarding eligibility. Even married couples can serve together, although people with dependents are rarely accepted as volunteers. Most jobs, however, call for a college degree and/or three to five years of work experience.

If you are interested in serving as a volunteer for the Peace Corps, or would like more information on the loan forgiveness provision, call the Philadelphia recruitment office at (800) 462-1589.

For your health . . .

By JACQUELINE GENTILE
Assistant Features Editor

Are you counting calories in an effort to peel off those extra holiday pounds in preparation for spring break? Whatever the reason, if you are watching your waistline, chances are you drink low calorie beverages.

So, when spring break rolls around, you'll probably look great and be able to turn some heads on the beach at Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. But, whatever you do, just don't smile at anyone. That's right. Diet colas that won't go to your waist will leave their mark, literally, on your teeth.

According to the Pennsylvania Dental Association (PDA), most diet sodas are flavored with citric and phosphoric acids, and many also contain acidic fruit juices such as orange, pineapple and apple. These acids lower the ph level in sodas, making them very acidic. — Many are more acidic than vinegar. When this acid comes into contact with teeth it can cause brown stains and cracked enamel and teeth that "gradually dissolve," according to PDA experts. Moreover, much of this damage is not immediately visible to either patients or dentists.

The PDA suggests some ways to avoid this dental health problem. In addition to using a flouride toothpaste and flossing daily, its experts suggest that diet soda consumption should be limited to two cans a day and should be drunk through a straw to avoid as much soda contact with the teeth as possible.

So, the next time you reach for a diet soda, think twice, because you might end up using your spring break money to pay for dental bills.

THE ART BIN

Going away for break?

By TRACY WHARTENBY
Staff Reporter

Dr. Joseph A. Kinney, faculty advisor of the Villanova University Graduate School Alumni Association, is organizing three trips which are open to Villanova students, faculty, staff and alumni.

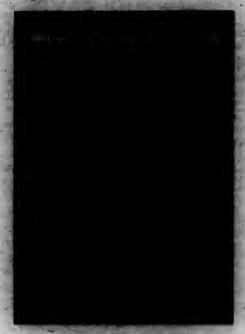
Two of the trips include an excursion to Nassau (Paradise Island) and a cruise to Bermuda. The journey to Nassau will take place during Spring Break and will cost $599. Lasting from May 25 to May 30, the cruise to Bermuda will cost $535.

The most expensive trip, a vacation to England, includes sightseeing tours of London, Stratford and Bristol. The schedule consists of a tour of the west end of London and visits to Buckingham Palace, Westminster Abbey, Big Ben, houses of Parliament, Trafalgar Square, Nelson's Column, and Stonehenge.

The group will also be entertained at a theater performance in London. While visiting William Shakespeare's birthplace in Stratford, the group will hear from Kinney about Shakespeare's life and literature. In Bristol, the travelers will be given a tour of the city.

Kinney, a professor who has taught several courses specializing in Shakespeare's plays, will share his experiences from his previous journeys to England with the group.

The trip to England costs $1,095 per person (double occupancy), and includes round-trip airfare, six nights in first-class hotels, breakfast and dinners daily, tours, a theater performance, U.S. departure tax and customes and security taxes. The final payment will be due Feb. 10.



Interested participants can contact Kinney at 645-4799 or 545 7670.

Molly has a baby in 'For Keeps'

By KATHRYN QUIGLEY
Entertainment Editor

"For Keeps"
directed by John Avildsen
Tri-Star Pictures

See Molly Ringwald as the editor of her high school paper; see Molly get pregnant by her cute boyfriend; see them panic; see Molly Ringwald in labor; see Molly, the boyfriend and the baby all work things out.

Is this a story in the National Enquirer? No, it is the plot of "For Keeps," a new movie from Tri-Star Pictures. It is the story of two seniors in high school and how their relationship changes when pregnancy enters the picture.

Ringwald ("Pretty In Pink," "The Pick-Up Artist") portrays Darcy Elliot, a bright student in Kenosha, Wisconsin. She and her boyfriend, Stan Bobrucz (Randall Batinkoff), have bright futures ahead of them. Darcy plans to study journalism at the University of Wisconsin, while Stan is set to go to Cal Tech to be an architect. Like many other teenagers in love, they are convinced that their love will endure the separation.

They have it all planned — and then Darcy becomes pregnant. They are faced with the perennial pregnancy problems: should she have the baby, and if so, should she keep it? And what about their college plans?

Sound predictable? It is. It is obvious that Darcy has the baby and keeps it; if she did not, the movie would be over in 20 minutes.

Screenwriters Tim Kazurinsky and Denise DeClue (they also wrote the screenplay for "About Last Night ...") approach this movie as if it were an original topic. While the crisis-of-the-teenage-couple-when-the-girl-gets-pregnant idea is new for the big screen, it has been played to death on "Afterschool Specials" and soap operas.

What keeps this movie from being a celluloid cliche is the acting skills of Ringwald and Batinkoff. Ringwald's character is much more human in "For Keeps."

What keeps this movie from being a celluloid cliche is the acting skills of Ringwald and Batinkoff. Ringwald's character is much more human in "For Keeps." She's warm and realistic, unlike her somewhat aloof characters in "Sixteen Candles" and "Pretty In Pink."

Batinkoff as Stan is believable as a guy who gives up his youth and a college scholarship at the same time. Prior to filming "For Keeps," Batinkoff was a freshman at Brown University.

Veteran actors Conchata Ferrell and Kenneth Mars play Stan's parents while Miriam Flynn is Darcy's "I want to be your best friend" mother. Some of the better dialogue in the movie is between Mars and Flynn as they spar about their respective child's interests. Each wants their child to go to college, no matter what.

Darcy and Stan's struggles, with the baby and each other, are believable enough. The movie occassionally gets a little too cute, but stops short of overdoing it. Heaven forbid impressionable 13-year-olds should think having a baby in high school is fun.

In the advertisement for the movie, there are the words "Love means sticking around," and "For Keeps" sticks to that theme. This is not just a one-sided look at teen pregnancy, as might be expected. Stan's side of the problem is explored as thoroughly as Darcy's. He sticks around and we can see how he copes.

In retrospect, however, the oddest part of the movie is right at the beginning. There is a short clip from the "Miracle of Life" series on conception. It is a little weird to see Stan and Darcy's baby when it is only two seconds old.

Robin Williams shines in first Vietnam comedy

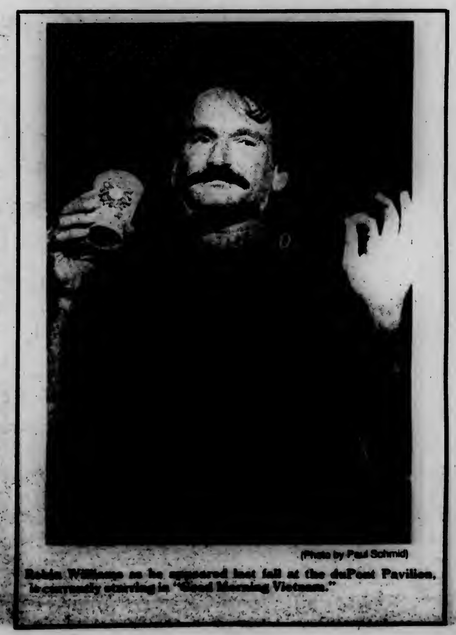
By MARYJO YANNACONE
Staff Reporter

The year is 1965. The mop-tops from Liverpool and their neighbors the Stones are rocking American teenagers amidst national turmoil and fear. Civil rights issues are rocking the country as well, and in the aftermath of the Kennedy assassination, the Vietnam conflict is gradually escalating from "police action" to war. First advisors, then a few troops, and finally thousands of American boys are sent over to support the South Vietnamese in their battle against the evil Communist enemy, the Viet-Cong. It is a time of government secrets and guerilla warfare that men and women at home in the States know little about.

"Good Morning Vietnam," perhaps the best movie about war to be released in a long time, takes up this period in history and holds it to the light. Refracted, as through a prism, are the many conflicting emotions of the U.S. government officials, soldiers and common people of Vietnam, thrown together against their will and without adequate reason.

Director Barry Levinson chooses to take a humorous and sarcastic look at the conflict, in the spirit of the movie and television series "M*A*S*H*." He tells the story of disc jockey Adrian Cronauer, who is stationed on Armed Forces Radio in Saigon. Levinson based the film on the real-life experiences of Cronauer, who is now enrolled at the University of Pennsylvania as a law student. Tapped by comic genius Robin Williams, Cronauer arrives in Saigon at the request of the U.S. military. At first hostile to Vietnam territory, American troops number approximately 35,000. By the time he is sent home less than one year later, there are 400,000 men in Vietnam, and the proportion returning home alive is steadily decreasing.

Cronauer is one of the most complex characters to come along in a great while. Williams' disc jockey battles his mixed emotions about the situation with wonderful sarcasm. It is fortunate that Levinson lured Williams into taking on the role of Cronauer. Few comedic talents could blend just the right combination of political commentary and social humor into the classic monologues that capture the absurdity of the U.S. involvement in Vietnam. Levinson succeeds not only in presenting a humorous side of Cronauer, but also in tracing his psychological adjustment and subsequent development and awakening to the grim realities of the war.



Williams is backed by a fantastic group of actors who are grossly underrated with regard to their contributions to the film. Cronauer's right-hand man at the radio station, Edward Garlick, lends support and leaves just enough room for Williams' genius to take off. An ensemble of three well-chose character actors come together to form the brass of the army. Led by General Taylor, an old softie who takes a liking to Cronauer, are two commissioned commander-in-chiefs in waiting, Sgt. Major Dickerson and Lt. Hauk. While the latter is nothing more than a straight-man who must see things run "by the book," the former is a personable, dangerous soldier who cannot begin to recognize the atrocities being waged on Vietnamese and American citizens alike.

Leading the cast of supporting actors is a young Vietnamese teenager named Tuan, who becomes Cronauer's best friend in the movie. As the two young men grow in their friendship, Cronauer comes to realize the inadequacy of the American troops in helping the Vietnamese people solve their problems. At first caught up in the antics of his job, Cronauer slowly awakens to the horrors of the war by twice coming close to being a victim of the guerilla tactics of the Viet-Cong. He falters through a radio broadcast just minutes after a local restaurant and bar is blown up as he stands only 20 feet away. Once back at the station, he attempts to broadcast in his usual style but the vision of the bodies of soldiers and civilians caught inside the building invade his mind. Later on, Cronauer and Garlick are blown off a road occupied by the Viet-Cong, once again bringing the realities of the war dangerously close.

Levinson consistently combines the natural style of Williams' personality with his message about the war and its impact on the Vietnamese and the American troops. What are we presented with, then, is a masterpiece of drama and comedy, of thought and action.

Perhaps the most moving scene in the entire films comes when Williams comes face to face with the men that he has entertained for several months. Unsure of his role in the war, and uncertain as to his feelings about the conflict [illegible] into enemy territory that his is a valuable and necessary position.

Regardless of the reasons for his being in Vietnam, the humor and sarcasm that Cronauer brings to the men every day is something to be valued. A turning point in the career of disc jockey Cronauer, this chance meeting with the boys from home will change the way one man thinks about not only himself, but about the tragedy that we now have the audacity to call "The Vietnam Conflict."

T.L.A. presents 'Little Shop of Horrors'

and
JEFF GILLIES
Assistant Entertainment Editors

The Theater of the Living Arts, located at 334 South St. in Philadelphia, has recently transformed from a cult classic movie theater back to a live production theater. Currently showing is "Little Shop of Horrors," a play which is best described as an offbeat musical comedy. The plot revolves around a bungling misfit, an airhead, an aging storeowner, a sadistic dentist and a man-eating plant whose diet changes their lives. Audrey II, an insatiable and deadly plant, captivates the audience with its unrelenting chant, "Feed Me."

The 400-seat theater was filled with patrons of all ages who thoroughly enjoyed a relaxing afternoon with Audrey II and the rest of the cast. The action began innocently enough as Seymour, an incompetent employee of a skid row flower shop, revealed an "interesting and unusual" plant to Mr. Mushnik, the owner of the store.

The deviant carnivore became an overnight sensation, as people from all over flocked to Mushnik's shop to see this unexplained phenomenom of nature. However, the plant soon became more trouble than it was worth, as Seymour learns that it needs a constant supply of human blood in order to survive.

At this point, Audrey II began its comical reign of terror. Jonas Cole and Tyrone Aiken combined talents to make the plant come to life and steal the show. Actually, the killer plant was created from 140 pounds of fiberglass, standing at over six-feet tall at the end of the musical.

Aiken's voice was obnoxious and irritating, creating laughter throughout the theater with each phrase he uttered. The audience was amazed at the versatility of Cole as he maneuvered Audrey II with both grace and accuracy.

One of the highlights of the show was the combined performance of three street urchins: Crystal [Sharon Laraine Young], Chiffon [La Tonya Sue Welch] and Ronnette [Kimberly Harris]. It seemed as though they were everywhere, exciting the crowd with their constant energy and enthusiasm. Even though they only had supporting roles, their contribution to the musical was vital to its success.

Two of the main characters, Seymour and Audrey, played by Stuart Zagnit and Colleen McIntosh, proved to be a winning combination. Even though their appearances did not seem compatible, after a few minutes everyone could sense that they were meant for each other.

After performing the role of Seymour in New York, Zagnit brought his experience and acting skills to the Philadelphia area. He was able to effectively lose himself in his character, showing what quality acting is all about.

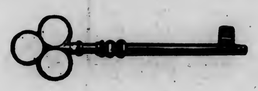
McIntosh played her role fairly well, but lacked a strong singing voice to carry her through several of the scenes. Her main problem was her tendency to overact at times and consequently, take away the sincerity of her character. Despite these weaknesses, her performance was adequate and did not have a serious effect on the overall quality of the play.

Mushnik, played by Marvin Einhorn, gave a mediocre performance. It was his lack of enthusiasm that kept his character from reaching his maximum potential. However, his authentic accent and his life-like appearance compensated for his nine to five attitude.

By far, the most versatile actor in the cast was Peter Edmond Haydu. Not only did Haydu play the part of a demented dentist, but he also portrayed several minor characters throughout the play.

At one point, he went from being a television producer to a well-dressed woman executive in a matter of seconds. It is a rarity to see one person take on as many roles as he did and perform them all with skillful acting. He was one of the reasons that "Little Shop of Horrors" was a big hit with the audience.

"Little Shop of Horrors" was enhanced by the many realistic props that provided a convincing impression of Skid Row.



Even in the very last row, there is still a close view of the stage due to the size of the theater. A few people in the audience, complained about the steep price of over $20. However, sources connected with the theater said that the price for Sunday matinees will soon be lowered to $12.50.

If you are looking for something different to do, "Little Shop of Horrors" is an entertaining theater experience for people of all ages. Remember, the Theater of the Living Arts is back and will be showing more quality productions in the near future.

VIDEO TITLE SHOP / VIDEO TITLE SHOP GRAPHICS COMPANION 1 ½ DATA-SOFT C64/128, AP

There are a lot of programs available with which you can superimpose graphics onto videotape. The primary use of this process is to create title screens and sequences for home video production. However, you can just as easily put titles and sequences onto any tape, adding some life to otherwise boring television programs or films.

Video Title Shop allows users to do just about anything imaginable in the use of the VCR-computer connection. You can create an endless array of title effects, scroll text up, down or across the screen, fade text, fade screens into each other, combine both text and graphics for a variety of effects and draw just about any pictures to include with the title.

Video Title Shop really contains two programs: Video Titler and MicroPainter Plus. Video Titler handles most of the options, while MicroPainter Plus gives you the graphics utilities and painting program you need to create pictures for use with Video Titler. Both are easy to use and are controlled by joystick and menus. Video Title Shop is all you could ever need.

Especially helpful for Video Title Shop is the well-written manual and inclusion of a Quick Start card that shows all basic options and a Quick Reference List that contains all commands from the keyboard. Hookup of your computer and VCR is explained well and covers all possibilities.

Video Title Shop Graphics Companion 1 is a separate product for the Video Title Shop that puts a lot of graphics for all occasions at your fingertips. Graphics Companion 1 covers such holidays as Christmas, Halloween, Easter and Valentine's Day and also includes more borders and objects such as a birthday cake and diploma. This disk can prove very useful to Video Title Shop owners.

PROJECT:STEALTH FIGHTER  MICROPROSE C64/128, IBM, ST

Project:Stealth Fighter is one of the two newest releases from MicroProse in the past months and may just prove to be the best flight simulator that the company has ever produced. The simulation takes place in a radar-elusive jet that the government is working on in secrecy, yet refuses to admit exists. A jet of this type is able to fly incredibly close to the ground at high speeds, thus making it an important military project.

Project:Stealth Fighter has beautifully detailed graphics, an easy to use command system, a view right from the cockpit, 3-D enemies and landscape, many mission possibilities, a tutorial, well-written manual and game aids. All of these game features are included on a two-sided disk. The manual is lonng, but includes background on jets, a full tutorial in Libya, tactical and flight mechanics explanations and explanation of all cockpit controls.

Also included with the simulation are a command placard that fits right over the keyboard and maps of the mission areas: Central Europe, Persian Gulf, North Cape and Libya. Trying missions in these areas offers a touch of reality to the flight simulation. The package arms you with all you need.

I found Project:Stealth Fighter to be a highly entertaining and intense experience. The types of weapons are many and I enjoyed bombing in the Persian Gulf. For newcomers to combat flight, this program is the only one you need.

MINI-PUTT  ACCOLADE C64/128 IBM, AT, AP

There have been many golf programs released over the last few years. Some have been very realistic, while others leave a lot to be desired. I have long yearned for somebody to put out a miniature golf game. Now, finally, my prayers have been answered with Mini-Putt. The game is fun and has a lot of challenging courses for you to play.

It is very easy to control your golfer in Mini-Putt, but very hard to survive the holes in the game without getting frustrated. The holes throw every miniature golf challenge imaginable at you and require patience and careful aim of the ball. Do not expect to breeze through the game. Firing a shot only requires aiming a guide arrow and pressing a joystick button. How long you hold the button determines the success of the shot.

Mini-Putt was designed for the miniature golf lover. There are a wide selection of holes, most of which have themes like TV shows and storybook characters to lessen the tense playing conditions. Try out all of the courses. They are all fun and the individual holes are very creative.

Especially important to game play is the screen setup. There are three windows on the screen: the large one shows a closeup of the hole, a small one in the left corner shows your golfer and the one in the bottom center of the screen gives an overhead view of the entire hole — a necessity. The graphics are clean and colorful and the greens show slope arrows. Mini-Putt is a must.

HALLS OF MONTEZUMA ½ STRATEGIC STUDIES GROUP C64/128, AP

War game players are often very fickle in that they only like to play games that take place in one part of history or with one country or army. I can honestly say that if your primary interest is in the United States Marine Corps, or even if you like war games in general, Halls of Montezuma is the next program that you have to buy. The war game simulation lets you play one of eight scenarios, alter any of these scenarios, create your own battles and change or design the graphics to be used in the scenario.

Halls of Montezuma includes the basic war game, as well as two other programs, Warpaint and Warplan. Warplan lets you change existing scenarios and make your own. Warpaint gives you creative control over the graphics of the terrain and icons in the scenarios. Together, the two extra programs make Halls of Montezuma the ultimate war game for the enthusiast.

The program chronicles most of the major battles in which the Marine Corps was a crucial element. The eight scenarios are: Mexico City, Belleau Wood, Iwo Jima, Okinawa-the Shuri Line, Okinawa-the final redoubt, Pusan, Inchon and Hue. All of these scenarios should keep you busy for a long time. Halls of Montezuma used a game system that was first designed for Battlefront. The system is very easy to use and is menu-controlled.

Inside the package, you can also find command cards and a full-color map of all of the areas in which the scenarios are located. The graphics are not impressive in Halls, but they do not have to be good in most war games anyway.

'Broadcast News' offers intelligent comedy

By ELANA ROSE STARR
Staff Reporter

"Broadcast News"
directed by James L. Brooks

During most of the 1980s, film critics bemoaned the scarcity of motion pictures being produced for an intelligent, adult audience. For years Hollywood flooded the screens with such sophomoric drivel as "Police Academy" and its sequels and "Porky's I, II, III and IV," ostensibly to attract the huge percentage of teenage moviegoers.

In 1987, however, more cerebral yet entertaining films were released nationally. While the year's highest grossing film was the marginal "Beverly Hills Cop II," and viewers still had to contend with the interminable "The Three Amigos" and the prosaic charms of arm wrestling in "Over the Top," a surprising number of motion pictures meant for a thinking audience emerged: "Tin Men," "I've Heard the Mermaids Singing," "The Big Easy" and "Nuts" are just a few.

One of the most appealing of these high-minded films is "Broadcast News," a contemporary love story/comedy set in a television network newsroom in Washington, D.C. "Broadcast News" works because of the excellence of the team players involved: actors William Hurt, Holly Hunter and Albert Brooks, and, behind the scenes, James L. Brooks. (The last two are not related.)

William Hurt, who has yet to give a one-note performance, plays anchorman Tom Grunick, the dumb but likeable guy, not unlike the sap he played in "Body Heat." What Tom lacks in education and reporting skills is compensated by his telegenic good looks and keen sartorial sense. With his earnestness and handsomeness, Hurt is perfect in the role. Indeed, James L. Brooks has claimed that he would not have made "Broadcast News" without Hurt.

Albert Brooks plays Tom's polar opposite, Aaron Altman, a brilliant field reporter (Brooks' real name, aptly, is Albert Einstein) who writes the best copy in the business, but lacks the charisma to make it as an anchorman. Brooks has come across as an egomaniac in his own films (including "Modern Romance" and "Lost in America"), but here he has given up his former theatrics and is wholly believable as the despairing intellectual with a forgettable face.

Both Aaron and Tom are smitten with Jane Craig, the network news producer. Jane may well be the first positive portrait of a career woman in contemporary films. The role was written for Debra Winger (star of James L. Brooks' award-winning "Terms of Endearment"), but she had to drop out of the film when she became pregnant. Brooks then auditioned almost every big-name actress in the business until selecting Holly Hunter ("Raising Arizona") for the part.

Hunter's Jane is a dynamo, projecting the requisite strength, intelligence and aplomb to do her job well. Even when spewing four-letter words at her co-workers, Jane never exhibits a tinge of the stereotypical rudeness that is often associated with high-powered career women. This is due, in part, to Hunter's diminutive size, soulful eyes and honey-laden Southern drawl. Her style of dress — she eschews dress-for-success suits for comfortable sweaters and flowing skirts — softens her image, as well, making her seem very human.

James L. Brooks, the writer/producer/director of "Broadcast News," is perhaps the person most responsible for the film's success. Brooks is no stranger to a television newsroom; he created the popular sitcom "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," which was set in a local (Minneapolis) news station. Brooks also did a two-year stint as a reporter himself, before making this movie. Therefore, it is no surprise that the setting for "Broadcast News" seems entirely authentic, an integral factor in the film succeeding.

Brooks' script must be commended. Brooks delves into how television news has been transformed from news as news, to news as both entertainment and a money-making enterprise. The screenplay is wickedly funny, as well. While it is not rife with one-liners eliciting belly laughs, its comic truisms really hit home.

Look for an unheralded cameo by Jack Nicholson, another "Terms of Endearment" alumnus, as the unsmiling star anchor. When the network needs to slash expenses and fires much of the staff, Nicholson's prima donna character refuses a cut in salary — he earns millions annually — in order to save some jobs. Nicholson reportedly based his newscaster on Chet Huntley, for whom he has a great deal of admiriation, but are there also sly allusions to Dan Rather during CBS recent troubled times? Whether or not there are, anyone who sees "Broadcast News" will never be able to watch Network News in the same light again

Cultural Film Series plays at Connelly Center

By ELANA STARR
Staff Reporter

Villanova University's Spring 1988, Cultural Film Series will revolve around the theme "Cinematic Images of Women." The series opens self-reflexively with a film about Marlene Dietrich, who, with Josef Von Sternberg, carefully crafted her screen persona.

Director Maximilian Schell tries to glimpse the real woman behind the construction. Subsequent films explore the dichotomous nature of the female image — virgin/vamp, victim/spider woman, heroine/femme fatale, saint/sinner, real person/constructed object. Two films about women whose lives made a tremendous impact on the world are included as are two films directed by women, one exploring relationships between males and females and the other between women themselves.

Each film will have four screenings on campus in the Connelly Center Cinema: Saturdays at 7 p.m.; Sundays at 3:30 and 7 p.m.; and Mondays at 7 p.m. Six of the Monday evening showings will feature discussions led by guest lecturers following the film. Tickets are $2 for students and senior citizens and $3.50 for the general public.

The series kicks off with Schell's documentary Marlene (Jan. 23-25). Also in January is the silent feature Sunrise, the first Hollywood film directed by F.W. Murnau, (Jan. 30-Feb. 1).

February brings the French import Therese, a joyous portrait of the 19th-century Carmelite nun called the Little Flower (Feb. 6-8). It is followed by the Von Sternberg classic Blonde Venus (Feb. 13-15), featuring Dietrich as an independent cabaret singer, and Welles' film noir thriller Lady From Shanghai (Feb. 27-29), starring his wife at that time, Rita Hayworth.

March starts off with the family melodrama Written on the Wind (March 19-21), directed by Douglas Sirk, and then showcases the biographical portrait Mother Teresa (March 26-28).

April's features include Agnes Varda's sardonic view of patriarchy in Le Bonheur (April 9-11); Ridley Scott's Alien (April 16-18); and the Canadian film I've Heard the Mermaids Singing, about a self-effacing typist with soaring fantasies (April 23-25).

In addition to the series, there will be special attraction on Wednesday, March 16 at 7 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema featuring multi-media artist Theodora Skipitares and her video Defenders of the Code, a musical piece which explores the science of genetics and the relationship between science and art. It will be followed by a panel discussion. Admission to this event is free.

Metal comes to the Spectrum over holidays

By RUSS CECCOLA
Senior Reporter

There are usually a lot of concerts over Christmas break in this area. This break seemed almost devoid of large shows, except for the following three. You should go see Rush and Kiss if you have the chance, but avoid Dio at all costs unless you leave after Savatage and Megadeth.

RUSH/ TOMMY SHAW

Rush have long been respected as great musicians and their reputation was upheld on their latest tour that hit the Spectrum on Dec. 13 in support of Hold Your Fire. Tommy Shaw opened for Rush, playing new songs from his solo career, such as "No Such Thing" and "Dangerous Game," as well as Styx classics like "Too Much Time on My Hands" and "Renegade." His band was tight and they got a good reaction, although unanticipated, from the audience.

Rush definitely put on a great show, perhaps their best, staying creative and musically superb as always.

Rush deviated from many past tours and opened with "The Big Money," as opposed to "The Spirit of Radio," which finished their set. The threesome that includes Geddy Lee (bass), Alex Lifeson (guitars) and Neil Peart (drums) mixed new songs and old tunes well, converting me to like the new stuff better than when I first listened to it on album. Such classics as "Subdivisions," "YYZ," "Limelight" and "Closer to the Heart" were performed amidst large screen projections and lasers, as well as six from Hold Your Fire, the best of which were "Force Ten" and "Time Stand Still."

The really old Rush songs, strongly instrumental and heavier, were saved for the encore. Most of "2112" was played, as well as the old standby "Need Some Love." The stage set was simple, including their trademark screen projection system and excellent use of lights and lasers. Also, balloons were dropped into the audience and inflatable balls appeared in the rafters, simulating the new album's cover. Rush definitely put on a great show, perhaps their best, staying creative and musically superb as always.

KISS/ TED NUGENT

Kiss ventured into the Spectrum on Dec. 20 to break up finals week with a good, yet not too impressive, show of mixed moments. Ted Nugent opened up, playing songs from his newest album, as well as classics such as "Cat Scratch Fever."

Nugent is making a strong comeback in the music world. Opening for Kiss is a step in the right direction of regaining his former status. In concert, he was as crazy as ever.

Kiss opened up with "Love Gun" surprisingly, saving former standard opener "Detroit Rock City" as the only encore song. The band, consisting of Paul Stanley (vocals and guitar), Gene Simmons (bass and vocals), Bruce Kulick (guitars) and Eric Carr (drums), has long been known for their energetic and theatrical shows. This tour continues their tradition, in support of Crazy Nights, although alienating much of the audience in the middle of the show. Kulick and Carr performed back to back solos after "No, No, No," wasting almost 20 minutes and the possibility for more songs. This is my only complaint about the concert.

Kiss ripped through standbys like "Cold Gin," "Lick It Up," "I Love It Loud" and their best song ever, "Rock and Roll All Nite," as well as introducing the crowd to new concert tunes such as "Reason to Live," a pop ballad-type song, "Crazy, Crazy Nights" and "Bang Bang. You," a sequel to "Love Gun." There are better songs on Crazy Nights for concerts, but the choice of these was still

Avant-garde novel explores The Western Lands

By ROBERT DUGGAN
Staff Reporter

"Death ... is equivalent to a declaration of spiritual bankruptcy. One must be careful to avoid the crime of concealing assets," writes William S. Burroughs in his latest novel, The Western Lands.

Burroughs was a major voice of the Beat Generation of the 1950s and has since continued to work in the forefront of avant-garde literature. Best known for his breakthrough novel, Naked Lunch, Burroughs has received over the years as much praise as he has condemnation for his unique brand of writing.

The Western Lands is the name for the paradise-like afterlife of Egyptian mythology. The author uses this vision of a spiritual paradise as a symbol for the state of existence manking must reach if it is to continue to exist.

Mankind, Burroughs feels, has declared "spiritual bankruptcy" by denying its own soul and clinging to this corporeal existence and, more importantly, this corporeal consciousness. To reach the Western Lands we must take the "Step ... from word into silence. From time into space."

To reach the Western Lands we must travel through the Land of the Dead, a nightmare world where souls are destroyed if they cannot face the challenges put to them. Burroughs parallels this mythological Land of the Dead with the earthly land of spiritual death we must face if we are to survive.

From the Russian front of World War II to the American Old West to the fall of Berlin to the mysterious land of Ancient Egypt, Burroughs takes his characters and readers and exhibits a startling breadth of imagery and emotion, displaying the striking similarities that run throughout the universe of mankind's history.

As much as this technique increases the effect of the novel it also creates problems for the reader. One must break out of the conventional style of reading to see Burroughs' message and this adjustment takes time. Like most avant-garde creations it takes some effort to overcome the frustration first experienced. His interweaving of tremendously disparate elements is sure to induce some headaches but the final, total effect is well worth the aspirin.

I would not recommend The Western Lands to anyone looking for some straight-line story. Only someone who is willing to struggle with Burroughs will gain anything from this work, which

The first character we encounter is William Seward Hall, an old man who we are told is writing this book. Hall, even though he is writing the book, struggles with the realization that he is trapped within it and is unable to "write himself out of" taking this journey. The similarity of this character's name to the author's lends support to the strong autobiographical reading the character of Hall suggests. It is a disturbing glance into the brilliant yet enigmatic mind of Burroughs.

Another pilgrim is Joe the Dead, a technician who had his soul burned away in the Hiroshima atomic bombing and who roams throughout time soullessly trying to find peace in this world. Hassan i Sabbah, an Egyptian trying to lead a movement on earth from "Time to Space," is yet another of the many travellers to the western lands.

The background for the pilgrimage is an interesting panorama of times and locales. Breaking with the conventional technique of linear narritive, the child of "the monumental fraud of cause and effect," Burroughs moves through time and place with reckless abandon. This technique is a wonderful approximation of the concept of syncronicity, a sense of this world's interconnectedness as something other than a casual relationship.

mind of the author, a mind which exemplifies the uniquely creative has unfortunately gone long misunderstood.

good. Philadelphia gave Kiss a strong reaction and revealed the source of their success: dedicated fans.

DIO/ MEGADETH/ SAVATAGE

Dio came to Philadelphia on Jan. 12 promoting Dream Evil and dragging Savatage and Megadeth along for the ride.

Savatage have been around for a long while, only now really breaking all chains and gaining popularity. Consisting of brothers Jon Oliva (vocals), Criss Oliva (guitars), Johnny Lee Middleton (bass) and Steve "Dr. Killdrums" Wacholz (drums), the band's new album, Hall of the Mountain King, is rising the charts and garnering much attention. Savatage played the title track from the new record, as well as the classic "The Dungeons Are Calling" and others. The band was tight, and is even better in a longer set, and rose above my expectations to get great crowd response.

Megadeth is on tour with Dio promoting their new album, released last week, amusingly called So far, so good ... so what! Megadeth is: Dave Mustaine (guitars and vocals), Dave Ellefson (bass), Chuck Behler (drums) and Jeff Young (guitars). The last two members are new and the band is still not as tight as they have been in the past, but their set was great.

Playing Megadeth classics like "Wake Up Dead," "These Boots" and "Devil's Island," the band also premiered these songs from the new album: "Hook in Mouth," "In My Darkest Hour" and "Anarchy in the U.K.," a cover version of the Sex Pistols' best tune.

Dio really disappointed me with this year's tour, wasting more time on solos than the last tour and performing medleys of more songs, truly a stupid move on his part. Although he mixed some of his greats like "Stand Up and Shout" and "Rock 'n Roll Children" with new songs like "Dream Evil" and "Naked in the Rain" and played three encores because Philadelphia is his favorite audience, there is no excuse for destroying great songs by only playing fragments of them in medleys. I will think twice before I see him again.

On the scene . . . Entertainment tidbits

By STEPHEN POWERS
Staff Reporter

It has not been a good month for couch potatoes. It looks like "St. Elsewhere" will soon treat its last patient, "Cagney and Lacey" will walk their last beat, and "Cheers" may be headed for its last hurrah. The rumored impending deaths of these three long-running series are the talk of the television world.

Actually, the cancellation of "St. Elsewhere" is more than just a rumor — it is a fact. "Elsewhere," which has garnered numerous Emmy awards during its six-year run, will air its final episode in May. The series, although never highly rated, has always been the critics' darling, but has been showing its age during the past two seasons. In an unusual move, it was "Elsewhere" producer MTM, not NBC, that pulled the plug on the show. However, this cancellation cloud has a silver lining. "Elsewhere's" production team is already hard at work on "Tatinger's," a new drama for NBC. "Tatinger's," which stars Stephen Collins as a New York restauranteur, will most likely take over "St. Elsewhere's" Wednesday night time slot this fall.

"Creative fatigue" is also the reason why "Cagney and Lacey" will probably be pulled from the CBS schedule. The acclaimed police drama holds the distinction of being one of the few network series to be cancelled and successfully revived.

Stars Tyne Daly and Sharon Gless have dominated the "Best Actress" Emmy category for the past five years. However, "Cagney" has been experiencing falling ratings over the past few seasons, and is running out of fresh story material. No big series finale is planned, and the show will quietly leave the air later this year.

The big question is: What will NBC do for the final episode of "Cheers"? Or will there even have to be one? In contrast to "Cagney and Lacey" and "St. Elsewhere," "Cheers" is consistently a Neilsen winner — it is the No. 3 show in the nation. Although nothing has been confirmed, it is rumored that Ted Danson wants to leave the show at the end of the season to pursue his flourishing film career (he is currently starring in the hit "Three Men and a Baby"). Minus Danson, "Cheers" will shut down, since it is unlikely that co-star Kirstie Alley could carry the show by herself. If the show is cancelled, it will be sorely missed.

Meanwhile, there is some good news this week, at least for "Moonlighting" fans. Cybill Shepherd, who has appeared in very few episodes this season, has returned full-time to the ABC detective show in episodes that will begin airing next month.

In addition to Shepherd's return, producers hope that an episode filmed in 3-D will help stem the show's ratings decline. "Moonlighting," which used the claymation technique for an earlier episode this season, will feature several action scenes and a 60-second commercial for Coca-Cola Classic in 3-D for the season finale.

The scenes will be shot using a new process called Nuoptix, which allows the picture to be seen in 3-D with special glasses, or as regular TV without the glasses. In the past, 3-D TV produced "double vision" for those viewing without glasses. Glasses for "Moonlighting 3-D" will be available in supermarkets and convenience stores, probably with the purchase of Coke. The episode will air in May.

SHORT TAKES: "Three Men and a Baby" was the Christmas movie season's biggest hit, taking in over $100 million in 8 weeks. Other winners included "Throw Mamma From the Train" (Danny DeVito, Billy Crystal), "Raw" (Eddie Murphy), and "Wall Street" (Michael Douglas, Charlie Sheen). The big losers were "Batteries Not Included," "Empire of the Sun," (both Steven Spielberg pictures), and "Leonard. Part 6," starring the supposedly-infallible Bill Cosby . . .

Pop singer Madonna's next role is only a brief cameo in "Bloodhounds of Broadway," which is not surprising, considering the resounding failures of her last two films. After the wraps "Bloodhounds," Madonna will make her stage debut in David Mamet's "Speed-the-Plow" at New York's Lincoln Center . . .

And finally, fox's late-night "Wilton North Report, which replaced "The Late show," turned out to be an even bigger bomb than the former Joan Rivers talk show. "Wilton North" was cancelled a few weeks ago after only one month on the air, and replaced with "Late Show" reruns featuring Arsenio Hall. Now, Fox wants Hall to host a new version of "The Late Show" in March, but since Hall is currently filming a movie with Eddie Murphy, Fox will use rotating guest hosts instead Sound familiar?

1987 seen as a productive year for music

By ANDREW MATHIS
Staff Reporter

1987 was one of the most productive years that the music business has seen in a long, long time. Albums were released by major artists in almost every area of popular music, many of which proved to be very successful both commercially and through radio air play.

U2

U2 dominated the music scene throughout 1987 following the release of The Joshua Tree. Some viewed it as U2's finest work, others saw it as an indication that U2 was selling out to the mass media, particularly those who had followed them since 1980s Boy. At any rate, the album was a great commercial success with the album's best songs "I Still Haven't Found What I'm Looking For" and "In God's Country" receiving more than adequate air play.

Various artists from many different areas of the music scene released follow-ups from previous albums in 1987. These artists included Bruce Springsteen, Sting, Michael Jackson, Madonna, Rush and Prince.

Of these albums Springsteen's and Jackson's were the most commercially successful, although they both lacked the freshness that had made both of their previous releases so successful. Musically, Prince's Sign o' the Times was the best follow-up of 1987 with such great new Prince classics as "U Got the Look" and "I Could Never Take the Place of Your Man."

Releases by Sting and Rush were quite simply disappointing.

Alternative Music

1987 was a banner year for alternative music. Several artists who had been in music since the late '70s broke in the mainstream music scene with releases. The Cure released Kiss Me, Kiss Me, Kiss Me and found themselves on metro-media radio with "Why Can't I Be You" and "Just Like Heaven." REM released Document, which ended up being one of the most critically acclaimed albums of the year, as well as having satisfactory airplay for the first time in their career.

Both New Order and The Smiths released compilations of previous releases from albums and maxi-singles entitled Substance and Louder than Bombs, respectively, and were soon to be found with frequently played

Foreigner gives fans some Inside Information

By JEFF GILLIES
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Inside Information
Foreigner

For the most part, Inside Information, the new release from Foreigner, marks a return to the band's straightforward style employed in their early days. Despite recent rumors of a break-up, which began when singer Lou Gramm took a break to record a solo album in 1987, Foreigner is rocking with as much energy as ever.

For those already familiar with the band, Inside Information can best be described as a mixture of the style prevalent on the Head Games album, and the style of Foreigner 4. For those who are not big fans of Foreigner this means the album contains both melodic, keyboard oriented ballads and fast moving, guitar-based tracks.

The first single from the album is perhaps the best example of this diversity. Titled "Say You Will," the song contains a mix of modern technology (keyboards and special effects) and a solid drum beat backbone that Foreigner frequently used in the later 1970s and early 1980s.

This union of the old and new is also evident in songs such as "Heart Turns to Stone" and "Can't Wait."

Also incorporated into the album are the slower ballads reminiscent of "Waiting For A Girl Like You." One such song, "I Don't Want to Live Without You," is one of the finest and most sentimental slower songs the band has recorded to date. "Out of the Blue" is almost equally as impressive, as Gramm shows that he possesses one of the most versatile voices in the industry today.

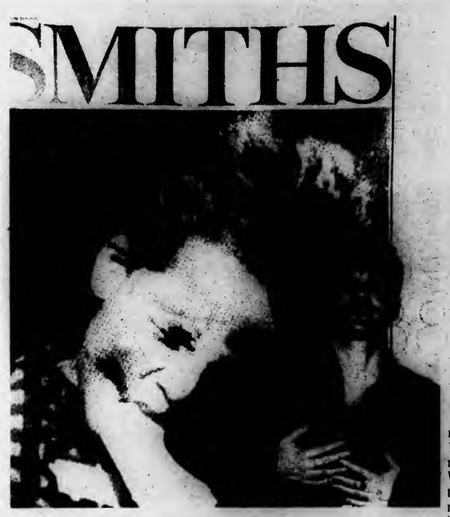
In contrast to the ballad type songs, Inside Information has some very strong rock and roll that Foreigner has steered away from since "Juke Box Hero." The band proves that they still have what it takes to shake the foundation.

"Counting Every Minute" displays some of Mick Jones' best guitar work ever with a rough, repetitive riff that runs throughout the song. There is no doubt that this is as good as anything the band has ever recorded. Considering they have been around since 1977 and written such classic material as "Cold as Ice" and "Double Vision," this is no small accomplishment.

"The Best of My Heart" starts off with the tranquil sounds of the Spanish guitar and is suddenly overtaken by a powerful arrangement of notes from Jones' electric guitar. Gramm joins in with a sure and unwavering voice to make "The Beat of My Heart" vintage Foreigner.

"Face to Face" and "Inside Information" are similiar to the melodic guitar/keyboard combination found on "Say You Will," "Heart Turns to Stone" and "Can't Wait." The only difference being that they are not quite as rapidly paced as the latter mentioned set. However, both songs have a balanced and upbeat rhythm.

Lyrically, the album is intelligent, well-written and refined. Although the album is somewhat monotone in direction, the album flows well from song to song. The subject of every song, except the title track, is love. This seems to be a popular subject these days, as almost every artist is writing about it.



However, there is an unusual element present on Inside Information. Where most bands try to use a song that signifies the theme of the album, Foreigner chose the one track that does not fit in with the rest of the album.

There are no distasteful or offensive verses on the album, although "Counting Every Minute" and "A Night to Remember," another hard rocking song, have strong sexual overtones.

Overall, Inside Information is an excellent mainstream rock and roll album. Foreigner shows the music world why they have lasted so long as a chart-topping band. Inside Information should do well on the charts, as all of the band's previous albums have. Once again, Foreigner has come through at a pivotal point in their career. This is definitely one of the best albums so far this year, and Foreigner fans are sure to be pleased with Inside Information.

Best music releases of last year reviewed

videos on MTV. The Smiths then released Strangeways, Here We Come and announced their eminent break-up, thus ending the career of one of the most influential alternative bands thus far.

Grateful Dead

Much to the delight of the deadheads, the Grateful Dead released In the Dark last year, their first release since 1980s Go to Heaven. After over 20 years playing together, the Dead finally had a Top 10 hit with "Touch of Grey," a song that is actually five years old. Some saw the album's popularity as discouraging to the mystique the Dead had carried all these years, but most agreed that In the Dark was definitely the freshest thing the Dead had done in a long time.

Heavy Metal

Unfortunately, the "heavy-metal" scene was dominated in 1987 by a lot of bands who didn't really deserve the title. Bands like Whitesnake and Bon Jovi topped the charts with their latest releases, but the music was weak in comparison to other metal releases. Metallica returned after the loss of bassist Cliff Burton with Garage Days Re-revisted, a collection of cover tunes ably copied by the kings of speed metal. Even those who despise heavy metal can appreciate Metallica's cover of the Misfits' "Last Caress."

A very interesting metal release in 1987 was Anthram's "I'm the Man," a metal/rap song. Although it was probably just done out of humor and shock value, it is actually pretty funny and not a bad song at all.

Progressive Music

The progressive scene saw releases from such bands as Gene Loves Jezebel and Public Image Ltd. Love and Rockets received more airplay than usual with "No New Tale to Tell" from their 1987 LP Earth, Sun, Moon. XTC released Skylarking, one of the finest albums of the year from any standpoint, ranging from ballads such as "The Man Who Sailed Around His Soul" to biting social criticism such as "Dear God." XTC's alter ego The Dukes of Stratosphear also had a marginally successful release in 1987.

Dance Music

There were a slries of newcomers on the dance scene in 1987, particularly young, female singers. Such talents as Jody Watley, Tiffany, and Debbi Gibson all released albums which enjoyed some commercial success, but extreme critical failure. Most critics would have to agree that the careers of these young ladies will be short-lived if they continue their current pattern of bubble-gum disco and shopping-mall tours.

1987 was a banner year for alternative music. Several artists, who had been in music since the late 70s broke in the mainstream music scene with releases.

The listener looking for real soul should check out Introducing the Hardline According to Terence Trent D'Arby, featuring new soul classics such as "If You Let Me Stay" and "Wishing Well." He may be conceited (he claimed his debut LP was better than the Beatles' Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band), but he does know what he is doing and he is doing it well.

While all of its releases may not be classics, 1987 was all in all a good year for music, in all its forms. 1988 will have a hard time topping it.

Tommy Conwell and the Young Rumblers, Philadelphia's favorite spike-haired rockers, will be appearing at the 23 East Cabaret in Ardmore tonight at 11:15 p.m.

Conwell and his band have been steadily rising in popularity since the release of their album, Walkin' On The Water.

They recently signed a recording contract with Columbia records and will begin recording in New York on Monday.

The Daves, another favorite local band, will open for the Rumblers at the 23 East this Friday. The Daves will perform at 10 p.m.

Tickets are $8. For more information, call 896-6420.

Wrestlers stumble in Midwest

By AMGAD SABONGUI
Staff Reporter

On Jan. 23, the Villanova wrestling team met their toughest challenge of the year when they traveled to Bloomington, Indiana, to face Big Ten powers Indiana University and University of Illinois and Big Eight power Missouri University. Unfortunately, their youth and inexperience showed as they were crushed by Missouri (46-3) and Illinois (37-8). Though they were defeated soundly by 16th ranked Indiana they did wrestle well in the match, losing 34-11.

'Nova was only able to win one of the 27 contests from 142 pounds and up. These 26 losses also included a forfeit against each school in the heavyweight division.

These losses in the heavier weights showed the young team's lack of balance. The absence of the injured 167-pounder Tom Rogers, a stopper in the upper weights, compounded their misery.

Villanova did have a couple of bright spots, however. One hundred and eighteen-pounder Greg Alfonsi won two out of three matches, and 126-134 pounder Lyndon Cambell won two out of three matches and tied the other. These were the only glimmers of light in what was otherwise a very gloomy road trip.

"Our four bottom weights can go with almost anyone in the country," said Assistant Coach Andre Metzger. "By 150 pounds we have to hope to be way ahead. If not we're in trouble."

Metzger also mentioned the team's unseasoned talent. "We have very little experience which is a disadvantage to our underclassmen ... but give us two years and, believe me, we will be competing with those (Indiana, Missouri, and Illinois) teams."

Although last year was the first year that Villanova'a wrestling program began competing at the intercollegiate level, they certainly did not waste any time competing against the tougher, more established teams. The powerhouses the 'Cats recently went up against is proof that a "soft schedule" to ease the team into Division 1 was hot in the coaches' plan.

Appropriately, Villanova had difficulty competing against teams on that level. However, this could be beneficial because to wrestle against teams of that caliber is to gain valuable experience for the entire team.

Head coach John duPont and his coaching staff will be working diligently this summer as assistant coaches Metzger, Dan Chaid, Robert Calebrese and others are eagerly looking forward to the '88 Olympic trials.

"We will have a tough time in the NCAA's," admitted Metzger. "But if the young men on our team are dedicated enough and drive and train alongside us this summer, they will be stronger and more technically sound next year."

The upcoming summer will also feature the No. 1 ranked club wrestling team in the nation — the 10-man Team Foxcatcher. Team Foxcatcher (which is comprised of both players and coaches of the wrestling team) will give added experience to the young wrestlers, as Foxcatcher will try to defend their 1987 national championship.

Your College Week in Bermuda is more than just sun, sand and surf.

Right from the first outrageous "College Bash" at Elbow Beach, it's a week of unrelenting pleasure.

Spectacular seaside buffet luncheons. A calypso and limbo festival like none other. Smashing dance-til-you-drop beach parties, featuring Bermuda's top rock, steel and calypso bands. Even a "Party Cruise." All compliments of the Bermuda Department of Tourism.

Bermuda is all of this—and much, much more. It's touring the island on our breezy mopeds. (Do remember to keep left!)

It's jogging on quiet country roads—including an early morning 2-k "Fun Run" from Horseshoe Bay. It's exploring the treasures in our international shops, playing golf on eight great courses, and tennis on over 100 island-wide courts.

But most of all, it's the feeling you get on a tiny, flower-bedecked island, separated from everywhere and everything by 600 miles of sea.

This year, break away with style. See your Campus Travel Representative or Travel Agent for details.

Women swimmers capture five straight

By KARLA BECKNER
Staff Reporter

The Villanova women's swim team has bounced back after losing their first two meets of the season to begin a five-meet winning streak.

The Wildcats first defeated James Madison University 152.5-109.5 on Dec. 5. The team captured a total 13 out of 16 events with sophomores Laurel Fournier and Danielle Mackey leading the way with three wins each.

Villanova's next victim was St. John's University Dec. 9. The Wildcats took all but the 400-meter freestyle relay and the one-meter diving as they recorded a 113-80 win.

Mackey once again paced Villanova as she won two individual events, the 100- and 200-meter freestyles, and combined with Sharon Hurley, Megan Waters and Beth Capobianco to take the 400-meter medley relay.

On Jan. 13 the team opened their 1988 season with a 125-92 win over the University of Delaware. Teri Messenger, Mary Mayfield and Laurel Fournier recorded three wins apiece to lead the Wildcats. The three combined with Danielle Mackey to take the 400-meter medley relay.

Fournier also captured firsts in the 100- and 200-meter freestyles while Mayfield took the 50-meter freestyle and 200-meter breaststroke. Messenger won the 200-meter backstroke and joined Mindy Warmbrand, Meg Fitzgerald and Liz Kennedy to win the 400-meter freestyle relay.

Villanova's next win came over Drexel University 140-119. Laurel Fournier captured four first place finishes in the 50-, 100- and 200-meter freestyles and joined Danielle Mackey, Mary Mayfield and Teri Messenger for the win in the 200-meter medley relay.

Messenger also took the 200-meter backstroke and 100-meter butterfly while sophomore Amy Gannon won the three-meter diving.

On Jan. 23 the Wildcats completely dominated Seton Hall University 184-15. Villanova brought home every first place finish for the win.

The Wildcats' final two meets of the regular season came against Bucknell University and a tri-meet with LaSalle University and the University of Pennsylvania.

Athlete of the Break

This year's athlete of the break is junior Cris Craft. Craft helped lead the Wildcats swim team to the National Catholic Championship last December.

Craft won three individual events as well as being a member of three winning relay teams. In so doing Craft was able to capture 5 Villanova records. In addition Craft managed to qualify for the 1988 Olympic trials in the 100-meter butterfly.

Since then Craft set a school record in the 1000-meter free style in leading his team past the University of Notre Dame and Fordham University. The men's swim team now posts a record of 12-1 and Craft has been a integral part of the team's success.

'Cats tame UConn, Seton Hall, on the way to...

mino summed up the win and said, "Winning in St. John's by 7 is like winning by 77".

Next it was back home where Villanova beat up on Boston College 66-54. Gary Massey and Wilson threw in team highs of 14 points each while Taylor registered 9 rebounds.

Two days later was a trip to the Spectrum for an encounter with 7th ranked Syracuse. The Orangemen, favored by four, were stunned by the 'Cats 80-78 victory.

Greis, a sophomore, was perfect. The 7-foot 2-inch center went 8 for 8 from the field and 4 for 4 from the foul line in his 20-point effort. Greis also dished out 5 assists in his domination of Syracuse center Rony Seikaly. Later a dejected Seikaly stated, "Every time I went to help out they passed to him (Greis) and he didn't miss."

Massimino also had praise for his young center, "Tom has really improved. He has worked very hard and persevered. He is still young and will continue to improve."

While Greis was performing wonders underneath, Plansky took control of matters outside. The 6-foot 7-inch senior nailed 3 three-pointers on his way to his 21-point team high performance. Also playing well for Villanova was point guard Wilson, who tallied 18 points while netting 9 of 9 free throws.

Next, the 'Cats suffered a letdown as they were dealt an 85-73 loss to Pittsburgh.

'Nova looked sluggish in the first half. They were not shooting well and fouls were being committed, but in the second half 'Nova came around. Led by a Wilson 22-point scoring effort, V.U. managed to whittle the lead to 4 points, but Pitt hung tough and eventually claimed victory.

Bobby Martin, the Pittsburgh freshmen that broke his verbal commitment to attend Villanova last year, played well. Filling in for Charles Smith, who was in foul trouble, Martin compiled 7 points while adding 5 rebounds.

So the break ended with a loss but Massimino was still pleased. "We really enjoyed the break. We practiced a lot and accomplished most of our goals. We played some very good basketball," commented the 15-year head coach.

After break 'Nova continued their winning ways. First they faced Connecticut. A little over a month ago Villanova topped Connecticut 63-61 at duPont. That contest was highlighted by a last second, 15-foot baseline jumper compliments of Mark Plansky.

In the rematch, held at the Hartford Civic Center, the 'Cats won again. This time the score was 69-58.

'Nova was red-hot at the outset, scoring 13 unanswered points before UConn's Willie McCloud drilled a three-pointer at the 15:15 mark of the first half.

The Huskies did not panic however. With Plansky on the bench in foul trouble UConn managed to rally back. They eventually took the lead on a Phil Gamble field goal early in the second half.

V.U. hung tough and got the lead back and never relinquished it. Greis did a tremendous job in the paint as he pulled in a game, season and career high 15 rebounds. Greis also accounted for 11 points. Taylor, who was also strong underneath, fouled out late in the second half, but the 'Cats remained strong. West netted 15 points while Plansky compiled 14. Wilson added 12.

Three days later 6,500 fans jammed the duPont Pavilion to see Villanova top Seton Hall 69-63. Plansky and Wilson led the way throughout.

Plansky got the 'Cats on the right foot early by converting a four point play to start the game (he nailed a foul shot after getting fouled on a three-point field goal that he converted). By game's end Plansky had 20 points and eight rebounds. His two free throws iced the game.

Wilson, who finished with 21 points, played the most inspirational ball. Late in the first half he pickpocketed a sleeping Leland Wegington and cruised in for the layup. Wilson also tossed in a three-point shot to end the half as well as a perfect alley-oop pass to Massey, who jammed the ball home. Massey, a junior, also helped the cause by picking up 12 points.

Junior Doug West, who recently scored his 1,000 career point, has been a key to the 'Cats return to the top 20.

Villanova now stands atop the Big East with a conference record of 6-1. Their overall record is 14-4 and they are presently ranked 18th in the nation in the AP. It is an amazing improvement from the team that went 15-16 last year.

Villanova's men's basketball team received a big win when they downed St. John's at Alumni Hall, a place they had not won in since 1984.

Canisius, Iona route Ice 'Cats

By JOHN F. SWIFT
Staff Reporter

December and January have not been very kind to the Villanova Ice Hockey team. Between Dec. 5 and Jan. 24, the Ice 'Cats posted a dismal 2-7 record.

Villanova has a 6-13 overall record and is currently posting a 3-8 slate in the highly competitive ECAC South Conference.

The stretch started as Villanova dropped three straight games on the road to St. John's University (11-6), Quinnipiac (7-3), and Fairfield University (5-3).

The 'Cats bounced back and took a pair of games from Ocean County (6-5) and University of Delaware (7-5). In the Ocean County win, freshman sensation Mark Neaves posted a hat trick. In the Delaware victory, sophomore Boy Ward, the team's leading scorer, erupted for four goals.

The streaking Ice 'Cats then journeyed to powerful Canisius for a pair of games. The 'Cats were pummelled in both contests by scores of 14-2 and 12-1. Canisius, an excellent hockey team, proved to be too much for the extremely young Wildcats.

After eight straight contests on the road, Villanova returned home to the friendly confines of the Haverford Skatium to host a pair of games against Iona and Skidmore.

In the first game, Iona pasted the 'Cats 14-2 in a game that both the Ice 'Cats and their loyal fans would like to forget.

On Sunday, the 'Cats played hard and dropped a tough game to Skidmore 5-3.

The experience that this team is receiving now will prove very valuable in the near future. The key word for the Ice 'Cats and their fans in patience.

The team is now preparing for the Big East Conference Championships at University of Pittsburgh Feb. 12-14.

At the Diamond Duquesne Track Meet, Mark Rainey qualified for the IC4A's by running a 1:49.19 in the 800m run.

Men's track races to championship

The team's third meet, the Yale Intercollegiate Invitational, saw the most IC4A qualifications of the young season as four individuals and two relay teams met their respective standards.

Marc Rainey saw his third and fourth qualifying performances in the 400-meter dash and mile relay. The sophomore ran a 49.51 400-meter individually to take third and helped lead the team of Mark Jones, Paul O'Regan and Grant Davis to second with a combined time of 3:17.26.

The 'Cats also qualified the 4x800-meter relay team of Finn Kelly, Rainey, O'Regan and Grant Davis. The group ran an excellent time of 7:33.88 to take second place.

Despite the caliber of these performances it was the 800-meter open run that highlighted the team's day. This race saw three individuals qualify for the IC4A's. Junior Bruce Harris led the way for the 'Cats with a second place in 1:52.79. Aidan O'Regan (4th-1:53.30) and Mark Sullivan (7th-1:53.91) were the other Wildcats to qualify in the race.

Jenkins was especially pleased with the performance of Aidan O'Regan and Finn Kelly. "I look forward to more good performances from both these freshmen in the future."

The future for this young team seems bright. The next test for the team will come on Jan. 31 at the Princeton Relays.

Sparrow honored

By WAYNE CRESSKILL
Staff Reporter

Rory Sparrow, Villanova's ex-point guard, was recently named, along with seven other individuals, the athlete of the year by Sports Illustrated.

Sparrow who graduated from Eastside High School in Paterson, N.J., ranks as Villanova's third leading assist leader. He played for V.U. from 1976 to 1980 and in all four years dished out over 100 assists. Sparrow eventually made the pros where he played for the New York Knicks before being traded to the Chicago Bulls last month. He was a great leader for both clubs.

Sparrow received the award because he is considered "an athlete that cares." Sparrow is that and more.

In 1984, while still playing for the Knicks, he organized the Rory Sparrow Foundation, INC. This is a non-profit organization that seeks to help the youths in New York City and Paterson.

The organization consists of helping high schoolers find summer jobs as well as helping them apply to college. He also takes time aside to lecture on drug abuse and nutrition.

Sparrow also believes that sports and competition are important facets of life. He thus organized summer leagues in basketball and tennis.

Roland V. Massimino, head coach of basketball, stated of his ex-point guard, "I knew the day Rory stepped on campus that he was a born leader. He was the hit of the campus and worked very hard at what he did."

Bowling team born at 'Nova

By JIM BOWMAN
Assistant Sports Editor

Move over basketball players. Watch out football team. There's a new sport on Lancaster Avenue. Make way for the Villanova bowling team.

Well, maybe that is a little too dramatic for a club sport with a nine-person roster, but Villanova bowlers do take their sport seriously.

With the athletic department providing about 50 percent of their funds and the players raising the rest, the bowling team has embarked on a tournament schedule that could eventually lead them to the National Bowling Championships.

Freshman Pat Nardone organized the team and serves as their unofficial coach. "It was very difficult to get nine people together who could average 190 and who were willing to compete," explained Nardone.

"The fundraising is the biggest problem, though. We'll probably be requesting more money from the University next year," he added.

In their first tournament, the Atlantic City Collegiate Invitational, held Dec. 27-29, Villanova finished 17th in a field of 35. Individually, senior Jamie Venafra led the 'Cats with a 38th place finish. Nardone was directly behind in 39th place. One hundred seventy five bowlers competed.

Last weekend, in the Metro-Collegiate Championships in Hackensack, N.J., the bowlers again finished in the middle of the pack, 15th out of 30. Venafra and Nardone again captured top individual honors for the team.

Nardone teamed with senior Vince Viespoli to earn 11th place out of 100 in the doubles competition.

Other bowlers participating in the first two tourneys included senior Ray Sapetulli and freshmen Bob Tiasecki, Chuck Gemmi and Keith Scollick.

Next weekend the team travels to Baltimore, Md., to compete in the Fair Lanes Invitational.

Swimmers take Catholic championship

By AMY C. SPENCER
Staff Reporter

As the month of December began, most Villanova students were concerned about the end of classes, finals and buying Christmas presents, but the members of the men's swimming and diving team had a more pressing subject on their minds. They had to put their 5-0 record on the line as they traveled to Notre Dame University to face the best Catholic schools in the nation at the National Catholic Championships Dec. 3-5.

It turned out their worries were unfounded as the 'Cats dominated the meet by winning 14 of the 18 events. Villanova beat second-place Notre Dame by over 30 points.

"For the month of December, we had the best championship times of any team in the history of the sport at Villanova," declared head coach Ed Geisz. "We can swim with anybody in the United States. I'm very proud of every one of them."

The most spectacular performance of the meet was turned in by Villanova junior Chris Craft. Craft won three individual events and was a member of three winning relay teams which enabled him to lead Villanova to victory and also capture the outstanding performer award for the meet.

In the process of winning six events; the 200-yard individual medley, the 800-yard freestyle relay, the 100-yard butterfly, the 400-yard medley relay, the 200-yard butterfly, and the 400-yard freestyle relay, Craft set school records in all except the 200-yard butterfly. The new records ranged from .1 to .81 seconds better than the previous records, all of which were also held by Craft.

Craft's best performance of the meet came in the 100-yard butterfly. Winning with a time of 49.04 seconds, Craft qualified for the 1988 Olympic trials (qualifying time 49.08). "He did it all," Geisz stated, "he is the most versatile swimmer I've ever had at Villanova."

Craft commented, "The Olympic trials are something I've been shooting for a long time. It's something I'll be able to tell my children and grandchildren about someday. I'm going to give it my best shot." He added, "The [MVP] award wouldn't have meant a thing without the team title. It was really a total team effort. Every swimmer that went scored points for us."

Other multiple winners included Lou Dearstyne (2 individual, 2 relay), Steve Petrie (2 individual, 2 relay), Blaise Matthews (1 individual, 2 relay), Brian Stagg (1 individual, 1 relay) and Dave Echeverria (2 individual).

Before returning to Villanova, the 'Cats took on Notre Dame and Fordam in a double-dual meet and proved that their championship was not just luck. The Wildcats won every event and Craft set a school record in the 1000-meter freestyle (9:28.29) to beat Notre Dame 122-95 and Fordam 149-62.

Once home, the 'Cats continued their winning ways by deafeating Delawre 114.5 to 101.5. Craft and Petrie each catpured three events to pace the 'Cats to victories in 9 of 13 events. Diver Dave Echeverria won both the 1-meter and 3-meter diving events.

The team record increased to 12-0 on Jan. 20 as the 'Cats captured a double-dual victory over rivals University of Pennsylvania and LaSalle University. Once again the Wildcats dominated the pool by winning eight of the 13 events. Lou Dearstyne was a triple winner of the day, capturing wins in the 200-meter freestyle, 100-meter freestyle, and 400-meter freestyle relay.

Cats stun Big East

By JIM BOWMAN
Assistant Sports Editor

So what happens to a basketball team when it loses the best player in the country and one of the better backcourt randems on the East Coast to graduation?

In most cases, words like "rebuilding" and "learning process" spread like cancer through preseason scouting reports and eventually become realty; and a team accustomed to winning must endure a season of mediocrity.

A funny thing is happening to this year's Villanova women's hoop team, though. It seems they forgot about graduated seniors Shelly Pennefather, Lynn Tighe and Karen Hargadon and decided to have a good year anyway.

They now sport a nifty 13-4 overall record, 5-2 in the Big East, with a good chance to grab a third straight conference championship.

"Obviously, when you lose 4,500 points from your offense, you have to be concerned," explained 10th-year coach Harry Perreta, "but this team has been deeper on the bench, more balanced offensively and strong defensively."

The super play of senior forward Lisa Angelotti hasn't hurt, either. She is not in the shadow of Pennefather, Angelotti has emerged as a Big East star. She currently carries scoring and rebounding averages of 17.7 and 8.8, respectively.

"She was always very good, but Shelly was great, so she [Angelotti] wasn't our main offensive player. Now we go to her the way we went to Shelly," said Perreta.

Sophomore point guard Helen Koskinen ranks second in team scoring with an 11.4 average, up over eight points from last year.

Senior forward Teresa Pasik and sophomore guard Beth Pasik have also assumed increased scoring and rebounding duties for the revamped Wildcats. Junior center Carole Osten fills out the starting five for the 'Cats.

Last Saturday, the Wildcats ran their Big East record to 5-2 with a victory over Georgetown University here at the duPont Pavilion. Angelotti led the way with a 25-point, seven-rebound performance. Koskinen was close behind with 23 points.

On Jan. 25, Villanova added victory 13 to their record with a 70-62 comeback road win over Monmouth College. In that contest, Koskinen exploded with a career high 27 points.

Pawprints ...

Villanova has signed two recruits for next year: 6'1" forward Roe Magarrity from nearby Bishop McDevitt and 5'10" guard Justine Chaverini, from Columbia, Md. ... Chaverini's father is a Villanova grad and former football player here ... Last year's point guard, Lynn Tighe, has traded in her jersey for a whistle and clipboard. She has joined coach Perreta on the Wildcat coaching staff.

Runners fly to IC4A's

By TERRY KELLY
Staff Reporter

The men's winter track team got off to a fast start this season qualifying four individuals and three relay teams for the IC4A Championship Meet.

The 90th season got underway for the team on Dec. 5 at Swarthmore College. The meet was highlighted by the team's one through four sweep in the 880-hard run.

Freshman Aidan O'Regan (1:59.3) led the trio of sophomore Howard Jackson (1:59.9), senior Mark Sulivan, (2:01.4), and junior Joe Pawluczyk (2:04.1) across the finish line.

The 'Cats also finished one-two in the mile run. Freshman Finn Kelly took first in 4:20.7 while Mark Sulliyan took second with a time of 4:22.1.

Other firsts in the meet came from freshman John Young in the 60-yard dash (6.5 sec.), sophomore Mark Rainey in the 440-yard dash (50.9), and the mile relay team of Tim Kirlin, Jackson O'Regan and Rainey (3:25.3).

The Father Diamond Memorial Track and Field Meet at George Mason University saw the teams' first IC4A qualifying performances of the season.

Marc Rainey qualified in the 500-meter run with a time of 1:04.19. His time was good enough for third place behind 'Nova alumni Chip Jenkins and John Marshall.

The other outstanding individual performance in the meet came from Howard Jackson. Jackson won the 800-meter run.

The meet also saw the 4x400 meter relay team of Marc Jones, Mark Rainey, Bruce Harris and Grant Davis qualify for the IC4A's with a time of 3:19.49. Unfortunately they were edged out by an outstanding University of Pittsburgh team and settled for second place.

Indoor meets begin

By MICHAEL E. JONES
Staff Reporter

In the infamous Star Wars trilogy, Hans Solo would often utter, "I've got a bad feeling ..." amidst a sticky situation.

As the Villanova women's track team kicked off the indoor season, these were hardly the words of head coach Marty Stern, "I've got a good feeling ..." would more accurately describe Stern's response to the early successes of the team.

The Wildcats, who came off their best cross country season ever, picked up where they left off and have already qualified six runners for the NCAA's and nine for the ERAC Championships, both in early March.

The Wildcats turned in a string of impressive performances over the last three weeks, starting at the Yale Invitational on Jan. 16, where they garnished five victories, set four meet records, and one Villanova record.

Senior Olive Burke broke the 55-meter hurdles school record with an ECAC qualifying time of 8.04, and both relays also captured first places and qualified for ERAC's.

The distance medley relay, consisting of freshmen Sonia O'Sullivan and Michelle Bennet, and juniors Kathy Franey and Vicky Huber, broke the tape in 11:27.

The 4 x 800-meter relay, consisting of freshman Carol Haux and juniors Michelle DiMuro, Meg Moisen and Celeste Holiday ran a fine race as well, just dipping under the NCAA standard with a time of 8:48.

The junior corps of DiMuro, Franey, Holiday and Huber also fared well in individual competition. Holiday and DiMuro finished first and second, respectively, in the 800-meter with times of 2:06 and 2:07, which qualified both of them for ECAC's and NCAA's.

Huber and Franey also finished first and second, respectively, in the mile with times of 4:35 and 4:39.

Other Villanova finishers included junior Jenny Brekhus, who finished sixth in the 5000 meters with a time of 17:35, and freshman Marissa Maggio, who finished seventh in the 55-meters in 7.23 seconds. Both qualified for ECAC's.

"It's not easy to pick a hero from a meet where everyone ran so well, but I'd like to single out Celeste Holiday," commented Stern.

The 'Cats were just getting warmed up. The following week at the Kodak Invitational in Tennessee, Huber ran arguably one of her best races in a Villanova uniform in the 3000-meters. Her time of 8:58 was not only a personal best and school record, but also an Olympic Trial qualifying mark.

Huber was towed along by world-class runner Brenda Webb and finished second. Teammates Franey finished seventh in a personal best of 9:21, which also qualified her for ECAC's and NCAA's.

"Vicky's accomplishment speaks for itself, but Kathy had a super meet and is way ahead of schedule," commented Stern.

Franey had won the mile the day before in 4:44, and to come back the following day and set a PR is no easy task.

In other races, the 4 x 800-meter relay continued to terrorize opponents, bettering the field house record with a time of 8:49. DiMuro scorched the anchor leg with a personal best of 2:05.8, and was a member of the Villanova team which had set the previous record last year.

Holiday won the open 800 in 2:10 to wrap up the 'Cats performances.

"This is the best season we've ever had to date," continued Stern. "Our freshmen have been doing a tremendous job, and are a welcome addition to the team. If the team stays healthy we can score high in any meet, including the NCAA's."

With so many runners already qualified for the big races in March, it is interesting how Stern views the remainder of the season. "Each meet has a different meaning. The season is like a big video game, and we try to conquer each part to keep the interest up.

In the big name meets like Millrose, it is important to run well and make a lasting impression. In the Sunkist invitational, we'll be up against the likes of Georgia, Texas, Florida, Tennessee, and Penn State — all truly insane top ten teams if rankings were kept.

PEC report reveals politics, conflicts

By JENNIFER REIDY
Assistant News Editor

A recently released report of the Program Evaluation Committee [PEC] on the Villanova Security department concluded, "Security is under severe scrutiny, not because it is a bad department, but rather because of the personality and style of its leader, Chief Kelly [Chief Rowan P. Kelly, director of Security]."

The evaluation, which was conducted by David N. Barbour of Bowdoin College on Oct. 25-28, also stated that "the general consensus of those with whom I [Barbour] spoke felt that the chief is inflexible and out of tune with the University community."

Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, agreed that Kelly and certain administration are often in opposition due to "different personalities, and subsequently, different philosophies about how to deal with particular situations involving Security, especially parking."

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, echoed Neville's emphasis on parking, saying, "Sometimes it is difficult to explain to students why they [illegible]."

Gorski explained that the set-up of the event will be different than tailgates in its handling of alcohol.

The festival will also offer food, entertainment and games. Gorski said that entertainment might include two or three alternating options out of the proposed choices of comedians, student bands, local talent, stage crew taped music and the a capella group, "Regency."

She said that she plans on having food booths run by student organizations that would provide food such as hot dogs and hamburgers.

"It will be more controlled. The alcohol will be in a controlled area for 21-year-olds only. Though anyone could come, only those who are 21 could be in the controlled area. How it will be separated off we don't know," she said.

"These organizations would be totally responsible [for the booths] and the income would be theirs," she added.

Plans also propose to have Food Services provide dinner for on-campus residents outdoors later in the day, in order to cut costs for residents by giving them one less meal to pay for, while anyone not on a meal plan could pay for the meal, she said.

According to Gorski, the plans also include providing games, such as softball, frisbee and volleyball, using intramural equipment.

It will be more controlled. The alcohol will be in a controlled area for 21-year-olds only. Though anyone could come, only those who are 21 could be in the controlled area. How it will be separated off, we don't know.

Lucyna J. Gorski
Director of Student Activities

She reiterated that alcohol will be available in limited areas and in limited quantities to 21-year-olds only.

Proposed locations for the festival include Mendel field, the Grotto, the stadium, and the fields in front of Austin, Dougherty and Sheehan halls, said Gorski.

and on top of that, why they didn't get the opportunity to voice their opinion, to an authority in the Security office."

The PEC evaluator found Kelly to be "a strong leader" and "by the book" in regards to his enforcement of University policy. Barbour wrote, "it would appear to me that the chief needs to learn the arts of diplomacy, compromise and understanding and when to bend the rules in certain situations."

Neville cited a recent example in which a student came to him to complain that a Security guard would not let him park on campus near a computer room where he would be working until late at night. Furthermore, the student complained that there were no available parking spaces in the main lot that night due to a basketball game in the duPont Pavilion, Neville explained.

Neville commented, "There seems to be a 'norm' here in which every department attempts to accommodate the people in the University. This does not seem to be the case in the Security department."

The PEC report concluded that the parking situation at Villanova "is better now than it was before." However, it states that "Clearly there are still problems that need to be dealt with in this area, but most of them are outside of the chief's control because they deal with the need to create more parking or institute further lim-

West campus plans continue

By DIANE A. CILIONE

Plans for the proposed development of Villanova University's west campus are still in progress, according to the Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president of Student Life.

Representatives of the University are working with the neighbors bordering the proposed building site in order to address their concerns, said Martin. The University is also in the process of completing the subdivision plan for the construction of the proposed area, he said.

On Nov. 9, 1987, the Radnor Township Board of Commissioners voted 6-0 against Villanova's request that the board consider a proposal for an ordinance which would allow the proposed building site on west campus to be rezoned from residential to institutional.

Objections to the University's plan are held by the neighbors of the proposed site. The neighbors are concerned with auto traffic on local roads, pedestrian traffic, sewage discharge, water run-off, water pressure and electrical service to the site, according to Martin.

A committee of University representatives and neighbors' representatives have been meeting since November 1987, said Martin.

Spring festival approved

By NOEL E. FALCO

A proposal to have a spring festival that will serve alcohol to 21-year-olds was approved by Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, but hinges on the determination of a date, said Lucyna J. Gorski, director of Student Activities, Monday.

The festival will answer the Student Government's request for a "large-scale social event in the spring of 1988 ... [which] would include alcohol ..." as stated in Student Government's submitted proposal.

The proposal was launched in September 1986 by Sean Closkey, chairperson of the Student Life committee and past president of Student Activities on Campus Committee (SACC), and has finally reached the planning stage.

Closkey said the idea was put before a committee made up of representatives of major organizations in February 1987.

"The committee was more or less a think-tank to see if there was a need [for a major spring event]. We felt that yes, there was a need and that it was a good idea and an acceptable risk to have alcohol there as well," he said.

He further said the major problem right now was finding a date to hold the festival.

Gorski said, "In theory the event was approved" but scheduling problems might defeat the idea.

April is the intended month for the one-day festival, but because many organizations want to hold their events in April because of the weather, conflicts may ensue, Gorski said.

Journalist speaks on South Africa

By JENNIFER REIDY

"The South African apartheid laws are first cousins to the Nuremberg Laws of the Nazis," said Donald Woods, internationally-acclaimed journalist and author of Biko, to a large group of faculty and students Tuesday in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center.

Woods' self-imposed exile from South Africa in 1978 and friendship with martyred Black Consciousness leader Stephen Biko is the subject of the film, "Cry Freedom." Woods spoke about the film and his book, and issued strong condemnations against the South African government and the apartheid laws.

At a press conference before the lecture, Woods criticized the Reagan administration and praised the U.S. Congress for overriding the president's veto on economic sanctions to South Africa. He said at the lecture, "Sanctions and divestments are the surest ways of loosening the stronghold that the white minority has over the black majority now."

Woods also predicted that South Africa will erupt into a major civil war if concessions are not granted to the black population. He explained, "It is a natural progression of things. A minority can only

Bookstore faces problems

By STEVEN MONTRESOR
Staff Reporter

The University Shop has inadequately provided texts for students since the beginning of the spring semester, according to several department chairpersons.

Faculty members have reported that students are encountering difficulty in obtaining course texts, said the chairpersons.

John Bauman, University Shop manager, said Tuesday the majority of the texts have been received, but have not been processed and placed onto shelves.

The difficulty this semester results from personnel changes and a lack of employees to process the 2,100 titles the bookstore carries, he said.

Bauman added that for 275 courses, the bookstore was not made aware of the required texts.

There are not enough employees capable of training new ones, and this problem has occurred during the busiest time of the semester, he said.

However, the problems in the store have occurred consistently and have increased in magnitude, according to Dr. Sterling F. Delano, chairperson of the English department. For the third consecutive year, the text has arrived too late in one graduate course, he said.

"Our business is the business of education, and without books, we are without the tools of our trade," he said.

Delano suggested that the University has failed to recognize how complicated it is to manage the bookstore. The store needs to increase its size in order to facilitate efficiency, he said.

Dr. Lewis J. Mathers, chairperson of the civil engineering department, also said he encountered problems in his department. He cited an instance in which a student went to the bookstore and was told that the book he was looking for was sold out. A second student looking for the same book was told it was never ordered, and a third student was told the book had been received, but it was not yet on the shelf.

However, not all department reactions were negative, Dr. Charles Zech, chairperson of the economics department, reported that there have usually been problems in past, but the services of the bookstore have been greatly improved.

Council plans slated

By KEVIN C. HEIL
Assistant News Editor

Villanova University has recently approved a tuition exchange program for children of employees, in which they would receive free tuition while enrolled at an institution which is part of the national exchange program, according to Dr. John A. Doody, faculty council chairperson and philosophy chairperson.

The national exchange program is coordinated by Muhlenberg College and includes such schools as University of Delaware, University of Florida and Syracuse University. "This is a new fringe benefit that was approved by the University this past fall semester," said Doody.

This is one of many proposals which the University's faculty council is currently examining.

Doody said the administration has approved a request for a dependent care assistance program for faculty members which will permit tax-exempt funding for child care and nursing home care. The administration approved the request in December and it should take effect during the 1988-89 academic year, he said.

In addition, "Each year the faculty council has discussions with the administration over what the total salary and fringe benefits offer for the next year will be," Doody said.

This year, the proposed salary increase was submitted from the faculty council to the faculty affairs committee. Dr. Harry R. Strack, political science professor and chairperson of the faculty affairs committee, then presented the proposed figure, arrived at jointly by the faculty council and faculty affairs committee, to the Senate at a general meeting last semester.

For the spring semester, Doody said there is currently a report on the administration's desk which would restructure the University's rank and tenure committee to allow for greater faculty participation. The faculty council is currently awaiting further action on the proposal from the committee itself, he said.

He added that a report titled "Faculty Workload Report" has been sent to the vice president for Academic Affairs and the deans of all the colleges.

According to the workload report, "The committee was constituted in November 1985 by the faculty council as an ad hoc committee with the goal of 'achieving a more comprehensive definition of faculty workload, one that is appreciative of all work performed, not just credit hours taught.'

There is also an attempt by the faculty council to rethink how the faculty and the members of the Board of Trustees could come into greater contact and exchange ideas about the University, Doody said.

A faculty council committee on the faculty-Board of Trustees relationship has been created to examine this issue. A report has recently been given to the faculty council which discusses how a better dialogue can be developed between the faculty and the Board of Trustees, said Doody.

Doody said that a report is due in the spring on how the Athletics program fits into the rest of the University in terms of faculty issues.

Augustinian dies

Brother Thomas G. Johnston, O.S.A., died after a lengthy illness Jan. 26.

Johnston was born on Dec. 31, 1953, in Detroit, Mich., of George Joseph Johnston and Catherine Marie O'Malley. He attended Sacred Heart Parish grammar school in Michigan. When his parents moved to Pennsylvania, he then attended and graduated from St. Laurence Parish grammar school in Upper Darby.

After graduation from Monsignor Bonner High School in 1972, he entered the pre-novitiate program of the Augustinian Order and attended Villanova University.

Pendleton, civil rights head, lectures

By G.J. DONNELLY
Staff Reporter

The Hon. Clarence M. Pendleton, chairman of the U.S. Civil Rights Committee, spoke of his position on affirmative action and other issues in two lectures conducted on campus, Tuesday, sponsored by the Federalist Society of Villanova University.

Pendleton spoke in Tolentine Hall before a crowd of undergraduates and faculty at 3 p.m. The second speech was held at the Villanova Law School and was characterized by arguments between Pendleton and some black law students who criticized his opposition to affirmative action, which is a policy authorized by former President Lyndon Johnson as a measure to aid blacks through job quotas.

During both discussions, Pendleton spoke of his belief that affirmative action is immoral.

"Who asked for this stuff?" he asked. "It was to assauge white guilt. A white man will do anything ... to prevent being labeled a racist."

He criticized current black leaders for continuing to "lead blacks into a political Jonestown," recalling a quote of his from 1984, during President Ronald Reagan's re-election campaign.

"To vote for Jesse [Jackson] and put your eggs all in one basket is ... suicidal" he said, while also saying that "[Jackson] is a lot more conservative than you think he is."

Pendleton also criticized the liberal establishment's policy — referring to it as "the looniest idea since Loony Tunes." Comparable wealth is the concept of payment of the same wages for different work of different values to employers.

Because of his position, Pendleton said, "I was one of Gloria Steinem's 10 dumbest men of the year."

Pendleton responded to the criticism, "I'm not anybody's leader ... " I'll take all the insults black people have to offer."

He did take criticism at his appearance at the law school. When one black student criticized him for refusing to accept being a black leader and thus owing a responsibility to his people, Pendleton retorted that he has "no responsibility except for enforcing civil rights laws."

Pendleton's main point was that black people can do anything they set their minds to, provided they have the ability and will to achieve it.

"Whites can open the door," he explained of civil rights, "I can decide what it takes to walk through it."

Spectator reaction to Pendleton was mixed. Michael Harper, a first year law student said, "He's got a unique perspective on an emotional issue. His point was that [civil rights] has to stop being a race issue."

Third year law student John Bravacos, explained that "[Villanova] welcomed him to contribute his intellectual perspective."

Prior to his appointment as chairman of the civil rights commission, Pendleton served as president of the Urban League of San Diego. He is a graduate of Dunbar High School, an institution which also boasts such alumni as the aforementioned Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall, Dr. Charles Drew, author Langston Hughes, and Gen. Benjamin Douglas, Sr.

He became a Republican in 1971 after being named director of the "Model Cities" program of San Diego by Sen. Pete Wilson, then mayor of San Diego.

He is also the president of Pendleton and Associates and serves on the boards of both the Great American Savings Bank and the California Higher Education Loan Authority.

novitiate and professed first vows on Aug. 28, 1976. Three years later, he professed final vows.

Johnston completed his bachelor of fine arts degree with honors from Villanova University in 1977. He was the recipient of the Germain Bazin Award Medallion of Excellence.

In addition to these studies, he studied liturgical music and art at St. Joseph's College in Rensselaer, Ind. In 1982, he completed a master of arts degree in fine arts at the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, N.Y.

In 1977, Johnston was assigned to the Augustinian community in the Bronx, N.Y., where he taught English, religion, and art at St. Nicholas of Tolentine High School. At this time he was also involved with liturgical music and art for the parish.

After completing his master of fine arts degree in 1982, he taught at Villanova University in the department of art and art history.

He resided in St. Denis Friary, in Havertown, and later in St. Thomas Monastery, in Villanova.

During his years at Villanova University, Johnston shared his knowledge of liturgical music and art not only with Campus Ministry at the University, but also with several local parishes, such as St. Denis in Havertown and St. Thomas of Villanova in Rosemont.

He was an active church cantor and soloist, as well as a member of the "He Shall Be Peace" group, creators and performers of church music.

From time to time he acted as consultant to parishes on church renovations; most recently he was liturgical consultant and designer for the Church of St. Mary's in Cherry Hill, N.J.

As an artist, Johnston's work has been recognized internationally. His design of a wrought iron choir screen now graces the church of Santa Lucia in Rome, the monastery of Augustinian Contemplative nuns. His drawings appear in Augustinian publications throughout the world. Most recently, his drawing of St. Rita of Cascia was printed in a biography of the saint in the Korean language.

Accidents occur

Two cars collided Jan. 29 on Lancaster Avenue at the entrance to Villanova's P&W station, according to Radnor Township police report.

A vehicle driven by Anthony M. DiReno of Philadelphia struck the vehicle of Nancy Susan Becker of 108 Forrest Ave., Narberth, at 5:25 p.m. as he approached the intersection at 850 Lancaster Ave., according to the police report.

The report said that Becker's vehicle did "almost two complete spins following impact and [came] to rest in the middle" of the lane.

After complaining of neck pain, Becker, who had to be extricated from her vehicle by Radnor and Bryn Mawr fire departments as well as Radnor ambulance, was taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital, according to the police report.

According to the police report, DiReno "was driving west on Lancaster Avenue in the curb lane and came upon unexpected traffic which was stopped ahead of him (traffic was backed up ... as is usual at rush hour)."

DiReno "braked and attempted to change lanes but slid on the wet road surface and lost control on the snow/ice which remained in the center of highway following recent snows. [DiReno's vehicle] front end struck [Becker's vehicle] after which it came to rest mostly off [the] roadway on south side."

Becker's car was towed from the scene. DiReno, whose car did not require towing, was not injured, the police report said.

A witness at the accident "stated [DiReno's vehicle] was a 'white flash' coming over the crest of the hill," according to the police report.

The police report stated that DiReno's traveling speed was not known.

According to the report, DiReno was cited for a number of violations, including driving while operating privilege is suspended or revoked, driving vehicle at an unsafe speed and operation of vehicle without official certificate of inspection, registration and certificate of title required.

Another accident occurred Tuesday at 14:22 a.m. at the intersection of Barleycone Road and Lancaster Avenue, according to another police report.

Traffic stopped in one lane to allow Mary L. Stevenson, a Villanova student from Wyckoff, N.J., to turn onto Lancaster Avenue from Barleycone Road. However, she was struck by Danie Hoban, 14 Eleanor Circle, Havertown, as he traveled in the second lane on Lancaster Avenue, according to the report. According to the Registrar's office, Hoban is listed as a visitor to Villanova.

The police report said that in the opinion of the officer, Stevenson "caused the accident because she failed to yield to oncoming traffic before entering into the highway. Also, she stated she could not see traffic in the second lane."

Stevenson was cited for the violation of "vehicle entering or crossing roadway," according to the police report.

include the Rev. George F. Burnell, O.S.A., assistant to the president; Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life; Marc E. Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center; and Martin.

Representatives for the neighbors include the Ashwood Manor Civic Association. "We want to resolve a number of issues with the neighbors privately rather than in the public forum, and that takes time," said Martin.

Clint Stuntebeck, commissioner for the second ward in Radnor Township, is working with representatives of both sides of the issue, said Martin.

According to Martin, there is no specific date in focus for the completion of the plans for the project. "It will be several months before everything can be worked out," said Martin.

The plot of land sited for the complex is bounded on the east by St. Mary's Hall, on the west by Wistar Road, on the north by County Line Road and on the south by the Amtrak railroad line.

The projected complex would consist of 11 buildings, including 1,200 dormitory beds, a food service center, three administrative office buildings, parking for 800 cars, seven tennis courts, three basketball courts, a baseball field and a soccer field, said Martin.

Martin said that the new complex would decrease the number of students living in surrounding communities. An increase in enrollment is not being planned, he said.

Candidates profiled

In 1988, for the first time in their lives, many of Villanova's 8,000 undergraduates will have an opportunity to aid in choosing America's leadership in the November presidential elections.

In an effort to provide information about the presidential aspirants and encourage interest in the national elections, the Villanovan will be running a weekly series of candidate profiles.

The profiles will give basic descriptions of the candidates, their stands on the issues, their experience in government and other pertinent information.

Republican candidate Pat Robertson

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN
Senior Reporter

The Rev. Pat Robertson, a Southern Baptist minister and former televangelist with little political experience, appears unlikely at first glance to have any impact on the race for the Republican nomination. According to a recent poll by Time magazine, 56 percent of those surveyed view Robertson "unfavorably," which is a higher negative rating than any other candidate.

Nevertheless, Robertson is in a pivotal position in the Feb. 8 Iowa caucuses.

Robertson has a deeply devoted following that is expected to round up all possible supporters to vote Monday night. If overall voter turnout is poor, Robertson could conceivably finish second in Iowa's Republican race, although he ranks fifth out of six candidates nationwide, according to a Jan. 25 Time article.

If Robertson finishes second, it could be disastrous for the third-place candidate. Many party members would immediately support the first-place candidate, expected to be either Vice President George Bush or Sen. Robert Dole, in order to derail Robertson's campaign, said Time.

Robertson's campaign rests on a conservative platform.

He supports large defense spending and military strength as the "only way to peace," according to a Jan. 17 Philadelphia Inquirer article. He criticizes the U.S.-Soviet treaty to eliminate all intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF) in Europe, and has alluded to rolling back communism in the Soviet Union.

He also advocates aid to the Nicaraguan contras and the reinforcement of naval forces in the Persian Gulf.

In economics, Robertson opposes any tax increases. He calls for a $100 billion budget cut, and supports the line-item veto, the balanced budget amendment and the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act, which calls for automatic across-the-board cuts in spending, should the federal government be unable to meet certain budget deficit reductions on its own, said the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Although still developing a position on the trade deficit, he does not support protectionist measures, but wants to improve American competitiveness.

Robertson opposes the Supreme Court decision allowing legalized abortions.

He also stated, in a September issue of Time, that "average voters want " ... the ultimate downfall of Soviet tyranny everywhere ... They want to return to a time when husbands love their wives and wives love their husbands, a time when children can pray in school again."

Other Republican candidates have been reluctant to criticize Robertson or challenge him on some of his controversial positions, although they regularly battle their other rivals.

However, Robertson poses enough of a threat to warrant a challenge. There are also several incongruencies shadowing his candidacy which could provide adequate fuel for criticism.

For example, Robertson has been accused of exaggerating his record in the Marines and his educational and business credentials.

For the primaries, Robertson's fundamentalist followers are unlikely to transfer their support to another candidate. Other Republicans have neglected to debate Robertson on these issues because they do not want to alienate Robertson supporters when they are needed to support the Republican Party in the national election next November.

Democratic Representative Richard Gephardt

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN
Senior Reporter

The Iowa caucuses Feb. 8 will be an important test for Rep. Richard Gephardt's campaign for the Democratic Party's nomination. Gephardt is one of several frontrunners in Iowa's Democratic race, and needs a strong showing Monday to boost his under-funded effort, according to Time magazine.

Gephardt is a Midwesterner from St. Louis, Mo., and his economic policies appeal to many Iowa farmers and union members. Gephardt has staked a lot on Iowa's votes. According to Time magazine, he spent 97 days campaigning in Iowa prior to November 1987.

The major emphasis of Gephardt's campaign rests on his tough trade policies.

He tries to sell audiences on the Gephardt amendment, which passed the House of Representatives April 30 as part of an omnibus trade bill. The amendment seeks to punish countries which have run up large trade surpluses with the United States. Gephardt insists, however, that his policies are not protectionist, according to New Republic magazine.

Gephardt "warns audiences of inevitable economic decline because of surging foreign competition, yet promises a revitalized America," said a November Time article.

He seeks to reduce the budget deficit by $30 billion to $40 billion a year through new revenues and spending restraint. However, he opposes the balanced budget amendment and the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act, which calls for automatic across-the-board cuts in spending should the federal government be unable to meet certain budget deficit reductions on its own. Gephardt seeks to impose a $5-a-barrel oil import fee, higher corporate minimum tax and improved tax enforcement to raise a total of $20 billion a year, according to the Jan. 17 Philadelphia Inquirer.

Revitalizing education is another issue championed by Gephardt. In addition, he supports an agricultural program to raise crop prices, which makes him attractive to many Iowans.

Although Gephardt, 46, is young, he has earned a respected track record in his 12 years in Congress as a hard worker. Two of his major achievements in the House of Representatives are his sponsorship of the Bradley-Gephardt tax reform bill and the Gephardt trade amendment.

"In each instance, Gephardt helped fashion new solutions to complicated problems through hard work and an unusual mastery of facts," wrote Time magazine.

Critics have accused Gephardt of trying to reach the top of the ladder too fast. Gephardt responds that he is now at his mental prime for the presidential position.

He has also been criticized for changing many of his initial positions to be more politically appealing to fellow Democrats.

In the early 1980s, Gephardt supported bills to deregulate health care and decrease government's role in education, according to a December 1987 article in New Republic magazine. Recently he has worked for bills advocating just the opposite.

Gephardt supported an anti-abortion constitutional amendment for many years. He recently changed his position, promising the National Women's Political Caucus that he would not veto abortion money as president.

"All politicians of both parties, at least successful ones, trim their sails to adjust to prevailing winds. Few have shifted as dramatically, quickly and smoothly as Richard Gephardt," wrote John J. Pitney Jr. in the New Republic article.

Housing surplus reported

By STEVE D'ANGELO
Staff Reporter

The number of on-campus dormitory spaces exceeded the number of students waiting to fill them this semester, said Daniel C. Remley, assistant director of Residence Life for housing services.

Because of the relatively large amount of students either moving off campus, transferring colleges, or being unable to return, a number of housing vacancies were created for the current semester, Remley said. Most of these spaces were filled by the students on the waiting list for campus housing, he said.

However, like last semester, there were more open rooms than there were students on the waiting list. "We've been exceeding the waiting list the last two semesters ... We still have twenty-three male vacancies right now," said Remley.

Any student, full-time or University College, who is not currently living on campus may place his or her name on the waiting list.

As the names are received, they are arranged in numerical order. When rooms become available, full-time students are the first to be housed. Then, if there are still spaces which need to be filled, as was the case this semester, those at the beginning of the University College section of the waiting list are given the extra spaces, Remley said.

Remley emphasized that the waiting list provides an additional opportunity for students to gain housing for the upcoming semester. Those not making the lottery cutoffs for housing should seriously consider placing their names on the list, he said, since there will be a good chance of regaining on-campus housing for 1988-89.

Details about how students can take advantage of the waiting list will be posted on or about Feb. 16, along with the housing cutoff numbers, Remley said.

According to Remley, almost 100 percent of the current freshmen will make the lottery cutoffs and acquire housing next year. Remley also said that about 20 percent of the present sophomores and 50 percent of the present juniors on campus will retain residency.

According to Remley, when choosing housing for next year, each student will receive a computerized form with spaces for eight room selections. A student's chance of receiving a requested room is based both on his seniority and lottery number.

Current juniors receive the best choice, followed by sophomores, then freshmen. The students who receive the lowest lottery numbers in each class will get the first pick out of their specific class, he added.

Advisement improvements offered

By DANTE J. SCALA
News Editor

Student Government's academic affairs committee has recommended that minor changes be made in the University's academic advisement programs, said Kristin Switala, assistant secretary of the committee, Sunday.

Switala said the academic affairs committee is planning to send its recommendations to the University Senate's academic policy committee for review.

The Student Government committee does not want to make sweeping changes in the advisement system, said Switala. A recent Student Government report based on a student survey concluded that Villanova does not have a major academic advisement problem.

Rather, the recommendations are meant to "get the little spots that need improvement" within the advisement system, she said.

For instance, while Switala said that Dr. Helen K. Lafferty and the Rev. Arthur B. Chappell, O.S.A., assistants to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, were doing "fabulously" as advisors, the committee recommended that more advisors be trained to handle the large number of freshmen.

Having only Lafferty and Chappell to do all of the freshman advisement is "ridiculous," added Switala.

Lafferty said Tuesday that the committee's observation is a "legitimate" one, and that some alternatives to aid in the advisement process, especially with freshmen, are being considered.

In the College of Commerce and Finance, the main problem is that students are unfamiliar with their advisor when it is time to declare a major, said Switala. The structured freshman schedule precludes the need for an advisor during the first year, she said.

Dr. Richard Ruane, freshman advisor for the College of Commerce and Finance, said that freshmen are encouraged at the beginning of the school year to talk with professors and chairpeople about possible majors.

He said that some time ago a meeting was held for students, in which chairpeople described their majors in their departments. It was stopped because of poor attendance, said Ruane.

Another suggestion is to make it mandatory that new faculty members attend training sessions sponsored by the college in order to learn about the advisement system, said Switala.

The academic affairs committee also suggested that each college meet with its freshman class during the fall semester to explain the pre-registration process.

Schuylkill jams, delays expected

Reconstruction begins

By E.H. MC ELDOWNEY
Staff Reporter

Construction began Monday on the Schuylkill Expressway [Route 76] which will affect portions of the Philadelphia area.

The construction is to take place in three phases and will include a temporary addition of restrictions along both the east and west-bound sections of the highway, said Lois Morasco, the assistant press secretary for the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation, Tuesday.

The restrictions, which will result in a reduction from two lanes down to one, are to assist in the "complete rehabilitation of the Schuylkill Expressway," Morasco said.

The first phase of the construction will affect east-bound traffic between Girard and Spring Garden Streets down to and including the Vine Street intersection. It will affect west-bound traffic from Vine Street to Spring Garden Street.

The second phase, which begins March 1, will extend the traffic restrictions east-bound to Roosevelt Boulevard and west-bound to the 30th Street station exit.

Alternate routes suggested by Morasco are Kelly Drive, East River Boulevard, Belmont Avenue, Vine Street and Market Street.

Additional closings scheduled for March 1 include the Montgomery on-ramp to both east and west Route 76 and the Girard on-ramp to east and west Route 76. Also, the Spring Garden on-ramp to Route 76 west will be closed. The west-bound off-ramps to Girard Street and Montgomery Avenue will also be closed.

For additional information, the Schuylkill Expressway hotline number is 1-800-672-7600.

Correction

A statement attributed to College of Nursing Dean M. Louise Fitzpatrick in "University community reacts," an article in last week's paper, was printed incorrectly.

Fitzpatrick actually said Driscoll offered "wonderful administrative support" to the College of Nursing's graduate and undergraduate programs and made possible the employment of additional doctorally-prepared faculty.

The Villanovan regrets the error and any inconvenience it may have caused.

Art exhibit shown at museum

The Brandywine River Museum will host an exhibition of approximately 185 works by three contemporary Soviet artists as part of an art exchange between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The exhibition, entitled "Three Soviet Artists: Ugarov, Salakhov and Bisti," opens Feb. 20 and continues through April 17. It includes works of art selected by the Academy of the Arts of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The show is in response to the museum's exhibition, "An American Vision: Three Generations of Wyeth Art," which opened in Leningrad and Moscow last spring and is still touring the world. Both traveling exhibitions resulted from the General Exchanges Agreement signed in Geneva in 1985.

The museum is located in Chadds Ford, Pa., 30 miles from Philadelphia and 15 miles north of Wilmington, Del.

Also, the Brandywine River Museum is currently exhibiting a large number of still-life paintings by 19th and 20th century American artists. The show is running until Feb. 7.

Carolyn Wyeth, N.C. Wyeth, William Trost Richards, and nearly 90 other artists are represented in the show.

Many of the landscape paintings in this show are linked with the Brandywine Valley. The museum is located in Chadds Ford, Pa. The museum is open daily from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. K.M.R.

Mideast protests occur on campus

Compiled from the College Press Service

In a prelude to the violent clashes between Israeli soldiers and Palestinian rioters that occurred in Israel, pro-Palestinian groups recently held relatively rare demonstrations on at least three American campuses just before classes ended for the holidays.

The rallies were part of a Nov. 29 Day of International Solidarity sponsored by Palestinian groups around the world.

At the universities of Arizona and Iowa and at Yale, students listened to speakers denounce Israel and Israeli civil rights violations against Palestinians living there.

Palestinians living in Israel and Israeli-occupied territories taken during the 1967 Six-Day War have been denied basic civil rights, Hanna Siniora, the editor of an Arabic newspaper, told approximately 120 people at Yale. "Over the past three years the Palestinians have faced the harshest military occupation in the 20 year history of that occupation," he said.

At Iowa, a Palestinian speaker identified only as "Saed" compared Israel's treatment of Palestinians to South African apartheid.

Professors aid in survey

By DANTE J. SCALA
News Editor

Six Villanova professors recently aided in conducting a national survey on America's relationship with the Soviet Union and the nuclear arms race.

The University faculty members included philosophy professors Dr. John Carvahlo, Dr. John A. Doody, Dr. John H. Fielder and Dr. John Immerwahr, peace and justice professors Dr. Joseph DesJardins and Ed Sullivan of the Center for Peace and Justice Education. They were part of a Human Organization Science [HOS] Institute team hired to aid with the poll.

The survey project, titled "Public Summit '88," was run by the Public Agenda Foundation, a nonprofit research and education organization founded by former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and public opinion analyst Daniel Yankelovich, and the Center for Foreign Policy Development at Brown University.

"Public Summit '88" was designed to educate the public on the "vital area of Soviet relations and nuclear arms," as well as to measure public opinion on U.S. policy after "considering the pros, cons and trade-offs of long-term policy directions," according to a news release.

Month-long campaign

The project took place during January in Baltimore, Nashville, San Antonio and Seattle. In each city, the project centered on "citizen choice campaigns," which employed television and print media to reach the public.

The campaign featured coverage by media sponsoring the program and "town hall meetings" which offered the public a chance to speak with national experts on the issue. In addition, there were lectures and debates at colleges and high schools and "civic and community forums," according to the news release.

At the end of the campaign in each city, the public was given a chance to vote on four possible scenarios for a future Soviet-American relationship. Ballots were distributed through local newspapers and "cooperating schools," stated the release.

In addition to the campaigns, "Public Summit '88" also attempted to determine public opinion on the foreign policy issues by polling demographically representative samples of citizens in the four cities and Chicago.

V.U. professors' role

It was in this part of the project that the Villanova professors participated. As members of the HOS Institute team, they traveled to the five cities to aid in the polling of the citizen samples.

The survey process used for the project is a new way of gathering information about public opinion, according to the news release.

The people who made up the survey sample first took a pre-test, answering questions concerned with the issues of Soviet-American relations and the arms race. The pre-test was given "to determine how their thinking may change and the reasons why they support or reject certain policies," according to the release.

After the pre-test, they then saw two movies describing four possible futures for Soviet-American relations, and participated in discussion groups.

The Villanova professors had the important role of moderating the discussion groups, said Immerwahr, who has been personally involved with the project for a year. It was their job to give the groups a chance "to wrestle with" the different views on the issue, said Immerwahr.

Moderating the discussion groups "takes incredible concentration" and was "very draining and very exciting," said Immerwahr.

Describing the discussion process, Immerwahr said, "All at once you're thrust into a room with 18 strangers" with a wide variety of backgrounds. The moderators had to make sure certain points regarding the four possible futures were covered, while letting people speak and listening to what they say, said Immerwahr.

Philosophy professors fitted the role of moderator because they have experience in exposing people to different arguments and in objectively presenting a wide range of ideas, said Immerwahr.

After the movies and discussion groups, the sample of citizens took a second survey.

Immerwahr, who has been involved with the Public Agenda Foundation for 10 years, said that the foundation was "delighted" with the work of the University professors, and that it would return to Villanova in the future for more moderators.

itations on who can park at the University. These are decisions made at a higher level."

Stack commented that he feels all of the parking policies are reasonable except for the regulation that prohibits students from parking their cars overnight on campus. "If the student bought a sticker for $50, why not?" he questioned.

"The Security office needs to let the students know they are open to their situations and that they will be judged accordingly. Both the students and Security need to treat each other with respect," Stack added.

Kelly responded that "The Security department is sensitive to everything Villanova needs. I think that we have gained the annoyance of some people due to my insistence upon a single standard for both faculty and students."

Chief Rowan P. Kelly, Director of Security

Traffic Appeals Board case cited

Kelly illustrated his point with a Traffic Appeals Board decision in September, in which a faculty member contested a fine for a parking violation and was subsequently pardoned of all charges. Kelly said, "We've never done this for a student or staff member, so why are we doing it for a faculty member? It's simply a double standard."

Kelly charges that the faculty member intimidated Joseph S. McDonnell, of the office of the associate dean of Sciences and chairperson of the Traffic Appeals Board, into allowing a second hearing of the case after the first trial had rejected his appeal. "There hasn't been a second hearing of the Traffic Appeals Board in two years," Kelly stated.

In response to Kelly's accusations, McDonnell explained that the faculty member was upset with the fact that only three members of the traffic board were present at the time of his first hearing.

"He felt that he had not been given due process, so I granted him a second hearing with the full board in attendance. This is the way we've been conducting the hearings since that time," McDonnell said.

McDonnell added, "I did not make a special exception to this person simply because he was a faculty member. As a matter of fact, we give faculty members a rougher time at our hearings."

The day after the appeal was upheld, four Traffic Appeal Board members were dismissed from their services on the board by Kelly. Stack called this action "an ill-timed, seemingly vindictive removal which has seriously affected the operations of the Traffic Appeals Board."

The PEC report repeated this opinion, claiming that this incident "damaged the Board's confidence, power and credibility on campus."

Kelly defended his action by saying that the board members in question had been part of the board for two years, after which time it is University policy to relieve them of their positions. "I didn't get around to it [the dismissals] until September, and unfortunately, it coincided with the case mentioned previously," Kelly said.

Kelly's personality discussed

The PEC report observed that "it appears that his (Kelly's) personality is not compatible with the campus community and his curt and abrupt manner makes him appear defensive and intimidating."

Kelly responded, "I answer questions with a 'yes' or a 'no' and if it requires an explanation, I give it. I'm sorry if some people consider that 'curt' and 'abrupt.' Also, I'm 6'4", and if that intimidates someone, I can't help it."

The report commended Kelly for his improvements in upgrading the quality of the officers in his department.

Kelly said that his officers must be certified by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and are required to have experienced 40 hours of training in an officers' training school. Kelly added that promotions are now available for all Security guards, which helps to motivate them to work harder as well as offer career options to the officers.

The PEC evaluation stressed the need for adequate space for Security's operations, calling it a "very poor situation that needs attention."

Kelly said that the officers have no place to keep their personal belongings or change clothes except in the men's and women's restrooms. He said, "I feel very strongly about the need for space in the Security department. With better facilities, the officers will be better motivated and feel as more of a member of the Villanova community."

Kelly continued, "The administration was supposed to build a facility in the basement of Corr Hall for Security. However, whatever priority it had, it has now received lower priority because I haven't heard or seen a thing about it."

Student Life-Security tension

The report also suggests the presence of tension between the office of Student Life and Security. It states that "unfortunately, the relationship between the Student Life area and Security is strained at best and can probably be best described as almost non-existent ... This lack of cooperation is primarily the result of personalities and the mistrust of each department."

Neville described this statement as "overstated," and attributed the lack of cooperation to the poor communication between the departments, stating that "we see things from our perspective and they see it from theirs. It's just that often we differ on how to take care of certain situations involving Security."

Kelly stated that the problems between Security and Student Life had already existed before he came into office. "If communication is lacking, it is not lacking on the part of Security. If a wall has been built, it is not my doing," he added.

The report mentioned the low amount of minority workers employed by the Security department. However, the evaluator pointed out that this is not unique to Security, for the University as a whole has a small minority population.

The Rev. Patrick J. Rice, O.S.A., vice president of Administration and Kelly's superior, declined to comment on the PEC evaluation because he had not read the report.

Senate commitee "redundant"

By JENNIFER REIDY
Assistant News Editor

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, said Monday that the report of the Program Evaluation Committe (PEC) on the Villanova Security department may end the need for the Senate ad hoc committee designed to examine Security and parking policies.

Stack stated that "because the PEC report thoroughly evaluated the problems present in Security and made subsequent recommendations, any future investigations by the committee will be redundant."

Student Sen. Brian Moses, chairperson of the Security committee, agreed with Stack, saying that "the PEC report basically did our work for us. I personally found the report to be very fair, objective and accurate in evaluating the current problems in the Security department."

Student Sen. Diane P. Carman, member of the committee, explained that the primary purpose of the committee, which was created at a Senate meeting last September, is to examine current Security and parking policies and make recommendations, if necessary, to the Senate to alter or modify the existing codes.

"The committee is purely a fact-finding committee. We only evaluate the policies, not how they are enforced. The committee is in no way to be interpreted as an attack on Chief Kelly (Chief Rowan P. Kelly, director of Security)," Carman continued.

The Rev. Peter Donahue, O.S.A., theatre professor, another member of the committee, said that the committee has had only two meetings since its formation in September, including one meeting with Kelly and another with the Rev. Patrick J. Rice, O.S.A., vice president of Administration.

Donahue said that "these meetings primarily established a background for the members of the committee to understand the current situation in the Security department, and particularly Chief Kelly."

Moses commented on the meeting with Kelly and described the chief as "not as much of a tyrant as people say. However, he does have his specific ways of doing things, and I don't think he will change for anyone."

According to Moses, Rice addressed the "rivalry" between the departments of Student Life and Security during the committee's meeting with him last semester

"Rice was angry with Fr. Stack for granting too many exceptions to resident students to allow them to park their cars on campus. Rice said that this was a good example of the problems between Student Life and Security," said Moses.

The committee has made no recommendations at the present time, according to Donahue. He said he believed a report on the committee's findings may be released in the near future.

Carman said that she and Moses are presently planning to establish a forum where students can express complaints about Security to members of the administration and faculty. However, no date has been set at this time for its operation, according to Carman.

Moses added, "I feel that this forum would be a good way for students to vent their frustrations ... Hopefully, I would like to arrange the program to begin at the end of February."

keep a majority down for a limited period of time until unrest and dissatisfaction result in violence. The same thing will happen with Poland and the Soviet Union."

However, Woods said there is "a faint possibility that civil war can be avoided" as the result of pressure from the United States and Great Britain on the South African government to force reform and prevent war.

According to Woods, the South African government claims that the country will become communist if a revolution occurs, and attempts to promote the illusion of hatred and disunity among the black population.

"Every time something is printed or said against apartheid and this propaganda, it forces them to work even harder," Woods commented.

Woods said that the hope for long-term change in South Africa lies with the young, liberal white population. "The white youth are less racist than their parents. They often resist military service, for they aren't so fond of apartheid as to get shot for it," he said.

"People don't realize how brainwashed whites are in South Africa. Since the government controls all of the media, it dictates what the people see and hear, much like in the Soviet Union," Woods said.

Woods chronicled his life story to the audience, from when he shared bigoted insults on the playground as a child to his dramatic escape in the middle of the night from South Africa, after he had been "banned" for his controversial, anti-apartheid articles as editor of the New London Daily Dispatch.

Woods explained, "To be 'banned' is to be made a non-person. It is a punishment which lasts for five years, during which time one cannot write one word of correspondence, speak publicly, leave his house or be in a room with more than one person other than family members."

After he was "banned" and limited to the confines of his home, he secretly wrote his book, Biko, late at night in the attic in order to escape suspicion. After he finished it in three months, he, and later his family, made a secret escape to the bordering country of Lesotho, and later to London, England, where he and his family reside today.

Woods described his first meeting with Stephen Biko as a turning point in his life. "I had always known apartheid was wrong in my head, but after encountering him [Biko], I felt it with my heart," he said.

"My time with Steve Biko was strange in that I would quickly change from the world of reality to the world of unreality. My conversations with my black friends would consist of who was in jail or who had been executed while my white friends would discuss their current golf handicaps," Woods related.

Woods concluded his lecture by encouraging the youth around the country to "get steamed up" about the issue of racism in South Africa as well as in the United States.

"South Africa is a land of contrasts, for it is both wonderful and frightening. It contains great possibility, but it is governed by ridiculous men and ridiculous laws. In the modern world, South Africa is indeed an indication of a society that is mad with the issue of race," he ended.

Villanova Violations

By BARBARA KRESCH
Staff Reporter

This column will occasionally be printed to inform the Villanova community of reported violations of the code of student conduct that have recently occurred on campus. The information is supplied by the judicial affairs officer, Stephen McWilliams.

In general, over half of the violations, which total 394, were of the school's alcohol policies. Also, a large part of the other offenses were a result of drunkenness.

Most of the violations occurred at special events such as sports games, and Homecoming weekend, while many occurred during the first few weeks of the semester when the workloads are the lightest.

The exact numbers of reported violations from the 1987 fall semester, in descending order, is as follows:

— breaking of alcohol policies — 212
— breaking of visitation policy — 80
— vandalism — 22
— theft — 20
— dangerous practices — 11
— marijuana — 11

Last semester there was a number of more serious violations committed. There were 15 to 20 repeat offenders, each receiving more severe sanctions than first offenders. A total of five students were suspended and twelve students lost their on-campus residency. About 75 percent of the violators are male.

All of the funds collected from fines are applied to the dean of students' education programs, such as drug and alcohol education.

BERMUDA COLLEGE WEEKS

When you break away this year, do it with style.

Your College Week in Bermuda is more than just sun, sand and surf.

Right from the first outrageous "College Bash" at Elbow Beach, it's a week of unrelenting pleasure.

Spectacular seaside buffet luncheons. A calypso and limbo festival like none other. Smashing dance-til-you-drop beach parties, featuring Bermuda's top rock, steel and calypso bands. Even a "Party Cruise." All compliments of the Bermuda Department of Tourism.

Bermuda is all of this—and much, much more. It's touring the island on our breezy mopeds. (Do remember to keep left!)

It's jogging on quiet country roads—including an early morning 2-k "Fun Run" from Horseshoe Bay. It's exploring the treasures in our international shops, playing golf on eight great courses, and tennis on over 100 island-wide courts.

But most of all, it's the feeling you get on a tiny, flower-bedecked island, separated from everywhere and everything by 600 miles of sea.

This year, break away with style. See your Campus Travel Representative or Travel Agent for details.

Milk crate law discussed

By CAROLYN R. MIRABILE
Staff Reporter

Villanova University will not be affected by the new Pennsylvania "milk crate law" which went into effect Dec. 6.

According to Stephen McWilliams, judicial affairs officer, there will be no action taken against students who are found with milk crates stolen from a local food store.

In response to the theft of about $100 million worth of milk crates each year, the Pennsylvania Association of Milk Dealers convinced the state legislature to pass a law which made it illegal to steal and possess milk crates.

Other local actions were unsuccessful because retailers, restaurants and dairies were leaving crates outside their businesses.

Pennsylvania passed this law so that the milk price would not be raised.

Pennsylvania, which is the first state to pass such a law concerning milk crates, has spent $40,000 to publicize the new law, which is aimed at college students who use the crates to store books, clothes and records.

Although Villanova has not been affected, the effects of the new law have been felt at other area colleges. At Clarion University students returned over 1,500 crates during an amnesty period.

Also, according to Wayne Conway, a staff reporter for the Edinboro University newspaper, rumors that the "milk crate police" were coming with search warrants encouraged some students at Edinboro University to throw stolen milk crates out of dormitory windows. As a result, 400 milk crates were collected.

Dawn Brydon of the Milk Industry Foundation in Washington, D.C., said, "It's a difficult and expensive problem." She added, "Individual campus efforts could never be so successful without the force of the new law behind them."

Students lobby congressmen

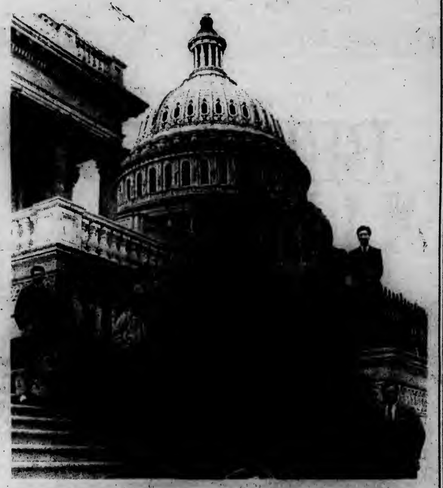
By SHARON A. WATERS
Assistant News Editor

Students from "Introduction to Peace and Justice Education" classes traveled to Washington, D.C. to get an inside look at Congress and to lobby their congressmen on current peace and justice issues Dec. 2.

The classes have visited Washington each semester since 1976, but for the past three semesters, the students have been welcomed by Rep. John G. Rowland (R-Conn.), Villanova '79.

Rowland, representing the fifth Congressional District of Connecicut, was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in November, 1984 at the age of 27. Rowland is recently the youngest member of Congress.

The Rev. Owen R. Jackson, O.S.A., peace and justice professor, said he contacted Rowland, who was very willing to become involved with the students' visits.



This visit was distinguished from previous trips in that Rowland escorted the group onto the floor of the House of Representatives.

Prior to the trip, each member of the class wrote to the congressmen from his state requesting a meeting during the class visit, Jackson said.

While meeting with their congressmen, students presented their views on current issues which interested them and attempted to persuade their congressmen to agree with their position.

Jackson said the students' aim was to let the congressmen, "know [their] position and to try to influence them to vote the way [they] want them to vote — they're [their] representatives."

According to Jackson, Rowland is very pleased with the students' visits and "wants to continue hosting the students."

Renewal week concludes

By THOMAS BRUGGER
Staff Reporter

A renewal week, sponsored by Campus Ministry, took place last week and was hosted by the Rev. Ray Dlugos, O.S.A., a 1979 graduate of Villanova University.

Dlugos has four years of high school teaching experience, has been recognized by U.S. News and World Report, and is currently an associate pastor at St. Denis Church in Havertown.

The renewal began the evening of Jan. 25 with Dlugos speaking on the topic of revelation, Christ's call for us to "trust in Him." On Jan. 26, sexuality was discussed and on Jan. 27, Dlugos spoke of reconciliation.

Ending with a challenge for the future, he spoke Jan. 28 on the role of today's Catholic in his own parish and in the world.

Dlugos said that we have "a great responsibility" as the Church, in that "we are called to be the Body of Christ."

Stressing the need to become more involved in local communities, he called the parish "the backbone of the American Church."

Commitment was another theme found in the presentations. Dlugos said, "health, holiness and love come through solid commitments."

Tying this all into the present, Dlugos said to his audience that they have to "be the Church, confront it, and call it."

Also, Campus Ministry is sponsoring a one day retreat on Feb. 20. Campus Ministry, located in the basement of St. Rita's can provide additional information on this upcoming event, which is being organized by John Lozano and Linda Jacynzski. Campus Ministry can be reached at 645-4080.

New administrator profiled

By SHARON M. NEUBAUER

In September, the Rev. Arthur B. Chappell, O.S.A., replaced the Rev. William A. McGuire, O.S.A., as assistant to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

The replacement came after McGuire became the assistant director of Athletics in mid-September.

Chappell, who is a 1964 Villanova alumnus, came to the University from Washington, D.C., after working on his doctoral dissertation in Rome for two years.

According to Chappell, as the assistant to the dean, his major responsibilities are "to the students."

He, along with Dr. Helen K. Lafferty, the other assistant to the dean, "advise all freshmen and sophomores before they choose their major. They are advised in which classes to take, which major to choose, and other academic considerations."

Chappell's other duties also include "being in charge of overseeing the departments' budget process, as well as serving on a number of committees, such as the presidential scholarship committee."

Chappell, who was ordained as a priest in 1969, came to Villanova with a background in administration and in working with universities and students.

His first assignment after being ordained was as director of Student Activities at Biscayne College in Miami, Fla.

He later worked as a professor of religious studies at Merrimack College of North Andover, Mass.

Also, he worked as both the secretary and treasurer for the provincial order of St. Augustine at Villanova before becoming a priest.

Business student awarded

By JOHN M. CHEPEGA

Villanova senior Lee Losciale was among a group of students invited to discuss "Corporate America in the International Arena" with 150 of the nation's top-level executives at a recent "Business Tomorrow Conference."

Losciale, an international business major and the Interfraternity Council president, was selected by Villanova administrative officials as one of the school's top 10 students. His essay application earned him one of the 200 invitations sought by 2,000 applicants.

The Foundation for Student Communication, a Princeton undergraduate group, sponsored the meeting in Chicago. Business and governmental leaders, including over 30 chief executive officers of large American companies and Illinois Gov. James Thompson, led panel discussions and small group workshops in which the two sides informally communicated.

"I had some great and interesting conversations with the executives as well as the other students I met," said Losciale.

Though the Princeton organization intends to foster improved relationships and dialogues between students and business leaders, Losciale could not completely agree that this goal was met.

For instance, the topic of business ethics was discussed by the students and business people. Losciale said "a lot of good ideas were tossed around, but I don't know that the executives carried home the thoughts of the idealistic college students.

"They were sincere [at the conference], but they also have families, homes and jobs to consider. It is business," he continued.

In all, Losciale said the conference was "a great forum" and "a worthwhile experience."

Drive scheduled

By LAURA STEVENS
Staff Reporter

The Villanovans for Life organization is sponsoring a blood drive from Feb. 9 to Feb. 11 in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

The Red Cross will be in the Villanova Room from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on each of the three days taking blood donations.

According to a Red Cross aide, each donor will be given the opportunity to talk with a Red Cross nurse who will answer any questions before taking blood.

The only preparations that the Red Cross requests of donors is that they eat before donating blood in order to retain their strength, and that they not donate if they have given blood less than three months ago.

In order to dispel fears about the spread of communicable diseases, the Red Cross has also printed pamphlets which will be available in the Villanova Room. These pamphlets ensure that AIDS [Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome] and other communicable diseases cannot be contracted by donating blood.

Red Cross volunteers will be assisting at the blood drive and escorting donors to the canteen. Orange juice, doughnuts and other refreshments will be offered at the canteen.

The Villanovans for Life and the Red Cross hope to collect 600 pints of blood through the normal donation of one pint per person.

Meeting needed to solve Security issue

A meeting of Villanova officials must be held immediately to discuss and resolve the tensions between the Security department and Student Life. The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students; Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president of Student Life; Phil Brach, Student Government president; Chief Rowan P. Kelly, director of Security; and a faculty representative must meet and work through the existing problems between Security and members of the Villanova community, as outlined in the recent Program Evaluation Committee [PEC] report.

According to the PEC, Kelly is inflexible and out of tune with the Villanova community. Also, his curt and abrupt mannerisms make him seem defensive and intimitating. The report said Kelly is a good leader and enforces the Security policies according to the book, but notes the tensions between Security and Student Life.

The University has yet to effectively solve the Security and Student Life issue.

The University Senate's fact-finding committee has proved unmotivated, meeting only twice since September and making no recommendations to the Senate. Student Government has not effectively acted on the issue either.

With the recently published results of PEC, the issue is now out in the open again. Let's not let it slip by.

In the interest of the Villanova, University officials must sit down and hash out the existing problems immediately.

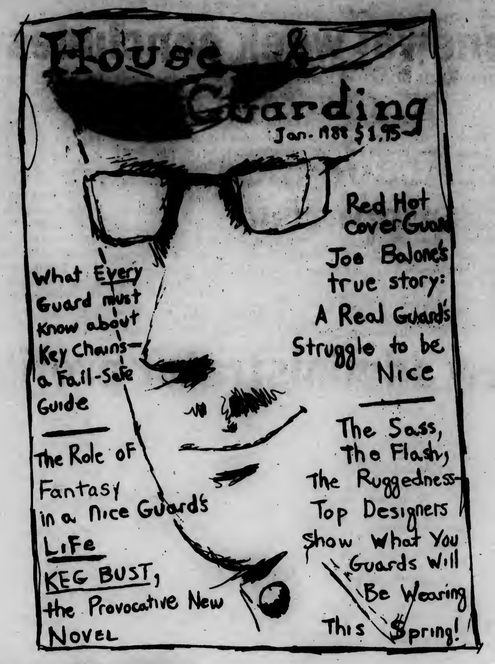
Who will take the initiative to resolve this ongoing problem at Villanova?

Responsible drinking a must

The recently approved Spring Festival to be held this semester is an excellent chance for students to set an example of responsible drinking on campus. We applaud the approval of the festival and urge that a date be set immediately to ensure the success of the event.

The festival is an attempt to offer a successful social event on campus. The controlled distribution of alcoholic beverages to students at least 21 years of age is important, for it will encourage upperclassmen to participate.

Responsible drinking is key to the success of the event. Students must respect the drinking age set by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and enforced by the University.



Underage students must not try to beat the system and drink alcohol at the festival.

In turn, the organizers must ensure a controlled atmosphere so that University officials can view the event as a positive happening at Villanova.

Students have been given the chance to demonstrate their maturity and responsible drinking abilities.

Once the date is set, the festival will be underway. Let's not ruin this opportunity for a fun day.

Respect the drinking age and follow the rules set by the University. The more the students show their responsibility, the more the University will respect their thoughts and actions.

Letters to the Editor

Non-student fans criticized

To the Editor:

Let me preface my remarks by saying that I fully understand the need to accommodate all of the populations at a university in the activities of the institution. I also fully understand constituent desires, support and politics.

However, the atmosphere at basketball games in the duPont Pavilion borders more on entertainment than enthusiasm. From the opening tip until the final seconds, the only section on their feet and cheering is the student section.

The other better seats, for the most part, are occupied by people who wish to be entertained. I am not saying that they are not loyal supporters of Villanova, but they could fool a lot of people. So much so, that last year at a game in the pavilion, my brother (a '76 alumnus), was up on his feet yelling, as were the rest of us, and the comment from the seats in front was "Why don't you people sit down and be quiet."

The duPont Pavilion could be just as difficult a place for a visiting team to be victorious if people got to their feet and verbalized the support which their physical presence implies.

Why is it so difficult to win in Rupp Arena, McGonigle Hall or the Carrier Dome? And why was the Jake Nevin Field House one of the most difficult places on the East Coast in which to win? Why? Because of the loud, boisterous fan support.

The duPont Pavilion could be just as difficult a place for a visiting team to be victorious if people got to their feet and verbalized the support which their physical presence implies. Bear witness to UNLV v. Temple Jan. 24.

Why was the Villanova bench moved closer to the student section? Maybe we should sell more student tickets.

Academic policies supported

By KRISTIN A. SWITALA

Last week I was shocked and dismayed to see the headlines of two Villanovan letters to the editor, which severely criticized Villanova's academic standards. As the assistant secretary of academic affairs in our Student Government, it is my job to ensure that we students are receiving the best education possible here. "Where has our school gone wrong?" I thought, worriedly.

Then I read the letters.

Both complain that our university is failing to provide us with a true, orthodox Catholic education. Gerald A. Lee, class of 1945, lashes out at Dr. Charles Cherry, assistant vice president of Academic Affairs, and Dr. Michael E. Burke, director of the honors program, for disloyalty to Rome. Miriam A. McCue's target was our philosophy department, which she accuses of ignoring Catholic philosophers and promoting Hitlerians.

In her letter McCue asks why we study Heidegger, who was "left in peace by Hitler." The reasons are both obvious and simple.

Many graduate students, after completing Villanova's program, will continue their education to earn a Ph.D. in philosophy, in order to teach and write. For contemporary continental philosophy, Heidegger is crucially important; the current French school, including such thinkers as Jean-Paul Sartre and Michel Foucault, is firmly grounded in, or influenced by, Heidegger's philosophy. In the contemporary Anglo-American school, many parallels between Heidegger and Wittgenstein are drawn.

For our graduate students to understand their field, and the direction in which it is currently moving, they must have at least a familiarity with Heidegger.

Another reason is that many graduate students come to Villanova's philosophy department to study under Dr. John D. Caputo, a renowned Heideggerean scholar. Caputo also happens to be the president of the American Catholic Philosophical Association. His published books include "The Mystical Element of Heidegger's Thought," and "Heidegger and Aquinas."

When McCue criticizes Heidegger, accusing him of being a Nazi, she should realize that Heidegger was profoundly influenced by the man whose thought McCue thinks has been neglected here — Thomas Aquinas. But even this very semester our graduate program is offering a course entitled, "Aquinas: Ethics and Law."

And what if students learn about Nietzsche, Heidegger, and the contemporary French schools? If their thought really does harm society, then we should study them even more, to discover their weaknesses and be able to criticize them. Most of the world is not Catholic, and will not be able to criticize these "dangerous" thinkers on Catholic grounds.

As far as students working on Catholic philosophers, our department also includes a Marcellan scholar, Dr. Thomas W. Busch, whose new text A Marcel Reader, I used last semester in an honors seminar on Sartre and Marcel. (Studying Marcel, I was surprised to find many parallels to Heidegger in his thought).

Which brings me to the issue of receiving instruction in Catholic philosophers, or the lack claimed by McCue. Dr. John A. Doody, chairman of the philosophy department, has insured that no undergraduate can receive a degree in philosophy unless he or she has successfully completed at least one course in medieval philosophy, Aquinas or Augustine. The Aquinas course being offered on the graduate level speaks for itself.

I find it astonishing that as a recent graduate, McCue both was not aware of these facts, nor checked on the academic situation here at Villanova before writing such a critical letter of her alma mater.

Lack of awareness also seems to be Lee's problem, which skews his critique.

He mentions that in his day (1945), subjects taken "were mostly in our major except for four courses in English and religion — the Roman Catholic religion, to be sure."

The differences between his world in 1945 and ours in 1988 make this type of education obsolete. Of course English and religion courses are crucial, but so have a number of other subjects become.

Modern languages, history, economics, political science, international business and relations are all critical subjects, and many are required for undergraduates, to ensure that educated, informed people may someday make policies to end global strife.

For example, how are we going to deal with the ongoing Arab-Islamic wars and terrorism, which threaten the lives of our Americans overseas, without launching into World War III? By studying that culture, to learn how to end and/or prevent a bloodbath.

Here at Villanova, we have two outstanding programs available to students: Arab and Islamic Studies, directed by the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, dean of the college of Arts and Sciences, and the Center for Peace and Justice, directed by Dr. Dan Regan. Both programs help us learn more about radically different cultures, with whom we will have increasing contact when we enter into the corporate and political world.

Education is why we are here. Students from all over the country and around the world flock to Villanova to participate in nationally-renowned programs such as astronomy and astrophysics, accounting, engineering and nursing.

Why? Because we have professors here who impact our world. For example, Drs. Edward F. Guinan, Jr. and Frank P. Maloney have recently found stars that seem to violate the theory of general relativity — a major discovery in the field of astrophysics. If academic freedom were disallowed, what would happen to these scientists?

They would not be here, and neither would the high caliber students that they teach. Villanova's academic standards and recruiting would plummet. Cherry's point about the "chilling effect" on faculty hiring of the Pope's decree on academics is valid.

But what about us receiving a strong Catholic background? Does Villanova fail in this regard?

For the Spring 1988 semester the University is offering 45 different courses on Catholic religion or other Catholic-related topics, and this includes courses being taught in Burke's honors program.

Villanova is an outstanding Catholic educational institution. We not only study our Catholic heritage, but also our current world — which we will have to impact to make life better for all of God's creatures.

This is a time to be open to different cultures and peoples. Intolerance against education not only has no moral value, in a world where Ethiopian children starve and Nicaraguan children carry submachine guns, but it also has no place in Christ's teaching of "Love your neighbor."

Kristin A. Switala is a junior philosophy major and assistant secretary of academic affairs of Student Government.

Do not support aid to Contras

By MARK CUTHBERSON

The question of whether the United States should continue to support the contra rebels in Nicaragua should be answered this week by Congress. Barring any extraordinary turn of events, the odds are that lethal aid to the Contras will be voted down. Thus, the Reagan doctrine will experience one of its most serious setbacks.

The end of the policy of "war by proxy" is just as well because the Contras have proven unable to accomplish the true objectives of the Reagan administration — capitulation by the Sandinista regime. Capitulation is the real goal here, not the existence of a democratic Nicaragua.

Yes, I know that all along the Contras have been billed as the moral equivalent of our own "founding fathers" and recently in his State of the Union Address Reagan even added a new twist to this ridiculous analogy by casting our role in this debacle as similar to the ones played by Pulaski and Lafayette when they aided the American colonies in their war against England.

These wonderful allusions are so comical that they lend themselves to illusion. Why the next thing you know Adolfo Calero and the rest of the Contra directory will don powdered wigs and reside over a constitutional convention.

Democracy, as we know it, would prove as illusory for a contra-controlled Nicaragua as it has for the Sandinistas. So if Ronald Reagan is not after democracy in Nicaragua, what has this seven-year fetish been about?

A Soviet beach-head in Central America, the defense of our southern border from the red menace is what you young Republicans are probably screaming by now. To which I reply, "phooey." Yes, "phooey" (the term which our own "great communicator" who brought it back into vogue when commenting on Sandinista's concessions to date.)

Since neither capitulation by the Sandinistas, nor a communist take-over of Central America is imminent, the time has come to end our aid to the Contras. The end of contra aid means that the United States will have far greater leeway to respond to future developments in Central America.

No longer will we be encun bered by a policy that our ow electorate and the majority of ou allies are in disagreement with Finally, our attempts to promo stability in the region will be see as far more credible.

Still a chance remains tha Reagan could forestall the defea of his aid package. Reagan ha already agreed to put the $3 million, lethal apportionment his aid request into escrow unt it could be verified that th Sandinistas were not complyin with the Arias peace plan. But h has stipulated that it will be h who will determine if the Sand nistas are complying with th terms of the peace accord (th from a man whose vocabular includes the word "phooey").

I would just as soon leave Ga Hart alone with a beautiful mod and trust him to discuss campai strategy as I would trust "Pre ident Phooey" to verify Sandinis compliance.

If Reagan is willing to allow a independent commission to judg compliance, as has been rumore this week, his proposal wou unfortunately have a far great chance of passage.

In an article in World Affai Magazine entitled, "The Sovi Way in Latin America," Robe Wesson of the Hoover Institu states, "Soviet successes (in Lat America) rest mostly on failur of the United States. Professor defends program

To the Editor:

The letter of Miriam McCue, which appeared in the Jan. 29 issue of the Villanovan, in a tangle of innuendo and misrepresentation, appears to claim that the graduate program of philosophy at Villanova University is doing something it should not be doing in light of the fact that Villanova University is a Catholic institution of higher learning.

With regard to "schools of higher learning, especially colleges and universities and their faculties," Vatican Council II urged that "branches of knowledge [be] studied according to their own proper principles and methods and with due freedom of scientific investigation" in order "to promote an ever deeper understanding of these fields."

The council's approach to truth is dialogical: "Truth, however, is to be sought after in the manner proper to the dignity of the human person and his social nature. The inquiry is to be free, carried on with the aid of teaching or instruction, communication and dialogue.

"In the course of these, men explain to one another the truth they have discovered, or think they have discovered, in order to assist one another in the quest for truth. Moreover, as the truth is discovered, it is by a personal assent that men are to adhere to it."

The council explicitly advises that philosophical studies for seminarians should be such that "students should also be conversant with contemporary philosophical investigations, especially those exercising special influence in their own country and with recent scientific progress.

"In this way, thanks to correct understanding of the character of modern times, students will be properly prepared for dialogue with the men of their own day."

The council advocated opening windows of dialogue in place of slamming doors in condemnation. In this spirit Bishop (later Cardinal) Wright of Pittsburgh, in 1966, gave his Imprimatur to, and wrote the foreward for, a series of philosophical anthologies to be used in undergraduate philosophy classes. These books were collections of writing which included such diverse thinkers as Sartre, Neitzsche, Heidegger, Ayer, Moore, Hook, Marx, Russell, as well as Plato, Aristotle, Augustine and Aquinas.

There is a strong tradition of classical philosophy that Villanova University is committed to keeping alive and vigorous in its undergraduate and graduate programs. In the latter, courses are offered every semester in both ancient and medieval philosophy. In fact, in order to graduate, students must take one course in each of these areas, plus another selected from one of these areas.

For over ten years Villanova University has sustained a Visiting Chair of Christian Philosophy occupied by distinguished scholars who both teach graduate and undergraduate courses and offer public lectures.

The University has established a program of Peace and Justice Studies, in which members of the philosophy department are a strong presence (the program's director is a philosopher). The program offers courses in Catholic social principles and their application to current world problems. This program, along with the professional ethics courses offered by our department, have been singled out by U.S. News and World Report when naming Villanova a distinguished institution of higher education.

Alas, all of this may not serve to assuage the concerns of McCue. There does exist a spectrum of Catholic thought on many issues and what provokes the dedicated reader of The Wanderer may not similarly provoke the devotee of The National Catholic Reporter.

It may even be the case that McCue, who scorns the American bishops, may hold in like disesteem Pope John XXIII. Despite her fulminations, the public should be advised that the philosophy department at Villanova University is fully aware of its responsibilities to the Augustinian tradition, the discipline of philosophy and the education of its students, and is continually attentive to the question of how these responsibilities can most suitably be met.

Academic freedom promoted

To the Editors:

An editorial appeared in the Jan. 29 issue of the Villanovan which attacked the concept of "academic freedom."

The author, Gerald Lee, graduated from Villanova in 1945, back when nothing but objective truth as taught in its classrooms and "there was little time for the humanities."

Lee finds the current state of affairs, when "we are hammered with 'dissent,' 'dialog' and 'academic freedom' " distressing and decidedly non-Catholic.

I believe he is wrong on at least three different points: the role of discussion in the Church, the role of a Catholic University and the status of free expression with respect to truth.

First, I find it difficult to believe that in 1945 Villanova professors taught nothing but objective truth. Certainly they did not in the College of Engineering or science departments. We have learned much since then, we know that not everything we believed in 1945 is correct, and we do not think, even now, that we have discovered the objective rules of science and engineering.

It would not be a good thing to teach nothing but 1945 science, and the Church knows this, which is why it permits discussion.

Christianity in general and Catholicism in particular have not functioned under immutable guidelines for the past 2,000 years, or even since the time of Augustine and Aquinas. We are constantly experiencing and learning and applying our experience to our religious practice. And this is not a bad thing; it is a good and necessary process that invigorates the Church rather than overthrowing it.

Second, Lee misunderstands the nature and purpose of a Catholic university and universities in general. Students do not attend college so that they may act like empty vessels to be filled with knowledge.

The most valuable lesson of a university education is not written down in the correct books, and it is not learned by being told the correct ideas. The lesson is an outlook on life that can only come by interacting with students and faculty and grappling personally with the ideas one comes across.

The only way to teach this lesson is to allow students to experience the great ideas of the world, whether they are held to be true or not. This is the primary responsibility of any university, Catholic or not. The way to teach a person to become a good Catholic is to teach them to become a good human being. This cannot be accomplished by stifling freedom, or by silencing questions. The thrill of learning comes not in closing, but in opening.

The obvious response that Lee might want to give is that the curriculum he would like to see taught has one overwhelming advantage — it is all true.

I must admit that I can propose no equally impressive alternative, simply because I do not know precisely what is true in all things. I do, however, have a way to approach truth. It is not by appeal to authority, religious or otherwise. It is (as some may have guessed by now) the free and unrestricted discussion of ideas. Good ideas, bad ideas, old ideas, new ideas and even some radical ideas. I do not believe that such discussion can possibly prohibit us from reaching the truth.

Thomas Jefferson's best quote ever is, "I have sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man." The mind of man — the most important part. It is only by the discussion of ideas by free man that the worth — the truth, if you like — can come to light.

This principle is applicable to all systems of belief, religious or secular. Without freedom of expression, Lee's article would never have appeared and neither would this one. But both are useful; it is only by constant testing and questioning that a system of belief can grow strong.

Does Lee want students at Oral Roberts University to be shielded from competing ideas? Would he be content with dictators depriving their subjects of any ideas but the ones that he wants them to hear? The only institutions that have reason to silence competing viewpoints are those that are afraid they will be exposed. I hope that Lee does not look upon the Church in that way.

Villanova's "Veritas" means "truth." The Soviet Union's "Pravda" also means "truth" — an objective truth where little dissension is tolerated. I prefer Villanova's truth; it is more free, more alive and more like the way I want to live.

Gore: Democrats only choice

To the Editor:

Since 1968, the Democratic Party has suffered defeat in four out of the last five presidential elections. As Party Chairman Paul Kirk stated recently, "The party that has been brought to its knees four out of the last five times must also be brought to its senses."

As the 1988 election approaches, it is incumbent upon the national Democratic Party to evaluate the causes of their defeats, to determine what qualities Americans desire in their next president, to offer the electorate new choices in a changing America and to nominate a viable candidate who has a reasonable chance of being elected.

Today many pundits speak of a "Republican electoral lock." This has been crystalized in the last five elections as the GOP has won 203 states to the Democrats 53. In deference to their presidential candidate and the state of the economy, I believe that the Democratic Party suffers from three structural problems.

Party loyalty continues to inhibit the chances of a Democrat being elected president. Ostensibly, Republicans are more wedded to their party than are Democrats.

In 1984, 76 percent of registered Democrats voted for Walter Mondale, while 24 percent voted for Ronald Reagan. In contrast, Mondale garnered only eight percent of all Republican voters.

The party's second problem is that a higher percentage of Republicans than of Democrats vote in presidential elections. Finally, Republicans do much better among the self-described Independent. As a matter of fact, in the last nine elections dating back to 1952, the Democrats have only won the Independent vote once, in 1964. In this context, the GOP makes up for their 13 percent deficit in registered party affiliation.

Now then, whom must the Democrats nominate to rectify these problems? At age 40, Senator Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee is by far the most electable candidate in a general election. He is handsome and cerebral and most importantly, moderate and southern.

Gore represents the best chance that the party has in bringing together mainstream Democrats and moderate Independents. Make no mistake, the South is the battleground in 1988. Arguably, Jimmy Carter would not have been elected president in 1976 if he hailed from, for example, Ohio, even in light of Watergate. It is time once again for a son of the South to lead the Democratic Party to victory.

I urge primary and caucus voters to strongly consider Gore; the best chance we Democrats have in bridging the gap between the proud tradition of our party and the future of America.

Having met the senator personally, I can assure you that he has the compassion to care, the courage to govern, the vision to create and the will to lead.

Fears of blood donation dispelled

To the Editor:

Villanovans For Life is sponsoring the winter blood drive on Feb. 9, 10 and 11, and perhaps it is necessary to once again state the facts and fallacies concerned with giving blood.

The most important is probably that it does not hurt much at all. There is a slight sting with the insertion of the needle, but the stories you have heard about three days of excrutiating pain, gangrene or multi-colored bruises are probably exaggerations. The pain involved in this procedure is heavily overrated.

Secondly, there is never any obligation to give. The policy before 1976 stated that if a relative for some reason needed blood, it was that family's responsibility to replace the blood used. This led to the desperate father calling second and third cousins, friends and others pleading for them to give blood.

The new relatively stress-free policy states that only volunteers are needed, and the blood gained is used wherever it is needed most. Although the new policy works, the local (Rosemont) Red Cross chapter, which services 97 hospitals, is in dire need of blood and is counting on Villanova to recruit 600 people.

Also, donating blood does not cancel one's entire day. The whole procedure, including the initial interview, the donation and the free food afterwards only takes about an hour, depending on how long you stay for the food.

. . . it is absolutely impossible to acquire AIDS while giving blood.

It should not interfere with any athletic activities, nor with anything else you are doing that evening.

Finally, an important misunderstanding that has surfaced in the last few years is that it is absolutely impossible to acquire AIDS while giving blood. It may be slightly inconvenient for you, but please support the upcoming blood drive. Many people are counting on you.

Liberal thought necessary

To the Editor:

When, at the turn of the century, the texts of Aristotle became known to Christian Europe, "orthodox" Christians reacted by condemning their presence. After all, Aristotle was known to be a pagan who rejected a personal, creating, providential God and the personal immortality of the soul.

The letter of McCue in the Jan. 29 issue of the Villanovan reminded me of those people who wanted Aristotle's works banned from the curriculum of a christian university. It is a good thing that Aquinas was a liberal who defied the then current orthodoxy and entered into a fruitful dialogue with Aristotle's works.

Amnesty group fights injustices

To the Editor:

Once again it is the beginning of a bright and promising new year. Hopes are running high among the Villanova community for a great semester full of good grades and great times.

Yet in most of the world, there exists no such hope. There is no light at the end of the tunnel. Most of the world is hungry, poor and oppressed. They see no future, they only curse the past. There is a group on Villanova's campus that works to free those under oppression, to light a candle rather than curse the darkness. The name of this group is Amnesty International.

Amnesty International is a world-wide human rights organization which works for: the release of prisoners of conscience (men, women and children detained anywhere in the world for their beliefs, ethnic origins, or sex, provided they have neither used nor advocated violence), fair and prompt trials for all political prisoners, and an end to torture and executions.

The Villanova University chapter of Amnesty International is attempting to rid the world of such injustices using the powerful "Urgent Action" letter writing network. In addition to the weekly letter writing, there will be dormitory write-a-thons, campus-wide letter writing days and other educational activities to promote a feeling of peace and justice.

Weekly meetings are held every Monday at 4:30 p.m. beginning Feb. 8 in the Center for Peace and Justice Education, located in the basement of Sullivan Hall. Faculty advisor Ed Sullivan can be reached at 645-4482 if there is a question or information is needed.

All those that want peace must work for justice. Help us.

Alternatives to graduation exercises discussed

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to Johnna Fiorino's letter to the editor concerning graduation, which appeared in the Jan. 29 issue of the Villanovan. As one of the individuals involved in planning and presenting the ceremonies, I am concerned that her letter left many readers with a mistaken impression about the rationale behind returning to combined ceremonies as opposed to one, "unified graduation," as well as our plans for accommodating the families and friends of our graduates.

While student behavior at the commencement ceremonies is certainly a concern which we attempt to address each year, the major issue with regard to the "unified graduation" dealt with the weather, i.e., what to do with the outdoor ceremony in the event of rain.

Over the past two ceremonies, we have discussed alternate ways of approaching graduation in the event of bad weather, for example, issuing a limited number of "rain passes" per graduate which would permit a few family members to attend the ceremony if we moved indoors to the Pavilion. Other alternatives included holding the ceremony outdoors regardless of the weather (the "rain or shine" alternative), and moving into the Pavilion at the last possible minute and allow as many guests indoors as could be accommodated once the graduates were seated. Each of these proposals left much to be desired and, fortunately, we were not called upon to implement them.

. . . the decision to return to separate ceremonies was made after carefully weighing both the problems and advantages associated with a single, outdoor ceremony.

After holding our first, "unified graduation" two years ago, it became very clear that both parking and traffic control were major issues to be re-addressed. After numerous meetings with Radnor Township and our own Security office, a decision was reached to use the soccer field, adjacent to the main lots, as a parking area for the ceremonies.

While using the field proved to be an enormous improvement for last year's ceremony, it is important to note that had it rained prior to, or during the ceremony, we would not have been able to park cars on the field. Thus, once again, the weather became a major factor in our ability to meet the high traffic and parking demands connected with graduation.

My point in relaying this information is to assure Fiorino, as well as other prospective graduates, that the decision to return to two, separate graduation ceremonies was in no way motivated by a desire to hold the present graduating class "responsible or accountable" for the behavior of the graduates at last year's ceremony. The decision reflects, instead, our unwillingness to risk having the success of an event, which should be enjoyable and rewarding for our graduates and their families, hinge upon the promise of good weather.

When the decision was made to hold the ceremonies indoors, consideration was given to the question of guest attendance and the seating capacity available in the duPont Pavilion. After much discussion, we decided not to limit guest attendance on a "ticket" basis, and to allow each graduate to invite as many individuals as they wished.

I am not certain where Fiorino obtained the inaccurate information that we would be limiting guest attendance. We have no plans to do so.

Fiorino's concerns with regard to parking, processions and timeing of the two graduation ceremonies are logistical issues which we address for each graduation, regardless of location. In the past, we have successfully managed multiple commencement ceremonies in one day, without the parking, procession or crowd difficulties which Fiorino outlines. We have no reason to expect that these details can not be managed equally well this year.

In closing, I would like to assure Fiorino and all prospective graduates that the decision to return to separate ceremonies was made after carefully weighing both the problems and advantages associated with a single, outdoor ceremony. It was not made lightly, without regard to the feelings of our graduates and their families. Fiorino, herself states that, "graduating unified and outdoors (weather permitting) would be ... wonderful." The key words in that statement are, "weather permitting."

Campus bookstore needs to improve

To the Editor:

At any university, students need to purchase certain books in order to study and learn. Most colleges realize this, and have an ample supply available to their students. However, our bookstore in Kennedy Hall seems to have understocked their book supply this semester, last semester, and the semester before that.

Don't we pay enough tuition every year? Why can't they figure out how many books they need before classes begin? At this moment, I have a paper to write on a play I can not read. Why, you ask? Because the bookstore "hasn't received their shipment of books" yet.

How long can this lack of organization continue before someone in the administration does something? For $13,000 a year, I expect to have the "privilege" of buying books required for my courses at the very least.

It is disgraceful when so many students at Villanova are forced to suffer because nothing is being done about the situation.

It is disgraceful when so many students at Villanova are forced to suffer because nothing is being done about the situation.

I do not think that it is too much to ask for some changes to be made. Would it be a tragedy to have a few extra books left over after everyone buys their books? It is about time that Villanova recognizes this problem and resolves it as quickly as possible.

Driscoll thanked

The following letter was addressed to the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president.

In the name of the parishioners, Augustinians, and staff of St. Nicholas of Tolentine Parish, I want to express deepest gratitude to you and to the University for the contribution recently made to us as a result of Hunger Awareness Week.

Even as I began to write this letter this evening a phone call came on behalf of a young homeless man in need of shelter. I was easily able to find a place for him in one of the city facilities and to offer him car fare and a coat. He is one of many who come to our door in need of housing, clothing or food.

The checks sent to us enable us to provide assistance to those whom we might otherwise not have the resources to help. In the name of these anonymous needy men and women I thank you and all those responsible for this generous gift to us.

You know well the conditions of St. Nicholas of Tolentine Parish at present. Though we here on the scene are making an effort to meet the needs of the poor, refugees and minorities, we know we are very often channeling the generosity and concern of many others in many places.

Please extend our thanks to those who have made this gift possible.

Art exhibit offensive

To the Editor:

A segment of Villanova's Mission Statement reads as follows: "The University attempts to develop an environment in which students, faculty and staff may experience a Christian intellectual and moral perspective, believing that the teachings of the Catholic faith are applicable in every area of human activity ... this community seeks to reflect the spirit of St. Augustine by the cultivation of knowledge, by respect for individual differences and by the adherence to the principle that mutual love and respect should animate every aspect of University life."

There seems to be an urgent need for us to actively pursue the hope expressed in Villanova's Mission Statement. There exists certain areas in which we fail to take a firm position to support, enhance or promote the Mission Statement.

We are responding here to the work of George Huffman, "Sex, Terror, and Other Flights of Fancy," exhibited Dec. 9-16 in the Villanova University art gallery, which fostered within us sadness and disgust.

We acknowledge that artistic creations, inclusive of music, art, drama and dance, are reflections of the interior dimensions of the artist. Creativity is a wondrous gift, for it offers the freedom of self-expression. It gives revelation to the heart, mind and soul of the artist.

Huffman's exhibit is a portrayal of his perceptions, the fruit of his imagination. We find that the manner in which he portrayed his convictions is not suitable or appropriate for an exhibit in a Catholic university aspiring for the nurturance of mutual love and respect.

The human body and human sexuality were distorted, perverted and mocked to express Huffman's fears. Acts of fornication, homosexuality, abortion and orgiastic implications saturate his work.

It is our opinion that art needs appeal to the higher instincts, for instance, altruism, truth and love. Yet, Huffman's work appears primitive and animalistic. It appeals to the dark side reflecting rebelliousness and lawlessness.

It grieved us to see prospective freshmen and their parents gaze upon the art gallery in the midst of campus tours. Hence, in a Catholic university, such an exhibit seems counter to the need of strengthening and edifying Christians.

Censorship is not suggested here. Rather, it is important to know that freedom does not imply that all things are acceptable. Therefore, as a Catholic institution, there is a need to decide how we desire to represent the University.

It is our hope that Villanova would not only in word, but in deed, embrace the gospel message of Jesus in every aspect of University life, and be a witness of God's presence among us.

Phillipians 4:8 reads: "Whatever is true, whatever is honorable, whatever is just, whatever is pure, whatever is lovely, whatever is gracious, if there is anything worthy of praise, think about these things."

Villanova needs to be a light of what is honorable, just, pure, lovely, gracious and worthy of praise. Let us consider for a moment how Jesus himself would respond.

New beer brewing in Philadelphia

By R. MICHAEL BULLOTTA
Features Editor

Until recently, the beer lover had a limited choice when he went to his favorite bar for a brew. He could choose among the imported beers, settle for a "light" beer, or choose one of the other "working man's" brews. But now the beer scene is expanding to include an alternative choice for the true beer connoisseur — microbrewed gourmet beer.

In 1981, there were only four microbreweries; today, there are about 40. A microbrewery is a very small, locally based brewery that, by definition, produces less than 10,000 barrels of beer per year (approximately the amount of beer Anheuser Busch produces in a single month).

Microbreweries make a point of selling only to a local market. They believe that beer, like fresh produce, is better when it is sold closer to the source. Furthermore, they intentionally brew their beer in small quantities to have greater control of the beer's quality.

In the forefront of these new microbrewed "yuppie" beers, is former Villanova student, Jeffrey Ware. Ware spent his college years first at Villanova, then at the Philadelphia College of Art. In 1986, 32-year-old Ware founded the Dock Street Brewing Company.

Ware created Dock Street beer because he thought there was a demand for a different kind of taste. "I couldn't find the taste I wanted in any beers on the market," stated Ware.

"There are many aficionados in the city who can tell the difference between one beer and another. It is for them that I created Dock Street amber beer."

When asked about the huge sales of the beer "giants" like Anheuser Busch and Miller, Ware said, "They make great commercials. That's what the public is buying. If you gave one of today's typical beers to a person from 100 years ago, they wouldn't even recognize it as beer."

Like many success stories, Ware's own had humble beginnings. He started brewing Dock Street beer in his basement. Ware stated, "It didn't take long to realize what a naive notion that was. Now we're planning a multi-million dollar operation, a new brewery on Penn's Landing where Philadelphians first made beer more than 300 years ago."

As for Dock Street's success, it was voted one of the top 10 beers in the country for the second year in a row at the Great American Beer Festival in Denver, Colo. With positive reviews in such magazines as Time and Gentlemen's Quarterly (GQ), Dock Street beer has placed Philadelphia in the spotlight of the national microbrewery surge.

When questioned about his long range goals for himself and his company, Ware said, "My hope is that the small American beers, not only Dock Street, will someday take back the market from the imports."

Dock Street beer is now distributed in New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Massachusetts and Washington, D.C., in addition to Pennsylvania. Dock Street retails for $19 to $24 per case, and $2.50 to $3 per bottle in restaurants and taverns.

While Dock Street beer is currently being made in a small brewery in Utica, N.Y., it is only a temporary arrangement until the new brewery is finished. The Dock Street brewery will be completed in about seven to nine months, and will be located in the old city area of downtown Philadelphia.

Even though Dock Street might not cause us money-conscious college students to give up our exquisite $6 case of Milwaukee's Best, it is still comforting to know that, with the closing of Schmidts, the 300 year tradition of brewing beer in Philadelphia will be kept alive.

For a sound slumber: facts from A to Zzzzzzz . . .

By JACQUELINE GENTILE
Assistant Features Editor

Sleep, a state that we spend nearly one-third of our lives in, may affect our wakeful state more than we realize. Something as important as sleep definitely calls for a little "undercover" investigation.

According to Dr. Russ Gardner of the biology department at Villanova, "Sleep, in general terms, can be described as a state of unconsciousness from which a person can be easily aroused."

What exactly happens to our bodies when we go to sleep? Dr. Paul Sheldon of the psychology department at Villanova explained that each night we go through four stages of sleep, plus rapid eye movement (REM) sleep.

Each stage, according to Sheldon, is marked by changes in brain waves, breathing patterns and body temperature. Stage one sleep is that time when we begin to "nod off" and descend into sleep. Stage two is also light sleep and people in this stage are easily awakened.

In stages three and four brain waves become slower than they are in the first two stages and subjects are hard to arouse.

REM sleep follows stage four and, according to Sheldon, our brain waves during REM sleep are similar to those of our waking hours. The brain does indeed seem to be very active at this time — 74 percent of dreams occur in REM sleep. These dreams are usually more vivid and bizarre than dreams in non-REM sleep. Moreover, most nightmares occur in REM sleep.

Once we have completed all of the above mentioned stages, the cycle begins again with stage one. A complete cycle takes about 90 minutes. Each night our bodies go through anywhere from four to six cycles, depending upon how long we sleep.

Sheldon explained that the amount of sleep we need varies from person to person. Everyone has his or her own cycle of sleeping-waking time, but this cycle is age-linked and as we grow older we need less sleep. Other factors which contribute to our sleep requirement are genetics, conditioning in our early life and physical and psychological states.

When we do get a good night's sleep, our bodies will reap the benefits. The old adage about getting our beauty sleep may be more fact than fallacy. Gardner stated, "There may indeed be some physiological basis to beauty sleep."

Gardner explained that a hormone, called the growth hormone, aids in the body's repair processes that occur throughout the day. Production of this hormone peaks several hours after you fall asleep. Thus, when sleep is deprived, our bodies do not have an increased amount of the growth hormone. "Consequently," added Gardner, "the repair process that thi hormone tends to control i interrupted."

Sleep can also boost our brai power. After a good night's slee we are alert, refreshed and read to conquer the day's challenges.

But, can we actually learn whi we sleep? Can we pop a tape c our physics lecture into our Walk man, turn up the volume, drift t sleep and ace the test tomorrow?

"Theoretically, it's possible, explained Sheldon. When we ar asleep our senses are responsiv to the environment. We often hea our alarm clock the ins... goe off. Similarly, a mothe is me diately awakened by the sound c her baby's cries in the night.

Comedy contest to crack up colleges

By SYLVIA DeSANTIS
Staff Reporter

On Feb. 25, Villanova will play host to the second annual U.S. College Comedy Competition. This contest will have U.S. College Comedy scouts visiting 100 campuses between January and March 1988, in an attempt to find the funniest college student on the East Coast.

Chase away the winter blues

By IRENE V. LANGRAN
Staff Reporter

What are the first images that come to your mind when you think of this time of year? Are they images of a campus that is cold, dark and dreary? If so, you are not alone. This can be the time of year when tempers flare up more often between roommates, when one can feel confined, overwhelmed and depressed. Besides finals week, this time can be seen as one of the toughest times of the year. This condition is commonly referred to as the winter doldrums.

What causes this problem, and how can it be cured? Julia Mazzoli and Andrea Webb, from Villanova's counseling center, were both on hand to discuss this issue. They noted that February is usually their busiest month of the year for a variety of reasons.

One of these reasons is the fact that the days are shorter. Some new research has indicated a link between certain depressions and the lack of sunlight. In addition to this, the cold weather keeps people inside and makes them feel confined. It may even be a hassle to get out of bed and go to classes on cold winter mornings. It is often much easier to stay in front of the television for hours at a time throughout this season.

Mazzoli and Webb were also quick to note that students are coming back from a long stay at home, and immediately find themselves having to get to work and study. They may miss people at home, including boyfriends or girlfriends. The vacation may have been one of great stress, because at home the students may find they have to adhere to rules and regulations that they do not have while away at school. Parents unhappy with report cards add to the pressures of starting a new semester.

1. Get out and be around other people. Do not stay inside your room all alone for the day. If you can force yourself to socialize a bit, it can instantly lift your spirits. It is important to remember that, even though the weather is not warm, you can still get out and be with your friends.

What are some things you can do to combat these winter doldrums? A change of attitude can be brought about by some suggestions compiled by Mazzoli and Webb:

2. Plan some physical activity. Many of us are outside almost every day of the week during warmer seasons doing some sort of physical activity. During the winter it is much easier to stay indoors and sit.

But, by actually getting out and taking advantage of Villanova's athletic facilities, perhaps going for a swim or "shooting some hoops," can do more for you than just improve your body. This exercise can give you a healthier mental attitude as well.

3. Try something new. Winter tends to make people feel as if there is less to do. What can help is if, as Mazzoli believes, one makes the effort to "Try a new sport, try a new hobby, take up something that's going to occupy your mind." Something like this can take your mind from approaching the day as dull and mundane to approaching it as new and challenging.

4. Plan activities that you can do indoors. This can mean anything from picking up a book, other than ones for your classes, to getting together with some friends to watch a movie.

5. Learn how to manage your time. Webb stated, "If you can plot it out ahead of time and schedule in time for fun ... realize that it is just as important as getting the studying done."

Thus, proper time management means, not only allowing yourself time to finish your schoolwork, but also allowing yourself proper leisure time.

If you can plot out your assignments on a weekly basis, it can also relieve the anxiety caused when students just look at the work load and become overwhelmed.

There is a weekly flow of students who go to Corr Hall's counseling center just for this purpose. This center, among other things, can teach a student how to balance the many aspects of their lives by putting into writing these weekly schedules. Many students come each week to get a form of the schedules they themselves fill out.

6. Enjoy winter! In regard to this Webb stated, "Enjoy the cold ... a spontaneous snowball fight or a spontaneous night of sledding ... lets you appreciate the fact that it is winter. After all, you have only this part of the year to go sledding or skiing, and 'Frosty the Snowman' will melt away in no time."

Why not try some of these suggestions? Make the best of the season! Such a change of attitude can make a world of difference as you embark on this new semester.

... Georgetown ... isn't that against the Mission Statement? ... we're amazed Georgetown made it through Monday night's game without starting a fight ... maybe Hoya Charlie Smith was just trying to start a friendly game of Basketball with Mark Wansky ... we finally know what a Hoya is ... a basement brawl ... bars ... beers ... and we just might have an event on campus with alcohol ... tailgating in spring without a game ... alcohol in limited amounts, of course, ... in a confined area ... just like one beer in a playpen ... if it gets out of hand at least we have the Super Security force standing around ... just like Superman, they put their uniforms on in the phone booths ... who's taking bets for Driscoll's replacement ... our vote goes to a nice conservative who will need a job toward the end of next year ... an amiable ex-movie actor perhaps ... only if he can remember the Mission Statement as well as he remembers the Iran/Contra thing-a-ma-gig ... and just think, not too much longer until Lent and those great Friday fish meals in the Pit ... but then again only Horton hears a Who Knows, Who Cares ...

Comedic contest

To inspire participation, Doritos and Sticklets are also sponsoring a brother event to the comedy search; an opportunity for some fortunate campus to win a free concert featuring the judges, Larry "Bud" Melman and Gilbert Gottfried.

On campus, entry displays should be available in which students can deposit empty Sticklets wrappers and Dorito bags. The school collecting the most wrappers and bags in a two-week period will win the free concert.

The competition kicked off at Washington State University on Jan. 18, and will wind up eight weeks and 99 schools later at Virginia Commonwealth University on March 11. The finals are scheduled for the peak week of Spring Break, March 21-25, in Daytona Beach, Florida. So get out your suntan lotion and whoopie cushions, it's time to laugh.

For your health

By TARA L. BURKE
Staff Reporter

Have cold winter winds got you "illin' "? You could take your sneezes, sniffles and aches to the doctor who can prescribe medication. However, you should not feel totally unprotected against cold and flu bugs. Here is a list to help make you less susceptible to sickness.

1. Wash your hands often. Hands spread most infections. Do not touch your eyes, nose or mouth because they are good hosts.

2. Ask sick people not to touch surfaces such as counters, doorknobs and telephones. A virus can exist as long as 72 hours on hard coverings. When a person sneezes, coughs or talks, one does not have to be present to catch their disease.

3. Keep separate an infected person's towels, sheets, eating utensils and toothbrush. Provide a disposable bag for discarding tissues.

4. Do not smoke. Smoking paralyzes the villi in your respiratory system that sweep the microorganisms from the lungs.

5. Wear a hat. Twenty-five percent of body heat is lost through our head.

Sleeping habits

Learning while we sleep may be conceivable, but unfortunately Sheldon added, "There's no scientific evidence for it."

Now that you have to do all of your studying while you are awake, you will probably find yourself, at least a few times throughout the semester, trading in sleep time for extra study time. Whether it is from too much work or too much play, a lack of sleep will take its toll on your body and your mind.

If you are deprived of a small amount of sleep, such as one night, you may find yourself fatigued and not very alert the next day. However, according to Sheldon, with some extra effort and motivation, the effects of a loss of a single night's sleep can usually be overcome.

If sleep deprivation is significant — anywhere from 60 to 200 hours — the effects can be severe. They include difficulty in concentration and perceiving accurately, irritation, fatigue, hallucinations and even psychotic behavior.

With sleep, quality as well as quantity is important. Substances such as alcohol can be the cause of a not-so-good night's sleep. According to Gardner, "Alcohol tends to alter the sleep cycles from what is normal." Consequently, we do not get a restful sleep. Similarly, a fever will disrupt the sleep cycles and cause a poor night's sleep.

The next time you find yourself frazzled and fatigued, your best bet may be to put aside your work, curl up under the covers and give yourself a relaxing night of sleep. Your body and your mind will thank you for it.

Campus Ministry

By the REV. RAY JACKSON, O.S.A.

Struck dumb for doubting the power of God, Zachary, John the Baptist's father, broke into prayer when God restored his speech. "Blessed be the Lord, the God of Israel, He has come to his people to set them free." This song of praise established the theme for the message of Good News: in Jesus, God has touched us.

We live in a secular pagan society engulfed by a culture that demands material comfort, instant gratification and power politics as its measure of success. Quality of life has little to do with friendship, compassion or concern for the needy. We are bombarded daily with the importance of looking good, smelling right and getting ahead. God is not in the marketplace nor in the geo-political arena of national security. Should this be so?

Zachary seemed to think not. He attempted to inform his own and future generations that something radically new was happening. No longer would people be left in darkness. A new dawn has come upon the earth; the fulfillment of the promise God made to his Hebrew people and an opening to all the human family for peace.

The humanity of Jesus forces us to integrate our spiritual, economic, political and social life. Jesus' teachings suggest not a dichotomy of spiritual and material, but a harmony among the many activities of our daily life. The attitudes of Jesus, his mercy and forgiveness, his concern for the poor and needy, his disgust and anger at phoniness and hypocracy, and his gentleness and compassion toward repentent sinners should lead us to adopt these same attitudes in our life.

Are we able to act as peacemakers within our families or our group of friends? Can we say no to sexual immorality? Is it possible to reach out to the homeless, the unemployed, the aged and the sick and see a life of service as being more important than a life of profit?

"Blessed be the Lord ... He has come to set us free." Jesus wants us to be free of worry, doubts and anxiety. He assures us of God's mercy and love. An invitation is extended to place our trust in Him who is truth, life and way. The choice, of course, is ours. As I reaffirm my faith, I invite you to do the same.

Sting captivates Philly crowd

Former lead singer of famous British rock trio The Police, Sting made his debut as a solo artist Tuesday night at the Spectrum.

By KATHRYN QUIGLEY
Entertainment Editor

Sting brought his new sound to the Spectrum Wednesday, to promote his latest album, "... Nothing Like The Sun." It was a smooth and classy show.

As a member of the Police, Sting rose to international stardom. He was known as much for his icy blond looks and quick intellect as for his Jamaican-rooted music.

Sting broke away from the group in 1985 to release a jazz-based album titled, The Dream of the Blue Turtles. Notable jazz musicians, such as Branford Marsalis, played on the album and helped to make it the success it was.

Now that the idea of Sting as a jazz-pop musician (pop must be added to the word jazz, since purists would argue that Sting isn't playing "true" jazz) no longer surprises people, he can develop this sound.

Wednesday's show at the Spectrum was comprised mainly of songs from "... Nothing Like The Sun." There were enough old Police songs to appeal to those fans as well, however.

He opened the show with "The Lazarus Heart," the first track off his new album. Sting was dressed in a white satin blazer and black tuxedo pants. He and his saxophone/clarinet player, Branford Marsalis (who helped on this album, as well), who was dressed in a suit and tie, were the very picture of sophistication. This did not stop either Sting or the band from dancing around the stage throughout most of the show, though.

Next came "We'll Be Together," the most popular single from the album. That was followed by several other "... Nothing Like The Sun" songs, including "Englishman In New York," "Sister Moon," (the sequel to "Moon Over Bourbon Street" on his last album) and "Rock Steady."

"Straight To My Heart" is a love song from the new album that is in 7/4 time. Sting had the audience count to show what 7/4 time is.

"One, two, three, four, five six, seven ... see, it's a new measure after every seven beats," he explained.

Sting closed out the first half of his performance (yes, there were two parts to the concert) with a Police favorite, "One World Is Enough," in which he did a somersault across the stage.

Sting has always written songs that were of a political nature. "Driven To Tears" and "Russians" are just two examples.

On "... Nothing Like the Sun" Sting wrote a song about "The mothers of the disappeared" in Chile. The title is "They Dance Alone (Gueca Solo)." That song opened his second set.

Later on, the melodic and lilting "Fragile" was followed by the Jimi Hendrix cover, "Little Wing." This was undoubtedly the best song of the concert. Sting mixed his soaring vocals with the screaming guitar of one of his band members and the result was unbelievable.

After a jacket change, Sting asked the audience,

"So what do you want to hear?"

"ROXANNE!!!" they screamed back.

"Every night of my life I sing this blessed song," Sting yelled half jokingly. "Don't you want to hear something else?"

"NO!!!" the crowd yelled back.

"Well okay," Sting said as he strapped on his guitar and jammed into his ode to the reformation of a hooker.

He ended with yet another version of "Don't Stand So Close To Me" in which he took off his jacket and the crowd went nuts at the sight of his bare chest.

But the concert was not over yet. Sting returned to the stage with his keyboard player, Kenny, and his bass player, Tracy. He dedicated "Secret Marriage" to them "... because they are a couple."

Last, but not least, came the Police standard, "Message In A Bottle." Sting sang the chorus of the song back and forth with the audience until they thought it would never end. But it did.

South Street Souvlaki offers great Greek cuisine

By ANDREA CINELLI
Staff Reporter

Crossing campus lately has been somewhat like braving the frozen Tundra. This is all well and good for Santa Claus and Dr. Zhivago, but less than appealing for the average college student. A much more attractive venture would be to sunbathe on the beaches of Cancun ... or the South of France ... or better yet, the Greek isles. Unfortunately, neither my schedule nor my wallet allow for traipsing off to that Mediterranean haven of hedonism to capture an all-over suntan.

I recently discovered, however, that I can afford a taste (and a delicious taste at that) of Greek culture right here in Philadelphia. This weekend, my friend and I dined at South Street Souvlaki and savored some of the best Greek cuisine this side of the Delaware.

South Street Souvlaki is located at 509 South St., in the heart of Philadelphia's South Street empire which attracts eccentrics as well as those who like to observe the eccentrics.

The walls of South Street Souvlaki are decorated with pictures of people and scenery normally associated with Greece. Bright blue seas. Whitewashed houses. Gods. Goddesses. The atmosphere is crowded and noisy — people are literally crammed in the place. But then again, Greek taverns were not meant to offer spacious dining facilities. They offer great food, which is exactly what we found at South Street Souvlaki.

In order to truly capture the Greek mood, we decided that a traditional Greek drink was in order. Choosing not to paralyze our taste buds completely, we opted against the infamous Ouzo and decided on something milder, a regional Greek wine called Retsina which has a very distinctive aftertaste. I enjoyed it. My friend was a bit dubious after reading the menu, which described Retsina as an extract of pine resin. It may not be the most appealing description of an alcoholic beverage; but no one should visit a Greek restaurant without at least giving it a try.

The menu offered a wide variety of Greek specialties, ranging from gyros to stuffed squid. As an appetizer, we tried tzatziki, a yogurt and cucumber sauce served with fresh pita bread. It was light and delicious, excellent as a starter.

I ordered a combination platter as an entree, thinking this would be a great way to sample some of the most appealing dishes. It was. The platter included dolmades (vine leaves stuffed with ground beef and rice), soutzakakia (Greek meatballs), mousaka (layers of eggplant, sauteed ground beef and custard), spinach pie (spinach in a filo pastry dough), turlu (vegetables in a light tomato and wine sauce) and rice. I can honestly say that everything was tasty, and the portions were more than ample.

My friend ordered papoutzakia (eggplant stuffed with beef and lamb in a bechamel sauce) and claimed that it, too, was delicious. The Greeks can do wonderful things with an eggplant.

The dessert menu boasted of specialties such as custard with caramel and homemade yogurt with honey, but we were too full to eat anymore.

Service was excellent and our meals arrived promptly. All except one of the entrees were priced under $10, which is quite reasonable for dinner.

Overall, South Street Souvlaki offers great ethnic food at prices which college students can afford. It is an excellent restaurant for beginning or ending a night on South Street. For more information contact the restaurant at 925-3026.

Triumph rocks hard with intelligent metal

By JEFF GILLIES
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Surveillance Triumph

Triumph is back with their usual style of melodic heavy metal on their latest album, Surveillance. After 12 years and eight albums, Triumph has consistently released good albums, but never really reached the level of success of which they are certainly capable. This statement holds true of Surveillance, which is a good album, yet falls short of being great.

Triumph comes from Canada and consists of Rik Emmet (vocals, lead guitar), Gil Moore (vocals, drums) and Mike Levine (bass). In many ways, Triumph is very similar to Rush, another Canadian hard rock band. The most prominent similarity is found in comparing the lyrics on Surveillance to those on Rush albums such as Hemispheres and 2112.

Surveillance contains prologues and preludes, along with famous quotes from philosophers and writers written before the lyrics to each song. All of these devices were frequently used by Rush in their older days. Surveillance is a mixture of the acoustical ballads such as "All the Kings' Horses" and scorching metal tunes like "Rock You Down" and "Carry on the Flame." The band hopes that Surveillance will receive airplay on album-oriented rock stations unlike their last album Sport of Kings.

"Let the Light (Shine on Me)," the first single to be released from the album, has received some airplay, but not as much as it deserves. "Let the Light" is perhaps the best song on the album and is easily one of the finest songs Triumph has ever recorded.

One of the first things you will notice about Triumph upon listening to their music is the depth and meaning of the lyrics. Far from the average heavy metal rebellious, violent, and obnoxious writing style, Triumph's songs are thought-provoking, at times almost philosophical, and never underestimate the listener.

Surveillance is living proof that heavy metal can be written with style and class and still have raw power and energy.

Triumph's songs are thought-provoking, at times almost philosophical, and never underestimate the intelligence of the listener.

The slower songs also have a certain air of strength about them. "All Over Again" is a moving ballad with a trace of the forceful drumming and screaming guitar-playing that can be found on the harder songs on the album.

"Headed for Nowhere" and "Never Say Never" start off the album on a rapid pace with an impressive guitar instrumental called "Prologue: Into the Forever."

Side 2 opens up with a typical Triumph beat in "Long Time Gone." This is followed by another instrumental, "Prelude: The Waking Dream." Emmett displays his mastery of the guitar with precise and well-arranged notes. On the lyrics inside the album there is a quote by Aristotle after the song which reads, "Hope is a waking dream." This idea of hope is one of the main themes on the album. The basic message in many of the songs is hang on, keep believing, "a better tomorrow takes your best today."

The only two songs that depart from this theme are two of the harder songs, "Rock You Down" and "Running in the Night."

The band would like to tour, but feels that unless they sell a great deal of records, it would not be a wise decision. Unfortunately, Surveillance is not likely to see great commercial success, so we will most likely have to wait a while longer to see Triumph in concert.

Surveillance is basically a good album, but will not be a big success on the charts or receive much airplay. Even die-hard Triumph fans will not be overly impressed, although the album is worth listening to for both mainstream rock and heavy metal fans alike.

America invaded by the comedy of Smirnoff

By JIM CROSSAN
Staff Reporter

When most people hear the word Smirnoff they associate it with vodka, some more than others. I have made the often harmful acquaintance myself, but let me introduce another Smirnoff; Yakov Smirnoff (and this one has no after effects). As the name implies, he was born in Russia and with a name like Yakov, he had to be a comedian.

In a country where comedy clubs are as common as exciting American Super Bowls, he became obsessed with the idea of living in the United States. Well, he made the long awaited journey to the states in 1977, and on July 4, 1986 he became a citizen at the base of the Statue of Liberty, but his graduation into the red, white and blue was immediately marred by misfortune.

In the excitement, he missed the last ferry and was forced to remain on the island with the security. As he says in his first book, America on Six Rubles A Day or How To Become A Capitalist Pig, "... just a few years ago, I was living in Russia in a crowded, cold apartment, always being watched by the KGB. But now I was in America, sleeping outside, surrounded by 40 FBI agents. What a country!" "What a country" has become the catch-phrase for this once comrade turned Johnny Carson guest.

All of Yakov's quick and witty humor stems from his experiences concerning the transition to his new culture. The cover features Yakov with a Russian Express card which mockingly states "Don't leave home!" "Nice Things About Russia" is the heading for a chapter consisting of three blank pages.

"... I was living in Russia in a crowded, cold apartment, always being watched by the KGB. But now I was in America, sleeping outside surrounded by 40 FBI agents. What a country!"

In his ignorance of American ways Yakov, in pictures accompanying the beginning of each chapter, displays a comical view to his literal understanding of all that is said. In one photo, he wears a Statue of Liberty cap and a USA sweatshirt and looks quite foreign. He is holding a long hot dog and the epigraph states, "Yuck! In Russia, we don't eat this part of the dog." With each photo and chapter heading, possibly superfluously, an italicized phrase is placed which coheres, except for a word or two, to the title of an American song. (ie. Sworn In The USA)

His parents, who must have a sense of humor to name their child Yakov, also acquiesced to the lifestyle of America. This book is admirably dedicated to them.

America On Six Rubles A Day or How to Become A Capitalist Pig is a funny book, but I warn readers that Yakov's humor is attached to the abasement of the Soviet Union and the difficulty in understanding the meaning behind American phrases, like "... the best singles bars are meat markets" which we find him dressed like Don Johnson, with an arm full of flowers standing between two tall shelves of beef.

With the successful visit of Mikhail Gorbachov it becomes strangely reassuring to see someone drawing a picture of a Russia we are pressed to formulate through movies, while we sit eating apple pie on the hood of a Chevrolet.

Smirnoff, a comedian who is not afraid to laugh at himself, has become very popular over the past few years and will most likely continue to do so in the future.

DRAGON'S LAIR ½ ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128, AP

Finally, after a long wait from arcade aficionados everywhere, Dragon's Lair has made its way to home computers. The home version contains all of the sequences of the original arcade version that was the first to use video disc technology. Some of the sequences have had the graphics changed a little, but all are intact in purpose, although different in movement requirements.

Dragon's Lair is one of the Amazing Software series from Electronic Arts and splits the original adventure's sequences into two parts. This is the only deviance from the original game's goal of saving Princess Daphne from a giant dragon. In both adventures, you take on the role of Dirk the Daring and must move the joystick at precise times to continue the sequence and finish the game. As you learn the moves and when to make them, the game becomes simpler, but still fun to play. In any case, Dragon's Lair has beautiful graphics and many interesting screens.

RAD WARRIOR * EPYX C64/128, AP, IBM

Rad Warrior is one in Epyx's Maxx Out! series of games, priced lower than others and geared toward the arcade enthusiast. In this member of the series, you take the role of Tal, a warrior in the future, whose goal is to destroy alien oppressors. Rad Warrior is an arcade game, with some minor goals that must be met before finally reaching the climax of the game — annihilating the aliens' nuclear power source.

First, you must find an anti-radiation suit and gravity boots in the evil mutated forest. Then, travel through the ancient city ruins. All the while, you must search for more weapons. A map is included with the game that shows the layout of the entire game, as well as where you can find what you need. The rest is up to you, relying heavily on your coordination with a joystick.

GAUNTLET  MINDSCAPE C64/128, AT, ST

Most home computer versions of arcade games pale in comparison to the real thing, except on high-memory machines. Gauntlet is the first that captures the thrill, speed and graphics of the arcade game in all versions. The player chooses to be one of four characters: Thor the warrior, Merlin the wizard, Thyra the valkyrie or Questor the elf. Each has different strengths and skills that the player must use in traveling through dungeons while avoiding one of six different types of

The graphics show an overhead view of the dungeon and usually more than one character play at a time to mutually support each other in their attempt to make it to lower levels. Gauntlet is a difficult game, but practice allows one to reach lower levels. Dealing with potions, food, transporters, keys and treasures makes the game more interesting. Expect non-stop action and planned strategy.

PAPERCLIP III * BATTERIES INCLUDED C64/128

Paperclip III is the most interesting word processor for the Commodore 8-bit computers, including a lot of nice features that make it worthwhile. This word processor, that includes separate disks for Commodore 64 and 128, combines easy-to-use commands with powerful formatting options. Writing is effortless with Paperclip III.

The manual is excellent, offering a tutorial for the uninitiated. All commands, menus and options are in the appendix, making for instant access to information. Paperclip III is completely compatible with some word processors and supports many printers as well. The most interesting feature of the program is the ability to use your modem in the telecommunications option to transmit or receive text into the word processor environment.

The screen uses colorful menus to communicate with the user. Most options are accessed via function keys. Mail merging and customization of characters on-screen is also possible. Paperclip III's diversity translates to excellence.

TEST DRIVE ½ ACCOLADE C64/128, AMIGA, ST. IBM

Test Drive may just be the best driving game ever. Not only does it allow you to choose one of the world's five fastest cars, but it also gives you the most realism for your money. You can drive one of the following: Ferrari Testarossa, Lotus Turbo Esprit, Porsche 911 Turbo, Lamborghini Countach or Corvette. They all have "spec charts" that appear on the screen when the player selects them.

The graphics for Test Drive are very good, duplicating well what you would expect to see on the road. You have a radar detector in your car and the object of the game is to finish the course as quickly as possible without getting pulled over by a state cop. "Sunday Drivers" potholes, water and oil slicks and other hazards make completing the course more of a challenge. Ultimately, one will be amazed with the smoothness of the cars' response.

AIRBORNE RANGER  MICROPROSE C64/1288, IBM, ST

This simulation is the closest that MicroProse will ever come to an arcade game. The player chooses one of 12 missions (in three different parts of the world/terrains) that include rescue, search and destroy and reconnaissance. After dropping weapons and supplies from a plane into enemy territory, a single soldier moves through the same area, completing the primary mission goal and signal for a pick up.

The incredible detail put into Airborne Ranger is what gives the game its excellence and replayability. The missions are not simple and supplies are limited. The player can possibly use a rifle, knife, time bombs, rockets and grenades in the game, but finding out when to use them is where strategy enters the simulation.

Included with the game is a keyboard placard that makes playing Airborne Rangers so much simpler. This simulation is what every person who played "army" as a kid has been waiting for.

The Kinks explode with energy in new live album

By JEFF GILLIES
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Live: The Road
The Kinks
MCA Records

Since the release of their last live album, One For The Road in 1980, The Kinks have been touring almost continuously. After four studio albums and four major tours since 1980, it seems logical that their latest album is a live compilation. It is also no surprise that the album is titled Live: The Road.

The album covers material from their last four albums: Think Visual, Word of Mouth, State of Confusion and Give the People What They Want. Also included on the album are two new songs and the classic hit, "Apeman."

The song selection on the album is quite surprising. There are no songs on Live: The Road that are on One For The Road, an album containing mostly their greatest hits. Obviously, the Kinks wanted to present a collection of their most recent material, but they could have chosen better songs in doing so.

Both "Cliches of the World" and "Art Lover" could have been left out in favor of more popular songs. The absence of "Missing Persons," a song which the band does an incredible live version of, and "State of Confusion" was somewhat startling.

However, the songs that are on the album are played with a certain enthusiasm and spirit that has become a trademark of the Kinks over the years. Anyone who has seen the Kinks in concert will surely attest that there are few bands that have been around half as long as the Kinks that play with anywhere near the animation and zeal seen in a Kinks concert.

The earth-shattering noise level and pure excitement in the air that emerges when singer/guitarist Ray Davies strikes the opening chords of "Lola" is something every music fan simply must witness.

This type of spirited vivacity is captured on vinyl in Live: The Road. In the opening track, "The Road," the Kinks take a look at themselves from a 1964 bar band to a sell-out headlining act in 1988. "The Road" is one of the new songs on the album and talks about all the band members, friends, lovers and wives the Kinks have seen come and go over the past 24 years.

Longtime Kinks fans will notice how Davies slips old song titles into the lyrics, referring to himself as a "Dedicated Follower of Fashion" and a "Well Respected Man." The song also bears a strong resemblance to 1977's "Life on the Road" from the Sleepwalker album.

The songs on the album are played with a certain enthusiasm and spirit that has become a trademark of The Kinks over the years.

Today, the Kinks are left with only two original band members: Davies and brother Dave who plays lead guitar. The rest of the band consists of Jim Rodford on bass, Bob Henrit on drums and Ian Gibbons on keyboards.

Guitarist Dave Davies rips into a powerful rendition of "Destroyer," a song that is always well received by fans at Kinks concerts.

The next song is "Apeman," which is a pleasant surprise to see on the album. Recently, the band began to include the song in their live sets after it sat on the vast shelf of songs in the Kinks' repertoire. The song sounds better than ever and is one of the best performances on the album.

An upbeat version of "Come Dancing" follows "Apeman." This has been the band's biggest hit of the '80s and is well-performed on Live: The Road.

The only ballad on the album, "Art Lover" is not overly impressive, but nonetheless still a good song. Ray Davies showcases his talents as a singer and Ian Gibbons shines on the keyboards.

Another of the album's highlights is "Living on a Thin Line." Dave Davies takes over the lead vocals and gives an impressive exhibition of his talents. "It" is one of the slower songs and the vocals are crystal clear with Dave Davies' trademark distorted playing heard in the background.

The second new song on Live: The Road deals with the dangers of advertising as a means of brainwashing through the example of "It," an imaginary product. "It" is a song Ray Davies has been working on for a long time now and is likely to appear on a studio album in the near future. The song brings back memories of the band's experimental phase of concept albums in the 1970s. The song is highly theatrical and uses a great deal of special effects.

The Kinks run through "Lost and Found" and "Give the People what they want" and a somewhat disappointing version of "Around the Dial." In concert, "Around the Dial" is usually more vivacious and unpolished, much in the style of "You Really Got Me," which brought the Kinks worldwide attention in 1964.

All in all, Live: The Road provides Kinks fans with an excellent collection of some of the band's best and latest material. The album succeeds in capturing the spirit and animation of one of the most respected and influential bands in the world of music today.

Megadeth destined for success with new album

By RUSS CECCOLA
Senior Reporter

Megadeth has long been respected as the world's greatest speed metal band, with their last album, Peace Sells . . . But Who's Buying? establishing them in the minds of metalheads everywhere. That album was released well over a year ago and a new LP has been anxiously awaited. Coupled with special promotions in small clubs throughout the country and a tour with Dio, Megadeth's so far, so good . . . so what! is destined to be highly successful.

This collection of new material contains only eight songs, one of which is an instrumental number, but the degree of perfection and technicality is high. The large number of riffs and lyrics that jump down your throat set so far, so good . . . so what! apart from other Megadeth material and characterize the genius of lead singer, lead and rhythm guitarist and songwriter Dave Mustaine. A pioneer of the speed/thrash metal craze of the past five years, Mustaine put together all of his talents on the new record.

Also in Megadeth are: David Ellefson, bass; Jeff Young, lead and rhythm guitars; and Chuck Behler, drums. Behler and Young are new members of the band, joining after the ousting of Chris Poland and Gar Samuelson. Although their skills are used well on the album, the new guys still prevented Megadeth from being as tight a band on stage as they have in the past on the Dio tour.

To say that so far, so good . . . so what! is as good as Peace Sells or Killing is My Business . . . and Business is Good, the first Megadeth album, would be premature. After listening to the album only twice, the songs still had not registered in my head. The songs grow on you and after hearing them six or seven times, they have implanted themselves in my memory, right along such Megadeth classics as "Peace Sells," "Wake Up Dead" and "Mechanix." Opening with the short, but not sweet, "Into the Lungs of Hell" instrumental, so far, so good . . . so what! diversifies greatly from song to song.

"Into the Lungs of Hell" is a good opener for the record, but it pales in comparison to the others and lacks in the absence of Mustaine's distinctive growls and whining voice. "Set the World Afire" paints an abrupt, terrifying picture of a post-nuclear war world, with intelligent, truthful lyrics emphasizing the uselessness of a nuclear war. This song inspired the album's cover, with Megadeth mascot "Vic" Rattlehead armed for battle.

Opening with the short, but not sweet, 'into the Lungs of Hell' instrumental, so far, so good . . . so what! diversifies greatly from song to song.

The most welcome addition to so far, so good . . . so what! is the cover version of the Sex Pistols' "Anarchy in the U.K." Making a guest appearance on the song is original Pistols member Steve Jones. Always a crowd pleaser for the greatest punk band ever, Megadeth's cover version packs the same power as the original and ends my wait for some band to eventually revive the song from the dead.

"Mary Jane," the closing number of Side 1 that tells the story of a witch's passing to another existence, and "In My Darkest Hour" on Side 2 are in the same vein in that they combine strange melodic openings with fast riffs. "In My Darkest Hour" is the better of the two and was written by Mustaine as soon as he had heard of the death of Metallica's bassist, Cliff Burton. The song captures Megadeth in a thoughtful moment and once again the music is intense and highly original.

"502" and "Liar" continue the Megadeth tradition of all-out thrashers, alongside "Devil's Island" and "These Boots." "502" details the exploits of a law-breaker, speeding along the interstate and challenging the law number of the title. The lyrics to "Liar" show a strong dislike against lawbreakers; the speeding guitars and complementing bass and drums should keep the headbangers happy.

Ironically, the best was saved for last in the form of "Hook in Mouth," mirroring the same maneuver with "My Last Words" on Peace Sells. "Hook in Mouth" is an anti-P.M.R.C. (Parents' Music Resource Center) song, expressing Mustaine's and Megadeth's strong dislike for the group led by Tipper Gore, wife of the presidential candidate Al Gore. The chorus says it all and is what makes the song so memorable. Spelling out freedom as in that popular tune that spells out mother ("F, is for fighting, R, is for red," etc.), the chorus ends with the lines "This spells out freedom, it means nothing to me/ As long as there's a P.M.R.C."

Only after repeated listenings will you learn to love so far, so good . . . so what! and the efforts of Megadeth. The album was the most awaited release of this year, with only Scorpions surpassing this anticipation. Megadeth did not sell out, did not slow down and did not give in to any pressures put on them by record companies or administrative people. The record is pure, unadulterated Megadeth at full throttle and it earns its place alongside the band's past work.

Interview proves Picture This is picture perfect

By DIANE DRAGONETTE
Staff Reporter

If irresistable talent and charm are what it takes to make it, then Philadelphia's Picture This is cruising on the road to success. Playing all the local hot spots, Picture This is establishing a strong base in the Philadelphia music scene. A recent interview at the Ambler Cabaret proved these guys to be not only talented, but down to earth as well.

Picture This is a three-piece band consisting of Joe Mass (lead vocals, guitar), Tony Silver (bass) and Mike Zanghi (drums). The band's first gig was in September 1985 at Grendel's Lair on South Street, which has since become The Gap. Although Picture This plays primarily at clubs, they would love to reach the colleges. Mass explained, "We're a youth-oriented band, and the colleges are where it's at."

When describing their music, Zanghi commented, "We used to be more into New Wave, but now we're straight-ahead rock-n-roll. When we play the blues, it surprises people because they see us with sequencers." Mass continued, "Mike and I come from a jazz background, but I also like a lot of heavy metal." The band's diverse background has enabled them to create an unique brand of rock-n-roll.

Picture This is definitely a band to see live. Mass said, "Those 45 minutes to an hour on stage are the only thing we do it for. We get up there and forget all the hassles and the business." Zanghi added, "I just got out and jammed with my friends, and it eventually led to playing all the clubs. It's a lot of fun, but I never really planned it."

Picture This feels that Philadelphia's music scene is bursting with talent, but it needs support to survive. Mass stressed, "Everybody out there who likes a local band should go out and support it because that is the only way that the music can continue."

Picture This feels confident about their sound, and it is just a matter of time until they receive the necessary exposure. Unfortunately as Silver noted, "It's good to have talent, but that's not enough in a business that is run on money and connections."

Picture This feels that the Philadelphia music scene is bursting with talent.

While discussing memorable gigs, Picture This described Eagleville Hospital, a drug rehabilitation hospital, as their most memorable gig. Mass said, "It felt good to give something to people who were trying to get it back together. At the end of the show, people reacted like, 'I can still have a good time when I'm straight.' " Zanghi agreed, "I loved it because the people were so into it."

Picture This plans to go into the studio next week and bang out some new material to put on tape. The band is working towards their goals one move at a time, and they eventually plan to add a few more musicians to round out Picture This.

Another exciting venture that the band has in the works is showcasing for Arthur Mann. Mass explained, "Arthur is directly responsible for Bon Jovi's band. I worked with Arthur in 1982 when he was helping Jon Bon Jovi, and the three of us wrote and collaborated for a couple days. That led to a demo tape here w Lance Quinn who produced J first two albums. We're s growing, but we know what want musically."

For any young college ba Silver advised, "Pack it in, your degree, and get a real Seriously though, you have to a good producer who can help put together a professional sou ing tape to send out." Mass Zanghi also believe that record is crucial. Mass concluded, "W you get something on tape, can begin to establish a little of notoriety. Then you get out play."

Right now Picture This is forming in the area and constan working on material. The ba originality indicates a promis future.

Picture This will be perform at Glassboro University, Sa day, Feb. 6.

David Lee Roth disappoints with Skyscraper

By JOE DeFULVIO
Staff Reporter

Skyscraper
David Lee Roth
Warner Brothers Records

Back in 1977 when Van Halen first appeared on the musical horizon there was quite simply not too much going on in the hard rock world. Van Halen I changed all that. The album veritably exploded with energy and talent and established the band as rulers of the heavy rock scene for the next eight years.

It was during this time that the world was first exposed to David Lee Roth. As much as Eddie Van Halen was the musical leader of the band, Van Halen was also the kingdom of Roth. Roth created a frontman persona that included every cliched stance imaginable as the obnoxious, womanizing, party animal; the ultimate rock and roller.

Despite or maybe because the band was able to remain on top with killer albums and massive tours, it all came to an end when Roth exited for a solo career. This move was widely questioned at the time and generally viewed to be a mistake which would catch up with Roth in the long run. As we shall see, this proved to be true.

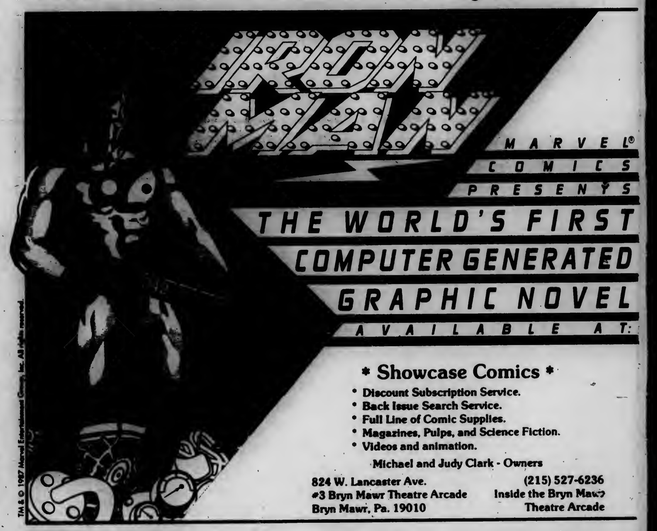
Discounting the Crazy From the Heat EP as an entertaining joke, Roth's first solo LP was Eat 'em and Smile. This album featured an all star backing band including guitarist Steve Vai and bassist Billy Sheehan, and overall, was not that bad an album. "Tobacco Road," "Shy Boy" and "Elephant Gun," along with a couple of other tunes rocked hard enough with enough humor to provide a quick fix for former Van Halen fans.

The problem, though, was the exhibition of an ego which, though previously large, had apparently reached new levels of boundlessness. However entertaining the music might be, the clownish antics found a way to obscure those occasional bright moments.

Overall, Skyscraper is a disappointing effort from someone capable of a lot more.

The Van Halen records managed to fit Roth into the mix as commentator more so than actual singer, and his over the top attitude fit the music perfectly. In fact, Van Halen was the perfect rock band. A blazing, innovative, guitar virtuoso backed by an exceptional rhythm section fronted by a born eccentric equals the ultimate party rock band.

Roth's new LP, Skyscraper, unfortunately, is not up to the slight standard established by Eat 'em and Smile. There are a lot of problems with this album but a couple are so vivid that they warrant comment. Skyscraper's production is credited to Roth with an assistant byline given to Vai. Immediately noticeable is the less than stellar sound of the album which is quite a departure from the sonic wallop that Ted Templeman had given Roth's previous solo stuff as well as the Van Halen LP's.



Another unfortunate characteristic that Roth has developed is his penchant for placing an increased emphasis on his rather limited vocal abilities at the expense of the songs. The single, "Just Like Paradise," is currently the number one Album Oriented Rock radio tract and is a good example of this trend.

As far as the rest of the album goes there are a few bright moments. "The Bottom Line" pushes along and Vai shines as usual. "Damn Good" offers a good nostalgic feel for the old days and is the best cut on the album.

"Stand Up" and "Perfect Timing" showcase Vai again but the songs never really take off. This seeming lack of energy pervades the whole album and is a rather disturbing tendency. Billy Sh han's bass plays a supporting and he is held in check through the record. This prompted him leave the band shortly after completion of recording.

Overall, Skyscraper is a di pointing effort in his mus decline. Hopefully he will be to get back on track soon.

Also, this album will proba sell two million copies anyw proving the old adage of form c content. " . . . and I don't w to go home."

Rooney spunks on not-so-common sense

By ALLEN AMBROSINO
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Word For Word
Andy Rooney
G.P. Putnam's Sons

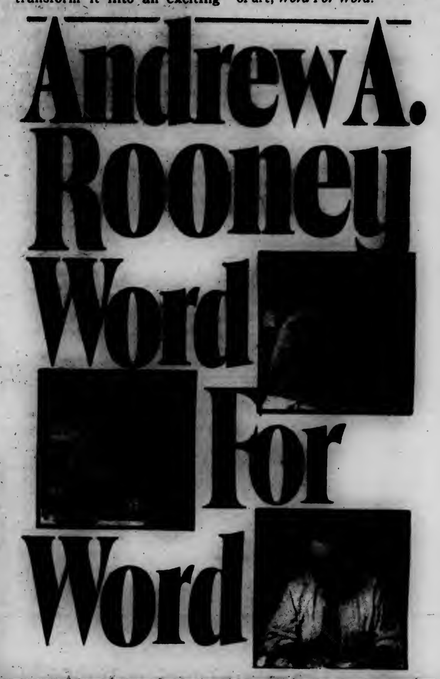
Andy Rooney is best known for the humorous five minute spots he has on the popular television show "60 Minutes." Because of his off-beat sense of humor and rising popularity, Rooney decided to give America another present by writing Word For Word. Rooney has the unique ability to address everyday occurrences, find the humor in them and make it crystal clear to the reader. In the introduction, Charles Osgood sums up Rooney's brilliance when he said, "There is nothing common about common sense."

One of his funniest ideas came when Rooney was debating about daylight savings time. In Rooney's opinion, it is just a simple case of the night people stealing an hour from the morning people. He feels that he is a morning person and daylight savings time should be abolished forever.

The best parts of the book were when Rooney wrote about things that everyone in the world can relate to such as the fear of going to the dentist and the frustrating time that everyone has spent at the garage trying to get their car repaired. His wry humor makes a simple trip to the doctor an unforgettable experience.

One of his novel ideas to eliminate the national debt was to sell one of our 50 states to another country for cash. Because of this, Disney World polled over 2,500 people and asked them, "If you had to sell one of the 50 states to pay off the national debt, which state would you sell?" The three least popular states were New York, California and, of course, New Jersey. Rooney refused to vote because he did not want to go out of his way to make enemies.



If Rooney had it his way, the winner would get all of the money and the loser would be given just enough for the carfare home.

In the world of sports, Rooney presented a few simple suggestions in order to improve the way they are played. For example, he felt that the loser in a tennis match makes too much money. In some tournaments, they make up to $50,000 and Rooney thought that money like that makes losing too popular. If Rooney had it his way, the winner would get all of the money and the loser would be given just enough for the carfare home.

He also wanted football to be played the way it was in the old days when athletes played both offense and defense. If they expect to be paid the full amount of their contract, Rooney would make sure they worked full-time. One day, Rooney insists, the American sports fans will unite, form a union and get their demands or go on strike like everyone else.

Just when you begin to think that Rooney only writes about comical events, he takes on a serious topic such as the poor people all over the United States. Because he works in New York City, he is approached by every type of beggar imaginable. Rooney's policy is to never give money to them although he is filled with mixed emotions regarding the poor. He does not feel like the money would make any real difference in their lives, but he is uncertain and this feeling upsets him from time to time.

Rooney's literary talents are impeccable as he has once again written a thinking man's book. He is the only writer in America who can take an average Sunday and transform it into an exciting occurrence. Word For Word is a unique book that you could read several times without getting tired of Rooney's endless commentaries. It does not matter what you are interested in: Rooney will delight you with his latest work of art, Word For Word.

Sherlock Holmes returns in latest mystery

By ROBERT DUGGAN
Staff Reporter

The Revenge of the Hound
by Michael Hardwick
Villaid Books

The game is afoot once more for the legendary pair of 221 B Baker Street in Michael Hardwick's latest Sherlock Holmes novel, The Revenge of the Hound.

Since Sir Arthur Conan Doyle first created the great detective and his faithful partner, Dr. Watson, in November 1887, the ranks of Sherlockians have grown steadily and remain as strong now as when Conan Doyle first captured the imagination of Victorian England.

Hardwick is one of the world's foremost Sherlockian authors, a writer who tries to capture the flavor of the original mysteries in new adventures of his own. His novel, Prisoner of the Devil, is considered to be the finest of the post-Conan Doyle mysteries.

The Revenge of the Hound is set in England during the summer of 1902, only months after the publication of The Hound of the Baskervilles. With the recent death of Queen Victoria and, consequently, the Victorian Age, England feels itself thrust into the 20th century. Talk of revolution fills the air as Edward VII plans to rise to the throne.

Likewise, the long friendship of Holmes and Watson is feeling the strain of time. Watson has found true love and jeopardizes their partnership with his approaching marriage. Seeing this change in his personal affairs and in the rapidly changing world around him, Holmes ponders retirement. With the recent acceptance of his scientific methods by Scotland Yard and other police forces, Holmes feels his previously unique services are no longer needed.

The sighting of an enormous hound's footprints on Hampstead Heath, however, pushes all personal matters aside. Mass hysteria ensues as the public fears that the Hound of the Baskervilles has returned.

As this mystery unfolds, Holmes and Watson are beset by a series of puzzles. The bones of Oliver Cromwell are found and then mysteriously disappear. Edward himself asks Holmes to retrieve a letter that could place his reign in peril. A Chinese stewart on a ferry boat is murdered with no apparent motive. Hardwick sets the board wonderfully with these pieces and keeps the reader guessing to the end with his brilliant moves.

With tremendous political, social and historical detail, Hardwick captures the period masterfully. He reproduces Conan Doyle's tight, meticulously detailed style so well that they are barely distinguishable from one another. Hardwick even includes some archaic Victorian vocabulary, a feature which makes having a good dictionary at hand advisable.

Hardwick is one of the world's foremost Sherlockian authors, a writer who tries to capture the flavor of the original mysteries in new adventures of his own.

The only noticeable differences in The Revenge of the Hound from the Conan Doyle mysteries is in the portrayal of the sleuths. Where Conan Doyle portrayed Watson as slightly inferior to Holmes, Hardwick makes his Watson stronger and a more able partner for Holmes. Hardwick's Holmes shows more of the brooding, eccentric side of the character and humanizes him. This Holmes has doubts and fears that Conan Doyle never expounded upon but would probably have agreed with.

Special note must be made of the several illustrations in the book by Steranko. Steranko's greying, lean Holmes drawn among the clutter of his study, wonderfully continues the tradition of Holmes illustrators begun by Sidney Paget. He illustrated the original tales when they first appeared in The Strand Magazine and is responsible for the image of Holmes that has become associated with the character.

Anyone who has ever read a Sherlock Holmes tale will enjoy The Revenge of the Hound. All the familiar things are there, the fantastic disguises, the legendary pipe, the bumbling Lestrade, along with a freshness Hardwick brings to the characters that adds up to an enjoyable whole. For anyone who has never read a tale of the great detective, The Revenge of the Hound is a fine way to introduce oneself to one of the finest characters of world literature.

On the scene . . . Entertainment tidbits

By STEPHEN POWERS
Staff Reporter

When a movie does well at the box office, it is almost guaranteed that a sequel will be made. When a television series is a hit, its network and producers will undoubtedly want to capitalize on the success by developing spinoffs. Successful television shows also inspire other "copycat" programs. Sequels, spinoffs and similar programs are all making entertainment news this week.

Sequels to hit movies almost always make money, since they attract fans of the original. Just look at "Rocky," "Friday the 13th" and "Police Academy" — all had at least three sequels. Last year's sequels included the highest grossing film of the year, "Beverly Hills Cop II." This coming year, we will be seeing just as many, if not more, sequels than last year.

The sequel list is long. Bobcat Goldthwait stars in "Police Academy V" (minus Steve Guttenberg), Robot No. 5 returns in "Short Circuit II" (once again without Guttenberg), Roddy McDowall fights evil forces once again in "Fright Night II" and the man of your dreams, Freddy Krueger, is back at work in "Nightmare on Elm Street, Part 4."

Although Steven Spielberg will not be releasing any sequels this year, he will be busy making some. He will reteam with George Lucas and Harrison Ford for a second sequel to "Raiders of the Lost Ark." Unlike the "prequel," "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom," the as-of-yet untitled film will take place after "Raiders." Spielberg is hoping to sign former James Bond, Sean Connery to play Indy's father, but there is no word yet on whether Karen Allen will reprise her role as Indy's girlfriend, Marian.

Meanwhile, Spielberg has signed Michael J. Fox and Christopher Lloyd to return to their roles from the 1985 blockbuster "Back to the Future" in a new film. Also in the works is a sequel to 1984's "Gremlins."

Just as the box office is flooded with sequels, television is becoming flooded with spinoffs. The ABC sitcom "Growing Pains," which is firmly seated in the Nielson top 10, will air a two-part episode this spring that is also a spinoff for comedian Bill Kirchenbauer.

The new series, entitled "Just the 10 of Us," focuses on Carol and Mike Seaver's teacher, Coach Lubbock (Kirchenbauer), who is fired from his job and moves west with his pregnant wife, seven kids and mother-in-law in tow. Four episodes of the series have already been taped.

The 200th, and probably final, episode of NBC's "The Facts of Life" is also a pilot for a potential spinoff starring Lisa Whelchel (Blair). The new series would focus on law school student Blair, who also works as a law clerk for a prestigious law firm. If NBC picks up the show, it would be the first spinoff from the nine-year old "Facts."

While the success of "Star Trek: The Next Generation" has not led to any spinoffs, it has led to the rebirth of the science-fiction series. As the result of "Star Trek's" high ratings, Paramount TV is planning another first-run syndicated series, "War of the Worlds," which will be based on the Oscar-winning 1953 film. "Worlds" premieres this fall.

On the same note, NBC is currently filming "Invader," a four-hour mini-series and potential pilot, starring Maryam D'Abo ("The Living Daylights"). D'Abo plays a good alien who helps a human track down a bad alien. "V," which was a hit mini-series but a failure as a series, was launched the same way by NBC four years ago.

SHORT TAKES: The California Raisins' first album of oldies has gone gold (500,000 copies sold) and is at No. 60 on the Billboard chart this week. The Raisins, who were launched by a popular TV commercial, will soon record a followup LP . . .

Jason Bateman ("Valerie's Family") just finished shooting "Moving Target," which will air later this season on NBC. Bateman plays a young musician who returns home from camp to find that his family has disappeared without a trace. Jack Wagner, of "General Hospital" fame, co-stars . . .

And in a related matter, Bateman's former "Valerie" co-star, Valerie Harper, will have her day in court on June 5 over her firing from the NBC sitcom. Harper says that she was unjustly fired; producer Lorimar claims in a countersuit that Harper breached her contract during a salary holdout. "Valerie's Family" is not suffering in spite of the legal mess — its ratings have actually gone up since Harper's departure. However, regardless of the trial's outcome, the show must drop "Valerie" from its title, and will most likely be renamed "The Hogans" this fall.

Author follows controversial coach Bobby Knight

By ALLEN AMBROSINO
Assistant Entertainment Editor

College basketball in the NCAA is more than just a sport; for some people, it is a constant life or death struggle. Indiana Hoosiers coach Bobby Knight is one of the people who puts his entire being into every game. A Season on the Brink portrays Knight and his controversial coaching style throughout the 1985-86 season. John Feinstein, a writer for the Washington Post, was permitted to follow the team for an entire season. He was able to watch every practice, attend every meeting and learn what goes on behind the scenes. Feinstein's evaluation of Knight and his coaching style was eye-opening and very entertaining.

Because of his past success, Knight's name has become synonymous with Indiana basketball. Actually, his winning basketball teams have elevated him to legendary status. He has made many friends and enemies over the years, but everyone Knight comes in contact with has respect for his coaching abilities.

One would think that everything would be great for the Hoosiers with their winning records, but Knight's personality and competitiveness cause everyone on his team to be nervous about their status at all times.

For example, point guard Steve Alford was ejected from several practices and constantly showered with obscenities about his defense and lack of leadership ability. This is the same Alford who was arguably the best shooter in the country during his senior year and the captain of the 1987 NCAA Champion Indiana Hoosiers.

After reading only a few chapters of A Season on the Brink, one can see that Knight is a very complex person who plays continuous mind games with his players to push them to their maximum potential. He is not the type to take a long time savoring his victories; on the contrary, Knight never stops working with his players.

Because the 1985-86 basketball season was a disappointment (21-8; a loss in the first round of the NCAA playoffs), Knight's profane, sarcastic side of his personality was evident throughout the book. Sometimes he would curse at a particular player and kick him out of practice for no apparent reason. Knight did this in order to make the player want to compete so badly that he would do anything asked of him.

When everyone on the team was playing sloppy basketball, he would leave the court and refuse to coach them. Members of the team would be forced to beg him to coach and he would make it as difficult as possible for them. These mind games were a large part of Knight's grand design to make his team a winner. The majority of the time they worked to perfection.

Even people who do not follow college basketball probably heard Knight's name connected with the Purdue game played on Feb. 23, 1985. He became upset at a referee's call and threw his chair across the court. Because this incident was publicized by practically every news station in America, Knight is known to many as "the crazy coach who threw the chair."

Knight's temper was, and still is, his biggest enemy, but Feinstein shows his gentler side as well. Loyalty is very important to Knight as he would do anything asked of him for his friends. When one of his players was paralyzed in a freak car accident, Knight paid his hospital bills, gave him a full scholarship and made him the captain of the basketball team for the year.

He had the respect of all of his players even though he constantly berated them and made them feel inferior. They knew that everything he did would make them better players in the long run. During the season, the team did improve, but they finished the year with a whimper.

A Season on the Brink is an excellent account of Knight, the most colorful college basketball coach in America, and his Indiana Hoosiers. It shows all of the little things that must be done in order to produce a winning team. Knight's approach to winning might not be correct to some, but in his opinion, "the end always justifies the means."

'Cats dump Panthers, succumb to Orange

By JIM BOWMAN
Assistant Sports Editor

After trouncing Pittsburgh and running their unbeaten streak to five games, the Villanova women's basketball team had their bubble burst, as they dropped a 65-51 decision to front-running Syracuse on the road Jan. 30.

The loss dropped the Cats record to 14-5 overall, 6-3 in the Big East. Senior forward Lisa Angelotti led Villanova with a 20-point nine-rebound effort.

The Orange, who Villanova defeated in early January 57-55, controlled every aspect of the game, especially the boards, where they grabbed 50 rebounds to 'Nova's 35.

"We're not a consistent team. We're fortunate to be where we are right now," commented coach Harry Perreta.

"You can't substitute for talent, though. Syracuse has a much more talented team than we do, and we have to play a perfect game to beat them," he added.

Jan. 28, however, in a Big East conference game here at duPont Pavilion, Villanova played like a finely tuned machine, mowing down Pitt, 74-61.

From the opening tip, the Cats called junior center Carole Oaten's number and she responded with a 20-point 10-rebound masterpiece.

"They didn't have the size inside and my teammates saw that and did a good job of getting the ball inside to me," remarked Oaten. "I have to get off to a good start to have a game like that and I did."

Point guard Helen Koskinen continued her string of fine performances with 18 points, eight rebounds and five assists against the Panthers. Forward Teresa Pasik also added 15 points.

With seven games remaining, Villanova will have to accumulate at least five more victories to register a 20-win season and to merit NCAA at-large consideration.

Coach Perreta explains, "To win the Big East regular season title we can only afford one more conference loss. If we lose two or three, we could still have a shot at an at-large bid. If we can win 20 games, we must be considered as a possible tournament team. In that respect, every game is important."

Pawprints ...

Senior Kristin Banfield was honored by the Big Five last week as Villanova's unsung hero ... Lisa Angelotti has been Big Five Player of the Week three times this season ... Helen Koskinen's 81.8 free throw percentage is sixth in the NCAA rankings.

Swimmers drop two in a row

By AMY SPENCER
Staff Reporter

The Wildcats experienced a rough week in the pool as the men's swimming and diving team ended their undefeated season and lost to the teams of Army and Penn State.

The Cats tried their hardest to keep their perfect record intact, but they fell 129.5 to 89.5 Jan. 23 at the duPont Swimming Center to Army.

Junior swimming sensation Chris Craft led the Cats as usual with three first-place finishes.

Sophomore Lou Dearstyne and senior Dave Echeverria also helped the Wildcat cause by each netting a pair of victories. Dearstyne conquered the Army team in the 100-yard freestyle (46.36) and the 200-yard freestyle (1:44.00), while Echeverria dominated the diving scene, taking both the one-meter (308.4) and three-meter (322.725) events with season high scores for six dives.

Freshman Steve Petrie broke the John E. duPont Swimming Center record in the 200-yard backstroke with a time of 1:54.37.

A disappointed Wildcat team lost again at home Jan. 25 to a powerful Nittany Lion team 139-76. Craft again achieved three wins for the Cats. He combined with Dearstyne, Petrie and junior Tim Truax to win the opening event of the meet, the 400-yard medley relay with a clocking of 3:29.99.

Craft then went on to capture victory in the 200-yard butterfly (1:51.23) and the 200-yard individual medley with a new pool record of 1:54.78.

STUDY ABROAD

an international education column

Q. Why should I study abroad?

A. There are at least three good reasons to make study abroad a part of your college education. You can learn a foreign language at the source, gain a global perspective about how other people work and live and enhance your career opportunities.

Q. How will studying abroad help my future career plans?

A. Most counselors and career placement personnel agree that a study abroad experience helps you "sell" yourself to a future employer. Study abroad demonstrates maturity, interpersonal skills, willingness to try something new, independence and other qualities strongly considered by potential employers.

Q. Will I be able to transfer my credit earned overseas to a U.S. college?

A. In many cases, yes. But to be sure, check with your dean of students or study abroad advisor before enrolling in any program.

Q. What kind of study abroad programs are available?

A. Literally there are thousands of study abroad programs in hundreds of academic disciplines offered by colleges, universities and private organizations. Programs range from two-week study tours to full year academic programs. The most complete listing of programs is contained in "Vacation Study Abroad" and "Semester and Academic Year" books published by the Institute of International Education, 809 United Nations Plaza, New York, NY 10017.

Q. What resources are available to help me decide what, where and when to study abroad?

A. Your very best resource may be right on your own campus! On many campuses there are study abroad (or international) offices which have been created to advise students planning to study abroad. Your study abroad advisor will have all the latest catalogs, provide information or reading materials, travel details and generally help you find the program which meets your needs.

Another good source of first hand information is a quarterly newspaper called "Transitions" (18 Hulst Road, Amherst, MA 01002) written by students and other travelers who have participated in various programs.

A professional organization called NAFSA (National Association For Foreign Student Affairs, 1860 19th Street NW, Washington, DC 20009) has a variety of pamphlets and bibliographies of interest to students planning to study abroad.

The American Institute For Foreign Study (102 Greenwich Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut 06830) offers the widest variety of study abroad programs—more than 100 summer, semester and academic year opportunities in their college catalog.

For additional information on study abroad programs, visit your study abroad office.

...s qualify at Princeton

By TERRY KELLY
Staff Reporter

From looking at the early part of the season you would not know that this was supposed to be a rebuilding year for the men's winter track team.

Last year the team lost eight seniors to graduation, and this year they are only carrying ten upperclassmen on a 46-person squad. Despite this fact, the team already has five individuals and four relays who have qualified for the IC4A championship meet in early March.

The most recent of the qualifying performances came at the Princeton Relays Jan. 31. The team of sophomores Howard Jackson and Mark Rainey, junior Bruce Harris and freshman Finn Kelly ran an extremely strong distance medley race with a combined time of 10:00.72 to take third place in the meet. Their individual times were 800 meters 1:54.5, 400 meters 49.6, 1200 meters 3:03.9, and 1600 meters 4:12.7 respectively.

In the only other relay the team competed in, the squad of seniors Grant Davis and Edwin Modibedi, sophomore Marc Jones and freshman Aidan O'Reagan took second in the sprint medley relay. They combined times of 400 meters 49.4, 200 meters 21.8 and 22.5, and 800 meters in 1:52.6 for a total time of 3:26.29 just over a second behind race winner Pittsburgh.

Off the track the team saw a strong performance by Mark Rainey in the long jump. In the event, the sophomore had an excellent leap for so early in the season of 24' 1.5". His jump had him a mere quarter of an inch short of the first-place jump by Princeton's Vincent Smith.

In other running events junior Mike Streleckis finished fourth in the 3000-meter run with a time of 8:46.8 while Paul DiPersio made it to the semi-finals of the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 8.0 seconds.

The team is now preparing for possibly its most prestigious meet, the Panasonic Millrose Games in New York. That meet will take place Feb. 5 at Madison Square Garden.

Grapplers take third

By MONICA BYRNE
Staff Reporter

On Jan. 30, the Villanova wrestling team competed in the National Catholic Championships, held at John Carroll University in Ohio. The Cats captured third place in the seven team field with a team score of 51.5.

Despite a bad case of the injury bug, Villanova managed to place an entrant in 10 of the 11 eight classes. Wildcat grapplers took places in seven of these 10 divisions.

Freshman Tad Thormodsgaard led the team with the lone first-place finish. "Individually, it was my best performance this year, and as a team we were fairly pleased," commented Thormodsgaard, "but we went into the tournament with the idea of winning it. We just came up a little short."

Other freshman placers were Greg Alfonsi, Lyndon Campbell and Al Re, all taking seconds, and Jorn Erickson, Don Lamonaca and Peter Zeuli with fourth-place finishes.

Among their seven opponents, Notre Dame was their toughest competitor, placing first with a score of 101.5. John Carroll tallied 61.5 points to take second.

Tomorrow, the wrestling team travels to Lancaster, Pa., for the Franklin and Marshall Tournament. Thormodsgaard likes his team's chances on Saturday and down the road at the Easterns saying, "Everyone's goal is to get to the National tournament. The lower weights have guys who have decent chances to go.

"We're really training hard now and by the time Easterns are here, we'll be a much better team. On Saturday, we're going in with the attitude that we should win it."

Athlete of the Week

TOM GREIS

This week's Saco East Athlete of the Week is sophomore center Tom Greis.

Greis, who is averaging 12.9 points per game, registered 20 points, 13 rebounds and six blocked shots in last Saturday's heartbreaking loss to the Providence Friars.

Two days later the 7 foot 2 inch sophomore tallied 21 points in Villanova's 64-58 win over the Hoyas of Georgetown. In addition Greis accounted for nine blocked shots as well as five rebounds.

Greis, who now has thrown in 271 points, ranks as the Cats second-leading scorer behind Doug West. He is a prime reason 'Nova is now 15-6 and third in the Big East.

Hockey's leading scorer, Bob Ward, netted two goals in the Wildcats 10-3 win over Scranton.

Ice 'Cats turn on heat

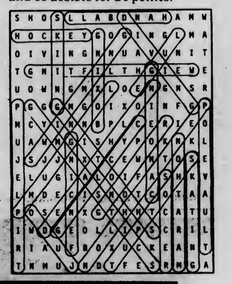
By JOHN SWIFT
Staff Reporter

With the season winding down and the Villanova Ice Hockey team apparently down on their luck, lack of motivation could have hurt the Cats as they hosted Scranton and St. John's at the Haverford Skatium last weekend. But the young Ice Cats showed tremendous heart and perseverance as they downed Scranton and tied St. John's.

On Jan. 30, the Cats played solidly throughout and edged Scranton by the score of 7-6. The victory gave 'Nova a season sweep of their conference rivals, having defeated them in Scranton on Oct. 31, 10-3.

Sophomore Bob Ward, the team's leading scorer, tallied twice and freshman George Schneider did likewise, while adding a pair of assists. Goalie Dave Duffy, the senior co-captain, went the distance in the net for the victory.

On Jan. 31, Villanova faced a difficult task. The St. John's Redmen were in town and the 'Cats were thoroughly beaten by the Redmen in St. John's on Dec. 5 by the count of 11-6.



The Cats played well and achieved a 3-3 tie with St. John's. Ward and sophomore Kevin Stadtler each had a goal and an assist while sophomore Mark Bruno was credited with the other goal.

Junior goalie Mitch Doren was phenomenal in the net for Villanova. Doren notched 42 saves in the contest.

Villanova has but four games remaining on the schedule for the season. Their last two home games are this weekend (Feb. 6 and 7) against Mercyhurst and Delaware.

Ice Cats Notes:

Ward is the team's leading scorer with 24 goals and seven assists for 31 points. He is followed by Schneider with 13 goals and 13 assists for 26 points and freshman Mark Neaves with 11 goals and 15 assists for 26 points.

Men's basketball dunk Hoyas, 64-58

By DOUG SCANCARELLA
Sports Editor

After Villanova's men's basketball team broke into the top 20 last week they suffered losses at the hand of St. John's University and Providence College. They quickly rebounded by topping Georgetown University, last Monday.

The St. Johns loss, which took place last Wednesday at duPont, was a disheartening blow. The Cats who trailed 16-6 at one point rallied back and kept the game close. However their efforts sought for naught as they fell to the Redmen 60-55. The crushing thing was that 'Nova had two chances to pull the game out late in the game.

First, with the Redman up by one and 13 seconds remaining, Gary Massey missed a tough turn around lay up after stealing a errant Shelton Jones pass. Second, after "Boo" Harvey converted two free throws, a Kenny Wilson 3-point shot went in and out and the 'Cats fell to defeat.

St. John's coach Lou Carnesecca stated, "Villanova is playing the best ball in the Big East, but tonight their shots just would not fall."

The providence loss was next. In this game V.U. enjoyed a 18-point lead at half time, but just fell apart in the second half and eventually lost 82-76 in overtime.

A 27-point scoring effort from Doug West as well as a 20-point night for Tom Greis was not enough as the Friars out scored Villanova in the second half 57-33.

All the lack of character that was shown in the Providence game was made up for two days later when V.U. came back from an 8-point deficit to top Georgetown, 64-58.

Senior forward Mark Plansky later commented, "This game was definitely a character builder. We showed we have a lot of unity, closeness and character."

The first half started with the Cats looking very sluggish as Georgetown put together a 12-4 spurt. In that spurt the Hoyas were led by junior Charles Smith, who accounted for six of the 12 points.

'Nova rallied back. After Plansky stole a Smith pass and banked the ball in, Taylor tipped in a Pat Enright miss. Moments later West threw in two free throws to give Villanova there first lead at the 9:55 mark of the first half.

The lead changed five more times in the course of the half, but at the 2:05 mark 'Nova ran off 10 unanswered points. The surge was highlighted by two Greis jump shots as well as Massey freethrows.

The second half began with the Wildcats still hot. 'Nova put together a 9-0 spurt that was started by a Wilson to Massey alley-oop slam dunk.

Villanova led the rest of the way, but Georgetown wittled the lead down. The Hoyas pulled within four but Wilson nailed two foul shots to ice the game with :28 seconds left. (Wilson was sent to the line after being fouled by Georgetown's Jaren Jackson).

Wilson later said, "I just want to be in that spot . . . getting the ball at the end of the game with a chance to win."

While Wilson iced the game it was Greis who took care of most of the scoring. The 7-foot 2-inch center poured in 21 points while grabbing five rebounds. The sophomore also managed to block a career high nine shots. "I wanted the ball all game, if I didn't want it the guys on the perimeter wouldn't have any confidence in me," commented Greis.

Head Coach Roland V. Massimino, who called this game "a character type game" praised Greis, "he's [Greis] getting better every time he steps on the court. His two best games were Providence and tonight [Georgetown].

Helping Greis underneath was the 6-foot 6-inch Rodney Taylor, who pulled in a team high six rebounds. Taylor suffered a pulled groin which forced him to the side line in the second half, but the forward will be ready for the Boston College game tomorrow.

Also adding to the win was Plansky who scored 14 points and Massey who came up with 10.

Massimino later commented, "To do what we did against Providence and come back and win against the No. 14 team in the nation isjust a great effort."

V.U. swims past LaSalle

By KARLA BECKNER
Staff Reporter

The Villanova women's swimming and diving team closed out their regular season on Jan. 28 with a double dual meet against the University of Pennsylvania and La Salle University at the duPont Pavilion. Villanova defeated La Salle 169-94, but lost to University of Pennsylvania 144-118.

The Wildcats were paced by Laurel Fournier who captured firsts in the 50-yard, 100-yard and 200-yard freestyles. Fourlier set new pool records in the 50-yard and 100-yard freestyles with times of 24.49 and 52.95 respectively, breaking her own record in the 100-yard freestyle.

The team of Danielle Mackey, Mary Mayfield, Teri Messenger and Fournier topped their own 200-yard medley relay school and pool record of 1:50.13, set on Nov. 21 against the University of Pittsburgh, with their 1:49.91 performance.

Sophomore diver Amy Gannon won the one-meter diving with a 231.20 score while placing third in the three-meter event.

Messenger and Mackey aided the victory with first and second-place finishes in the 100-yard and 200-yard backstrokes. Mackey captured the 100-yard backstroke while Messenger followed with a close-second place, and Messenger took the 200-yard backstroke with Mackey following right behind. Mackey also recorded a win in the 200-yard individual medley.

Women runners claim record

By MICHAEL E. JONES
Staff Reporter

It is getting to be quite a habit lately. In yet another eye-opening performance this past weekend at the Coca-Cola Classic in Gainesville, Fla., the women's track team stole the show by breaking the indoor distance medley relay world record, lowering the standard by a whopping six seconds.

The relay team consisted of juniors Celeste Halliday, Kathy Franey, Michelle DiMuro and Vicky Huber, four athletes who have been turning many heads with their solid performances throughout the indoor season.

Halliday got things started with a fine opening 800 meters in 2:06.8, and when she turned the baton over to Franey, it became apparent the Cats only remaining opponent would be the clock.

Franey flew through the 1200-meter leg in 3:22.6 to further extend the Cats' lead. When Franey handed the baton to DiMuro, DiMuro kept the heat on with a 56.1 400-meter leg, and as Huber assumed her position to receive the baton, she knew what her job was. The record of 11:00.76 had been set a year earlier by none other than the Wildcats, a team on which Halliday and Huber both were members. A 4:34 mile by Huber would break it this time. Huber ran a 4:28.8, and the record was theirs.

Said Head Coach Marty Stern, "The girls were ecstatic. It is especially satisfying to watch people you work so much with be so happy. It's definitely a high for all of us."

In some aspects the record did not come as a total surprise. "The record was something we definitely talked about," continued Stern. "If everyone was feeling right, we thought we'd give it a go. When Mackey got the baton, we knew we had a good chance. She ran a fantastic leg to keep us on track. The announcer told us we were on world record pace and read the splits we would need, which helped tremendously, especially Vicky on her mile leg."

"This record is especially satisfying since we beat the best competition there was in the process," added Stern. Second place Alabama, a team which the Cats were by no means taking lightly, finished a lifetime behind the Cats in 11:30. The Cats managed to lap everyone else.

Earlier in the meet the same junior corps of Franey, Huber, DiMuro and Halliday ran the fastest 4 x 800-meter relay in the world this year, lowering the mark to 8:36.17.

Other performances by the Wildcats included Junior Jenny Brekhus, who finished eighth in the 3000 with a time of 9:50.8 to qualify her for the ECAC's; freshman Carol Haux who finished seventh in the 1000 with a 2:52.8; senior Olive Burke who finished eighth in the 55-meter hurdles in 8.24 seconds; and freshman Michelle Bennett, who finished eighth in the 800 in 2:14.9. Villanova alumnus Debbie Grant was the overall 800 winner.

Five Wildcat members will be traveling to the Big Apple tonight to participate in the Panasonic Millrose Games at Madison Square Garden.

Huber will run against a loaded field in the Panasonic Mile, which includes 1984 Olympic 3000-meter champion Maricica Puica and 1984 Olympic 1500-meter champion Doina Melinte, who recently broke the women's indoor 1500-meter record. Fellow junior DiMuro, Franey, Halliday and freshman Bennett will compose the competition in the two-mile relay, where the world indoor record of 8:41.6 could be in jeopardy.

The Millrose Track is unlike any standard 160-meter indoor track which runners are accustomed to. It consists of wooden boards and is approximately 160-yards in length with tight turns, not exactly prime elements for fast times. It is advantageous to shorter runners, who have a lower center of gravity and have an easier time negotiating the turns.

Dorm building begins

By STEVE D'ANGELO
Staff Reporter

Groundbreaking on two new south campus dorms should begin next week, according to Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life.

Building has not yet begun due to legal complications, said Neville. An evaluation of the University by its insurance company needs to be completed, and building contracts have yet to be approved. These obstacles should be cleared within a few days, Neville said.

The dorms will be located next to Katharine Hall, across from the south campus cafeteria. The new buildings are designed very much like the recently-built St. Monica and Katharine halls, with the exception that they will have three floors instead of four. Each hall will consist of 60 double-occupancy rooms, housing a total of two hundred and forty students, according to Neville.

Residence campaign underway

By STEVEN MONTRESOR
Staff Reporter

A campus-wide anti-vandalism program was recently initiated by the Rev. Martin Smith, O.S.A., assistant director of Residence Life for environmental management, along with the assistance of the University's environmental officers.

The program began Monday and will continue until April 27. The objective of the program is to reduce vandalism and instill a sense of campus pride in the students, said Smith.

The program is in the form of a competition within each residence hall, in which floors or wings compete for prize money and the "Wildcat Pride" award within the specified time, according to John Horan, environmental officer for the executive council of the Resident Student Association [RSA].

The competition's goal is to have the least amount of vandalism within one's floor section and other designated areas, such as stairwells, lounges, laundry rooms and entrances, he said.

Vandalism is defined as lack of cleanliness, damage, false fire alarms and the discharging of fire extinguishers, according to Smith.

A regular inspection for cleanliness in all 16 residence halls will be conducted weekly by environmental officers, according to Horan. The environmental officers will evaluate only cleanliness, he said.

This information will be combined with vandalism reports determined by Maintenance and resident assistants, and each person on the floor section with the lowest point total in each hall will receive $10, according to Horan.

In addition, each residence hall will receive a plaque on which will be engraved the winning floor section. The plaque will then be displayed in the building, said Horan.

The funds for the prize money came from fines levied last year by the office of Residence Life, and if the program is successful, funds will be allotted by the University in the future, according to Smith.

During the fall semester, vandalism damages totaled over $45,000, said Smith.

The recharging of fire extinguishers added up to a cost of over $10,200, for 128 incidents, and the replacement of fire extinguishers, of which there were 23 incidents, cost $2,300, according to Smith.

In addition, he said there were 29 false fire alarms totaling $8,700 and other miscellaneous damage totaling over $21,000.

According to Smith, only $26,000 of the total damage was charged to individuals, with the rest being charged to common damage.

The figure for damage outside the dorms is over $9,000 for the first semester, he said.

There are two types of damage in residence halls, vandalism and accidental damage, said Smith. Vandalism is damage in which the offender is not caught or does not admit to the offense, he said.

According to Smith, the costs of vandalism are paid for by charging either the residents of a specific wing or the residents of the entire hall, depending on where the vandalism occurs.

Accidental damage, on the other hand, is charged to a specific individual, he said.

It is hoped that the existence of common damage areas will provide incentive for the student to assume ownership of that area and not damage it, Smith said. Pride is missing from the Villanova campus, he said, and intervention is needed to prevent the situation from worsening.

The figures for damage may be higher this year because Smith is doing detailed monitoring of the damage occurring on campus. The monitoring process is facilitated by the use of a computer to inventory damages, Smith said.

A small group of volunteers is working to make people aware of the vandalism problem, said Smith. The program will be supplemented by a series of posters, he added.

The basis for the anti-vandalism program came from local public schools which have been encountering a problem with vandalism, according to Smith. The public school district sets aside a specific amount of money to cover the costs of damage, and what is not used for repairs is funneled into different programs for the students, he said.

The extra money provides the students with an incentive to take better care of their environment, and so far, there has been a noticeable improvement, he added.

Student cheating to be studied

Honor code suggested solution

By JENNIFER REIDY
Assistant News Editor

Student Government plans to combat the problem of cheating and academic dishonesty among the Villanova student body with attempts to institute an honor code within the University, according to Kristin Switala, assistant secretary of the academic affairs department of Student Government.

The issue of cheating was made a special concern recently by Dr. R. William Marks, biology professor, who instructed a core biology course for non-science majors last semester.

According to Marks, seven or eight members of his class revealed to him that other students had cheated extensively on his final examination. Because certain sections of the class were scheduled to take the exam on different days, students took advantage of the opportunity to relay the exam questions to their friends, Marks said.

Marks explained that he could not prosecute the guilty students because those who had informed him refused to state publicly the names of those involved. "Until the students themselves are willing to prosecute, the faculty can do nothing to combat this type of cheating," Marks said.

Because he chose not to overlook the incident, Marks submitted grades of "NG" [no grade] for the entire class, he said. He hoped to arrange for the class to retake the final exam but found it impossible due to numerous complications. According to Marks, the only solution available was to submit new grades for the class Jan. 5.

"They [the students] felt that the course was irrelevant in regards to their future careers. This attitude may have occasioned the flagrant cheating on the final. However, it may have been that the opportunities to cheat in that class were greater because of its large size and separate sections," Marks commented.

Right now cheating at Villanova is perceived along the lines of breaking the 55 mph speed limit, and that attitude must change.
—Dr. Michael E. Burke, director of the honors program.

University policy on cheating is defined under the heading of "plagiarism" in the Student Handbook. It states, "Dishonesty in any assignment, test or examination

Greek rush comes to a conclusion

By LAURA STEVENS
Staff Reporter

The sorority rush program came to a close Feb. 8 when the seven sororities released the bids of invitation to their spring pledges.

The 15 fraternities run on a less specific schedule through the year and are currently organizing their spring pledge groups.

Both fraternity and sorority rush meetings were held during the past week in Dougherty Hall and the Connelly Center. The rush events proved to be free of disturbances and the campus was even quieter than usual, reported a member of the Security department.

Some changes have taken place in the rush procedure and several rush-related issues were discussed during this time.

Among the changes was the installation of the Alpha Phi sorority last spring, which provided a seventh opportunity for women interested in Greek life.

Another change was the new rule that freshmen may not rush during their first semester. The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, has been seeking this change for some time and was pleased with the installation of the rule.

"Freshmen need to get acclimated academically and be sure of themselves. Rush is time-consuming and puts a great amount of pressure on the stu-

All viewings will be in the Connelly Center Cinema on Villanova's campus. Tickets are $2 for students and senior citizens and $3.50 for the general public.

Blonde Venus is the fifth collaborative effort between director Josef von Sternberg and star Marlene Dietrich. It presents a dilemma that rings true even today, more than 55 years after the film was made: A woman must choose between a career — in this case, as a successful nightclub entertainer — and domestic life, as a mother and wife.

Playing an entertainer was nothing new for Dietrich, who first gained fame in the United States as the chanteuse in "The Blue Angel," but "Blonde Venus" affords her the chance to play a devoted mother for the first time.

Watch for the series' third February offering, Orson Welles' "film noir" classic, Lady From Shanghai Feb. 27-29, starring Rita Hayworth as the dangerous Spiderwoman and Welles as her Victim.

Trips abroad cancelled

By SHARON A. WATERS
Assistant News Editor

A council of deans and the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, vice president of Academic Affairs, suspended Villanova's summer programs in France and Spain for 1988 because important issues concerning the trips had not been resolved, according to the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

The two study-abroad programs will remain discontinued until appropriate guidelines concerning such issues as the University's liability and responsibility, the process of granting academic credit and the costs of the trip are established, according to Ellis.

However, summer programs in Austria and Jerusalem will be offered this summer because "set guidelines are established for [these] programs," Ellis said.

The four-to-six-week programs each offer a maximum of six credits in language courses, according to information on the programs supplied by Dr. Charles H. Helmetag, chairperson of the modern languages department.

Normally, 25 to 30 students, who do not necessarily have to be attending Villanova, participate in each program.

The unresolved issues include whether the cost of the program sufficiently covers the cost of tuition for the six credits, procedural questions about the administrative process of granting academic credit and liability concerning the protection of both the University and participating students, according to Ellis.

Ellis wanted the deans' committee on international studies to make recommendations concerning these issues. Ellis recommended to the council of deans and Gallen that the trips be discontinued because the committee had not resolved the issues by December 1987.

Dr. Donald R. Burke, chairperson of the management department and chairperson of the deans' committee on international studies, said that the committee is "trying to deal with the administrative ends of the [summer] programs."

Burke said that a final report and recommendations are expected this semester.

The committee consists of Burke, Dr. Nancy Engel, nursing professor; James R. Johnson, director of the University College's summer sessions; Cheryl M. Rillo, bursar; and David J. Smith, registrar.

Dr. George T. Radan, chairperson of the art and art history department, and Dr. Thomas M. Ricks, director of the international studies program, previously served on the committee, but currently do not. Burke said that the committee "decided to use them [Radan and Ricks] as resource people, instead of actually on the committee itself."

(Photo by St. John)

Dr. Thomas M. Ricks, director of the International Studies program, recommended a temporary suspension of Villanova's foreign studies program in France and Spain this summer.

Ricks said that his office is interested in "renovating and improving the programs" and that he recommended that the programs be suspended for the summer of 1988.

Saying that the suspension would be temporary, Ricks wants the possibilities of alternative locations and extension of the programs to six weeks to be considered before the programs continue.

Ricks said he was "enthusiastic about having a summer program of six weeks in France and Madrid for the summer of 1989 and [does] not anticipate any further interruptions."

Adding that his office is "completely committed" to programs of foreign study abroad, Ricks praised those involved with the programs, saying, "The faculty has done an outstanding job in initiating and carrying out the programs in France and Spain."

The Rev. Antonio Roman, modern languages professor, said that the explanation for the suspension, "was vague ... not really convincing." Roman added, "Students are hurt because they don't have the same opportunity to go with Villanova to study abroad ... they are deprived of that."

Helmetag indicated that the programs were popular, saying that some students have participated more than once and that other students have already inquired about the trips this year.

Students who have participated in the programs praised their benefits and expressed concern over the suspension.

The students outlined the advantages of the programs as including an increase in language proficiency, cultural enrichment and friendships made.

Junior Carol McKenny said, "My understanding of the language increased incredibly." McKenny also considered going with the program at Villanova "very safe" because students travel with professors who are familiar with the country.

Senior Jeff Kostelni said there were advantages of studying abroad in the summer as opposed to a whole semester. Kostelni also said that as an accounting major there is "no [other] way you can do it [study abroad]" and still graduate on time.

PEC reports delayed

The final report of the Program Evaluation Committee [PEC] has been delayed until March, said PEC chairperson Dr. Angelo Armenti Monday, according to a member of Armenti's office.

Also, a survey which examined what importance various members of the Villanova community attributed to different parts of the University's Mission Statement is also not expected until March, according to Armenti's office.

Both reports were originally supposed to be completed by February. According to a member of Armenti's office, Armenti said that recent snowfall and the cancellation of a couple of meetings had delayed the completion of the reports.

All of the evaluations have been completed by the PEC, according to Armenti's office. The PEC has been conducting a study of all University programs for the past two years.

Currently, the PEC is working on the final draft of its concluding report, according to Armenti's office. D.J.S.

Hang tag violation imposed

People found in possession of a reportedly lost or stolen hang tag or parking permit will be fined $50 as of next Monday, according to a statement from Chief Rowan P. Kelly, director of Security.

Possession of a reportedly lost or stolen hang tag or parking permit will be a violation of the Security Department's motor vehicle regulations, according to the statement.

A ticket for the violations will be issued by a Security officer. Judicial Affairs Officer Stephen McWilliams will present the ticket to the person found in possession of the hang tag or parking permit.

The ticket may be appealed within five working/school days, like other traffic violations, according to the statement. D.J.S.

The Senate information has been available on the computer system since last semester, according to Maurone. More details on the Senate may be obtainable via computer in the future, he said. D.J.S

Sibling Weekend begins today

By BARBARA KRESCH
Staff Reporter

This weekend many five-to-13-year-old siblings of Villanova students will participate in this year's Sibling Weekend.

There will be many planned activities and free time for students to spend with their siblings, said student chairperson David Court.

The purpose of Sibling Weekend, according to Court, is to "provide a chance for brothers and sisters to get to spend time together on campus. It should be a pleasant family atmosphere."

Another purpose, according to Maura Harling Stefl, the assistant program officer of the Villanova Union, is that "it is good public relations to the students' families."

Sibling Weekend was introduced to Villanova University four years ago when Anna Maria N. Kelly joined the staff of the Union as program director, according to Harling Stefl.

She said that Kelly brought the idea of Sibling Weekend with her from Heidalberg University, where she previously worked. This will be Kelly's fourth year of helping Villanova with Sibling Weekend.

It is a large event this year, with 370 siblings attending and over 800 people participating, reports Court.

The student chairpersons, Court and John Mooney, and many other people involved with the Union have been working on the project since September. Court said he is pleased with the results and feels that everyone has done a productive job.

Sibling Weekend will be a University-wide event that requires "the cooperative effort of many organizations in the University," said Harling Stefl.

Friday night there will be a carnival sponsored by the Resident Student Association in the Belle Air Terrace of the Connelly Center. Fraternities and sororities will sponsor booths such as face painting and a wet sponge toss.

The movie "Goonies" will be playing Friday night and Saturday afternoon.

Also on Saturday afternoon, the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse will be open for a pep rally and, for those who signed up, there will be a trip to the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia.

Saturday night there will be a dance sponsored by the Association of Commuting Students. There will also be a Villanova men's basketball game, which is normally the most popular event among the siblings, said Harling Stefl.

Campus Ministry will hold a special Mass Sunday morning.

Registration will be in the Villanova Room, 5:30 to 8 p.m. Friday and 9 to 11 a.m. Saturday.

Program seeks inclusion

The women's studies program is currently under review to officially become part of the College of Arts and Sciences.

According to Dr. Barbara A. Wall, O.P., philosophy professor and member of the women's studies faculty advisory committee, "We submitted a proposal for a women's study program to the University's arts and sciences curriculum committee, and we are presently waiting for their response." The proposal was submitted in August 1987.

Dr. Priscilla Hopkirk, chairperson of the curriculum committee in the College of Arts and Sciences, said the committee will be meeting to consider the proposal within the next two weeks.

Once the women's studies program is included in the arts and sciences curriculum, "it will become a program with a faculty chair and an executive board of faculty members who jointly coordinate the program," said Wall.

Gaile Pohlhouse, a member of the advisory committee, said, "[By] putting it in arts and sciences, more students will be aware of it ... and we would have a wider audience of people."

Dr. Pamela Blewitt, another member of the advisory committee, said, "Being part of the arts and sciences curriculum is important for the University to demonstrate its commitment to the program."

Presently, the women's studies program has no budget within the University. Wall said, "Dr. Angelo Armenti [dean of University Col-

Pro-life group marches

By CAROLYN R. MIRABILE

On Jan. 22, Villanovans for Life [VFL] sponsored a trip to Washington, D.C., where they marched in front of the Supreme Court building in protest of abortion.

"Every year since VFL was established in 1974, we have marched down in Washington," said Heidi Rojas, president of VFL.

This year, 25 people, including 15 VFL members, four non-members and four non-Villanovans, marched in protest of the landmark decision of Roe v. Wade, which recently had its 15th anniversary.

Also, VFL members Ingrid Birnbach, Maria Bowersock, Laurie Potenza and Adrianna Moulo took part in the American Collegiates for Life conference held at Trinity College.

"Every year the ACL holds a conference after the march, and last year was the first time that Villanova was recognized at the conference," said Birnbach. This year 100 students from the United States and Canada participated, she said.

At the conference, students participated in a series of workshops. Included among them was organizing a pro-life group, a speech on euthanasia and a workshop sponsored by Direct Action, which gives counselling and is involved in lobbying.

Dr. Bernard Nathanson, creator of the movie "Silent Scream," also addressed the group. Nathanson used to own the largest abortion clinic in the nation, but with the advent of the pro-life movement, he closed the clinic and is now a leader in the movement.

Nathanson's newest movie, "Eclipse of Reason," "was so intense that it caused the Parliament of England to repeal a law which allowed abortions after the third trimester," said Birnbach.

On Sunday, mass was held and an obstetrician-gynecologist from Philadelphia, Dr. Dorothy Czarnecki, spoke on the various attitudes of pro-life members.

The 7-to-2 decision of Roe v. Wade said that states cannot prohibit women from having abortions in the first trimester of pregnancy. The decision allowed the states to regulate second trimester abortions and to prohibit third trimester abortions.

Alumnus runs in state election

By KEVIN C. HEIL

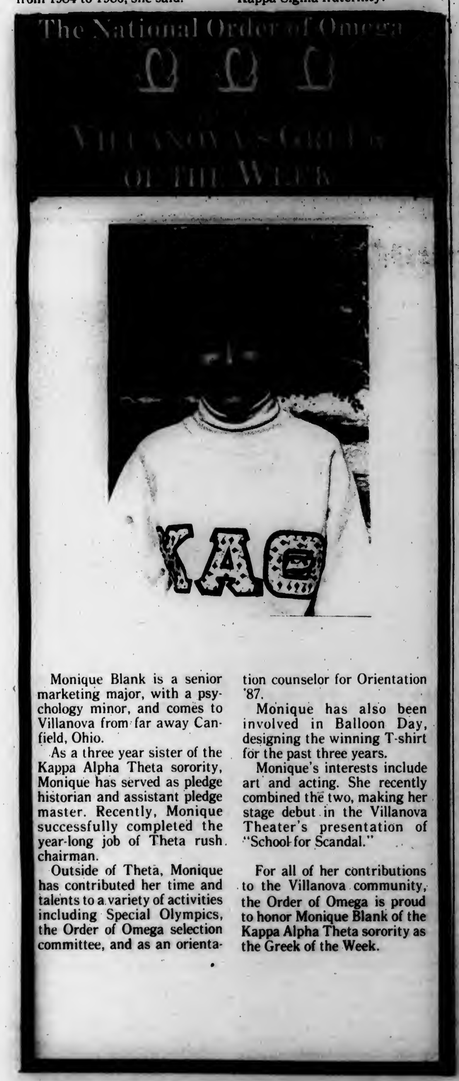
Villanova alumnus James Clark recently announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination to a seat in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives.

Clark is running to represent the state's 149th district, which serves parts of Upper Merion and Lower Merion townships, as well as the borough of Bridgeport.

The vacancy in the Republican party is due to the retirement of Richard A. McClatchy of Bryn Mawr, who has served as representative for 20 years, according to Clark's wife, Elizabeth G. Clark. McClatchy has served as chairperson of the state's House Appropriations committee, she added.

According to Mrs. Clark, her husband has been active in the local area for many years. He served as a committeeman in Merion from 1980 to 1983, and then moved to Villanova, where he has served as committeeman since 1984. He has also served as the chairman of registration for the Republican party in Merion from 1984 to 1986, she said.



Petitions for candidacy are due Feb. 16, and the primary election is scheduled for May. Clark is currently the only person running for the 149th district position, she said.

"His approach to state government is to pursue those successful policies that have produced over $2 billion in tax cuts for businesses and individuals during the past four years, held state spending near the rate of inflation [and] stimulated economic development and jobs," Mrs. Clark said.

She added that his plans also include upgrading education at all levels, improving the environment and providing additional help for the elderly.

As a student at the University, he was a member of the Blue Key Society, Student Union and crew team. He served on the University Senate for two years as a member of the rules and review committee, and was also a member of the alumni board of governors from 1976 to 1978, according to Pat Winner, assistant to the alumni director.

Mrs. Clark said that he was also a member of the now-defunct Kappa Sigma fraternity.

Monique Blank is a senior marketing major, with a psychology minor, and comes to Villanova from far away Canfield, Ohio.

As a three year sister of the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, Monique has served as pledge historian and assistant pledge master. Recently, Monique successfully completed the year-long job of Theta rush chairman.

Outside of Theta, Monique has contributed her time and talents to a variety of activities including Special Olympics, the Order of Omega selection committee, and as an orientation counselor for Orientation '87.

Monique has also been involved in Balloon Day, designing the winning T-shirt for the past three years.

Monique's interests include art and acting. She recently combined the two, making her stage debut in the Villanova Theater's presentation of "School for Scandal."

For all of her contributions to the Villanova community, the Order of Omega is proud to honor Monique Blank of the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority as the Greek of the Week.

Republican Vice President George Bush

Vice President George Bush finished a "weak" third behind Sen. Robert Dole and television evangelist Pat Robertson in Monday's Republican Iowa caucus, according to the Feb. 9 Philadelphia Inquirer.

In order for him to avoid a lengthy and bitter battle with Dole for the Republican nomination, it is essential for Bush to win by a large margin in the New Hampshire primary Feb. 16, according to the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Disfavor among Iowans for the Reagan-Bush administration, which is perceived in Iowa to be largely responsible for the difficulties in rural America, was an important factor in Dole's Iowa victory. New Hampshire should be more friendly territory for Bush because of that state's booming economy, Reagan's continuing popularity and Bush's Connecticut roots, according to an article in the Philadelphia Inquirer Feb. 9.

The vice president supports the Reagan administration's budget-balancing proposals, according to the Jan. 17 Philadelphia Inquirer. He backs the line-item veto, the balanced budget amendment and the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

Bush promises not to increase taxes to reduce the federal deficit. He does not favor changes in Social Security.

Regarding the trade deficit, Bush is in favor of Reagan's free-trade approach and the use of education and technology to restore American competitiveness. He refers to protectionism as "fool's gold [that] won't save jobs, won't cure our trade deficit," according to an article in the Jan. 17 Philadelphia Inquirer.

Bush supports a constitutional ban on abortion, except in cases of rape, incest or when the mother's life is endangered. He opposes federal funding of abortions, according to the Jan. 17 Philadelphia Inquirer.

With respect to several issues related to defense policy and foreign policy, Bush affirms support for Reagan administration positions, according to the Jan. 17 Philadelphia Inquirer.

The vice president backs the Reagan defense budget and the Strategic Defense Initiative. In addition, he is a supporter of the treaty signed in December by the United States and the Soviet Union agreeing to eliminate all intermediate-range nuclear forces in Europe.

Bush supports the Nicaraguan contras and Reagan administration policy in the Persian Gulf, according to the Jan. 17 Philadelphia Inquirer.

Bush served as U.S. representative from Texas from 1967-1971, during which time he was a member of the Ways and Means Committee, according to "Who's Who in America."

Bush was U.S. ambassador to the United Nations from 1971-1972 and was chief of the U.S. Liaison Office in Peking from 1974-1975. He served as director of the Central Intelligence Agency from 1976-1977. In 1981, Bush became vice president of the United States, according to "Who's Who in America."

Bush's candidacy has been plagued by questions concerning the extent of his knowledge of the Iran-contra policy. He has repeatedly said that he has answered all questions posed about the policy with the exception of those regarding his private advice to Reagan, according to the Feb. 8 issue of Time.

Bush defends himself by saying that he did not realize the deals with Iran involved trading arms for hostages and that he was greatly concerned about the torture of William Buckley, one of the hostages in Lebanon, according to Time. Bush also claims to have had even less knowledge about the Iran-contra connection.

Democratic Senator Albert Gore Jr.

By SIOBHAN A. RODER
Senior Reporter

Albert Gore Jr., freshman senator from Tennessee, must show his political strength in the New Hampshire, South Dakota and Wyoming delegate-selection contests during the next three weeks, or his bid for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination may be over before the 20 political races on Super Tuesday, March 8, according to an article in a December 1987 issue of The New Republic.

Gore, who believes that he is the Democratic candidate who can carry the South in November's general election, has been receiving increasing support in that region.

Yet, according to The New Republic article, Democratic Party Executive Director Mark Siegel said the period before Super Tuesday "is Gore's major test. The South won't support a regional candidate. He has to prove before March 8 that he's a national candidate." Otherwise, Gore may fare poorly in the South's primaries.

Fourteen of the 20 races on Super Tuesday are in southern or border states. A fourth of the Democratic delegates, 1,400 persons, will be chosen in those 14 contests.

After beginning a full-scale campaign in Iowa, Gore later denounced the Iowa caucus "which he says forces candidates to spend too much time and money courting activists and pandering to their political demands," according to The New Republic article. He reduced his campaign staff there from 21 to four and announced he would only be in Iowa to participate in televised debates.

Gore finished last in Monday's Iowa Democratic caucus.

Gore has proclaimed himself to be a "raging moderate" and has emphasized his differences with the other Democratic candidates, according to the Oct. 19, 1987 issue of Time. Gore believes the support he has given to the present U.S. policy in the Persian Gulf, the invasion of Grenada, the U.S. bombing of Libya and flight-testing of nuclear missiles tends toward the center.

The New Republic article said Gore has tried to use his positions on these issues to portray himself as one who believes in "bargaining from strength."

An article in the Jan. 17 issue of the Philadelphia Inquirer said Gore is in favor of the treaty signed in December by the United States and the Soviet Union to eliminate all intermediate-range nuclear forces in Europe. He is not in favor of cutting any weapons systems now in existence and supports continued research at current levels of spending of the Strategic Defense Initiative.

Gore's emphasis in his effort to reduce the federal budget deficit would be on stimulating economic growth and trimming excessive spending. He is in favor of a balanced budget amendment, but the senator does not support the line-item veto or the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act, according to the Philadelphia Inquirer article.

The Philadelphia Inquirer article also said Gore does not rule out increasing taxes "as a last resort" in fighting the budget deficit. He is against making any changes in Social Security.

With respect to the trade deficit, he would attempt to open foreign markets through negotiations rather than take punitive measures, according to the Philadelphia Inquirer article.

Gore, who turns 40 next month, won election to the House of Representatives in 1976. While in the House, he sponsored legislation to regulate organ transplants and fought for stricter warnings on cigarette packages, in spite of his constituency, which included 10,000 tobacco farmers, according to the Oct. 19, 1987 issue of Time.

College students surveyed

Freshmen found more liberal

(CPS) — This year's freshmen are more interested in teaching careers than their predecessors, but it is because they are after money and job security — not better schools — the nation's biggest survey of student attitudes has found.

In fact, a record number of freshmen — 75.6 percent — named "being very well off financially" as an important life goal in the annual survey of 290,000 first-year collegians by the American Council on Education and the University of California at Los Angeles.

The survey also found that more students describe themselves as more liberal than in past years, think college and high school AIDS [Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome] education programs are inadequate and feel freshmen participation in government financial aid programs has stabilized after six years of decline.

On the other hand, less than two-fifths of this year's freshmen — 39.4 percent — identify "developing a meaningful philosophy of life" as an essential or important life goal, the lowest in the survey's history, down from 40.6 in 1986 and 82.9 percent in 1967.

"These trends over the past 20 years," said Dr. Alexander Astin of the UCLA Graduate School of Education and the director of the study, "suggest a gradual but profound shift not only in students' values but also in the values of the larger society."

Students, added study associate director Dr. Kenneth C. Green, seem to be switching from technical fields.

A greater number — 8.1 percent — than in prior years plan to become teachers, Green reported, mostly because "the salaries are better, the jobs are there."

However, Astin noted, the new interest in teaching still is far below the all-time high recorded in 1968, when 23.5 percent of the entering freshmen expressed an interest in teaching careers.

Green added that women's goals are changing, too. More women freshmen now want to become doctors than those aiming to become nurses.

Business continues to attract growing numbers of students of both genders. Still the most preferred career among college freshmen, business reached another all-time high in the fall of 1987, rising to 24.6 percent, up from 24.1 last year.

The number of students who consider themselves liberal increased slightly again this year. Some 22.2 percent of the nation's first-year collegians described themselves as political liberals, up from 22 percent in fall, 1986.

In 1971, 35.3 percent of American freshmen said they were liberal.

At the other end of the political spectrum, the proportion of "conservative" and "far right" freshmen changed little in recent years, accounting for about one-fifth of the freshmen population.

Most freshmen — 56 percent — described themselves as "middle of the road."

But despite what they call themselves, this year's freshmen endorse a number of traditionally liberal values. More than 58 percent support legal abortion. Three-fourths oppose increased military spending and almost half agree colleges should not invest endowment funds in companies that do business in South Africa.

Green speculated freshmen are reluctant to call themselves "liberal" even though they hold liberal ideals because the word "has fallen into disfavor. It denotes an impotence."

In some areas, however, students have indeed become more conservative, Green said. They are less opposed to the death penalty than their predecessors, and most support laws prohibiting homosexual relations.

Astin thought "this continuing support for laws outlawing homosexuality may reflect the growing public concern about AIDS."

Yet AIDS fears haven't cooled students' interest in sex. The proportion of freshmen who agree that "if two people really like each other it's all right for them to have sex even if they have known each other for only a short time" reached a new high of 51.9 percent.

"This suggests that while young people may be concerned about AIDS, they may not be adequately informed about the virus and their potential risk to exposure," Astin said. "Indeed, you can look at these data and think that students have a 'can't happen to me' attitude about this disease."

On the financial aid front, more freshmen — 17.5 percent — got Pell Grants, up from 16.9 percent in 1986 but still well below the 31.5 percent level of 1980.

Some 22 percent of the freshmen surveyed had taken out Guaranteed Student Loans, a drop from last year's 25.4 percent.

February marks the beginning of Black History Month both at Villanova and across the nation. The Black Cultural Society will sponsor a number of events in the following weeks to celebrate and commemorate the month, according to senior Yvette Sanders, president of the Black Cultural Society.

The month began with a "step show" [talent show] to help raise money for the society.

Also, movies will be shown on the second floor of Good Counsel Hall every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m.

On Feb. 27, there will be another talent show at 8 p.m. in the auditorium of St. Mary's Hall. This show will include acts from those involved in "Lip-It," the Dance Ensemble and the Gospel Ensemble.

The final event of the month will be the eighth annual Black Cultural Society luncheon. Beginning at 2 p.m., outstanding members of the society will be honored.

At 8 p.m., the lecture committee of the Villanova Union, along with the Society will present Dick Gregory, a well known lecturer on civil rights, and other world causes. He is also known as the creator of the Bohemian diet.

Next month, the society will sponsor a fashion show in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. The show will benefit a charity that supports children with AIDS [Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome].

Condoms taped to newspaper

This week a condom will be taped to the inside of each issue of Mansfield University's student newspaper, The Flashlight, said Corbin Woodling, editor-in-chief of the newspaper, in Tuesday's edition of the Philadelphia Inquirer.

The paper, which has a circulation of over 2,500, will contain a 12-page section on AIDS [Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome] and other sexually transmitted diseases, said Woodling. "We wanted to place the condom in, but not just for shock effect. We wanted to inform the rural student body," he said.

Woodling said that the main point is abstinence, but if one is to engage in sexual activity, protection should be used.

The Flashlight received the condoms, colored white, red, blue and green from North Penn Health Services in Mansfield free of charge, according to Woodling.

The issue coincides with St. Valentine's Day and with national Condom Week which begins Sunday, said Woodling.

Tuition increases discussed

Many private colleges' tuition rates do not correspond to rising expenses, but serve to make the colleges look more selective, said David Breneman, president of Kalamazoo College in Michigan, recently.

He added that "price is a message to the public of what we are" and that lower prices would lead potential students to think the school is not as good as its competitors.

The College Board reported that tuition at four-year private colleges rose an average of 8 percent for the 1987-88 school year. Tuitions at public four-year institutions rose 6 percent.

William Bennett, U.S. Secretary of Education, has charged that many colleges raise tuition not to meet financial needs, but because the market will bear it.

Cat roundup halted on campus

Officials at Orange Coast College (OCC), located in Costa Mesa, Calif., have postponed efforts to trap hundreds of stray cats living about the campus due to rumors that the captured cats would be killed by the Concerned Animal Lovers (CAL) of Fullerton.

Cherie Bennett of CAL said the group planned to put the cats up for adoption, although some would "gently and humanely [be] put to sleep."

Until an alternative can be offered, the cats will remain at the school.

Gallen celebrates jubilee

An Augustinian Provincialate press release

The Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs, is celebrating his silver jubilee of religious ordination during 1988.

Gallen was born in Eastport, Maine, on Aug. 11, 1929, of Francis and Mary Gallen. After primary education he attended Western High School, Washington, D.C., and upon graduation entered Villanova University.

He graduated in 1952 with a bachelor of science degree magna cum laude. In 1952, he enlisted in the U.S. Navy and served as engineering officer and executive officer on a U.S. destroyer. From 1955 to 1957, he worked as a supervisor at duPont.

In 1957, Gallen entered the Augustinian order. He professed first vows at Good Counsel Novitiate on September 10, 1958, and solemn vows in 1961.

In 1959, he obtained a bachelor of arts degree in philosophy from Villanova University. He studied theology at Augustinian College, Washington, D.C., and obtained a master of arts degree in theology. On Feb. 9, 1963, he was ordained to the priesthood at the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception.

Immediately after ordination he began graduate studies in biology. In 1963, he obtained a master of science degree, and, in 1966, the doctorate in biology from the Catholic University of America.

From 1972 to 1976, Gallen was director of the summer school sessions of Villanova. He was also acting dean of the College of Arts and Sciences for two years. In 1981, Gallen was named vice president of Academic Affairs, a position he now holds at the University.

Gallen served on the board of trustees of Biscayne College (currently Saint Thomas University). He also served on the academic advisory board of Millersville State from 1976 to 1980.

Van crashes

A University Graphic Services van crashed into a car parked in the lot near the Bartley Hall entrance Wednesday afternoon, causing a chain-reaction accident, said Lt. John Harrity of the Security department.

The accident occurred at about 1:45 p.m. when the driver of the vehicle, Graphic Services employee Brian Logue, lost control of the van. The vehicle, which was leaving the University, then traveled over the island before the guardhouse near Sullivan Hall and struck a gate arm, according to Harrity.

The van then traveled west into the parking lot, and hit a parked car, said Harrity. The crash caused a chain-reaction accident involving several parked vehicles.

One student, John J. Powers of St. Mary's Hall, said he was hit in the arm by the van, according to Harrity. Powers was taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital, where he was released later Wednesday afternoon, said Harrity.

No other injuries were reported, said Harrity.

It was not yet known why Logue lost control of the van, said Harrity Wednesday. Radnor police are investigating the incident, he said.

Students attend Catholic meeting

Four Villanova University Students recently represented Campus Ministry in a conference of the National Catholic Student Coalition held in Philadelphia.

The annual conference, held this year at the Windham Franklin Plaza Hotel Jan. 2-6, provided seniors Heidi Rojas and Kevin Mulcahy and freshmen Anne Sinagra and Michael Cox with an opportunity to join over 500 students from campus ministries nationwide.

The conference featured lectures and workshops on issues such as "Integrating Spiritual and Intellectual Growth" and "The Role of the Church Today."

Linda Jaczynski of Villanova's Campus Ministry presented a workshop titled, "The Role of Youth Ministry."

The Villanova participants served on a committee responsible for transporting out-of-state members between the airport and the hotel.

Rojas, who chaired the transportation committee, cited the willingness of the University to provide campus parking for delegates unable to park at the hotel as a factor in the success of the event.

The Pennsylvania delegation, which is called the Pennsylvania Newman Province, had over 100 students in attendance.

The province consists of campus ministries such as Villanova's as well as "Newman Clubs," which provide Catholic ministry organizations on secular campuses.

Jaczynski, who called the event "a terrific success," said that in April Sinagra and Cox will represent Villanova at such events, replacing Rojas and Mulcahy, who are both seniors.

Student Government committees studied

Academic Affairs

By JENNIFER REIDY
Assistant News Editor

The department of academic affairs of Student Government recently announced its agenda for the 1988 spring semester. The department plans to address a wide range of issues, including academic scholarships, the expansion of the library and improvements in the quality of teaching.

According to Kristin Switala, assistant secretary of the academic affairs department, Student Government will explore methods to improve the caliber of teaching at Villanova. For example, "We want to determine whether lowering the faculty course load from 12 to nine credits per semester would benefit or harm students in the areas of advisement or in-class instruction," Switala explained.

However, such a measure could create new problems. "We are investigating if tuition would increase as a result of this, since new professors would have to be hired to pick up the extra hours," she noted.

The department is currently working to create an extensive catalog of course descriptions to be made available to students prior to preregistration, according to Terri Vu, who is organizing the project for Student Government.

"The catalog would be much more specific than the Bulletin [the student curriculum guide] and would include such details as to what material will be studied in the course, how many papers and exams there will be — basically, it will help the student measure what is required of him or her," Vu commented.

The catalog will not attempt to evaluate any particular professor, Vu noted. She observed that such evaluations would encourage competition between professors and promote faculty rivalries. "However, a professor's office hours and phone number will definitely be included with the description so that a student may have the opportunity to discuss the course with the teacher," Vu added.

Louise Green of the Falvey Library met with members of the academic affairs department Monday to discuss the problems of theft and vandalism of library materials. Green reported that funds have been allocated to equip the library with a more elaborate security system to alleviate these problems.

According to Switala, Student Government also hopes to address this month the issues of "expanding title, and especially periodical holdings" in the library.

Mark Holobetz, secretary of the academic affairs department, is leading an investigation to determine how to increase the number of academic scholarships Villanova awards per year, "because our current numbers are pathetically low," Switala said. Holobetz is working closely with Dr. Michael E. Burke, director of the honors program, on this issue, according to Switala.

Also, Student Government is taking measures to increase the number of study facilities during midterm and final examination weeks. "We are requesting that possibly three buildings be left open 24 hours a day instead of simply one [Tolentine]," Switala commented.

Switala explained that the department of academic affairs works directly with the academic policy committee of the University Senate. In this way, the results and conclusions reached through these projects will be passed on to the Senate committee, and, if they are approved by the committee, they will be recommended to the Senate for implementation into University policy, she concluded.

Internal Affairs

By MAUREEN STAPLETON
Staff Reporter

The department of internal affairs of Student Government has completed its report on coeducational dormitories and recently received approval for a proposed spring festival, according to Michelle Ciccolo, secretary of the department.

The coeducational dormitories proposal will be presented on the Senate floor Feb. 19, Ciccolo said, "All the work should be made public." The proposal includes three surveys, research on coeducational dormitories and contacts with other Northeastern colleges.

Ciccolo said, "The Student Government does support the idea of having coed dorms 100 percent."

The department of internal affairs also helped the Resident Student Association organize a committee to work with J. Leslie Gies, director of Food Services. This committee is working from January, 1988 to January, 1989 and will deal with any complaints, new types of food and possibly new meal plans.

The ideal goal of this committee will be to extend hours in the cafeterias and to change the current meal plan. Concerning the committee, Ciccolo said, "We're hoping it will be effective."

The committee will be under the direct administration of Gies, who will decide when the committee will meet and what matters will be discussed. Ciccolo said, "If the committee becomes inactive, we'll step back in. [The] danger is that all the efforts will go to waste."

The department of internal affairs also received approval last week for its spring festival proposal. The event is supposed to take place this spring and would include alcohol in controlled areas. This proposal was under the direction of Sean Closkey, assistant secretary of internal affairs, who is also involved in proposing other social events at Villanova.

One idea under consideration is an around-the-world party held in Connelly Center. The event would be sponsored by various cultural groups and may be either alcoholic or non-alcoholic.

Other plans underway include the improvement of the current student identification card. Ciccolo said that a better identification card would benefit both students and the University by helping to "give credible identification."

This semester, the department plans to focus on proposing a used book sale, run either by the University or by various student organizations. Ciccolo said that the book sale "should be something the University should run every semester."

Ciccolo also said that the department would like to work with Student Government's department of academic affairs to improve conditions in Falvey Memorial Library.

External Affairs

By DIANE A. CILIONE
Staff Reporter

The external affairs department of Villanova's Student Government is moving toward completion of its goals, according to Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life.

Traffic safety at the intersection of Lancaster and Ithan avenues is a priority, according to Patricia Marzulli, secretary of the external affairs department. Representatives from the department have been working with Radnor Township officials to install a left-turn signal at the intersection.

According to Marzulli, parts for the new turn signal have been ordered and received by Radnor Township. Installation of the signal is targeted for this week. The new signal will affect cars going west on Lancaster Avenue and turning left onto North Ithan Avenue.

Also, the external affairs department has been active in the town and gown meetings, according to Marzulli. "Town and gown" is a meeting of Radnor Township representatives and Villanova representatives to discuss issues relevant to both, said Marzulli.

These meetings, which occur once a month, are a way of "keeping communication lines open between the University and the township," said Marzulli. At these meetings, township issues are brought to the attention of students and administration of the University.

Also, Villanova is represented by the external affairs committee at Radnor Township managers' meetings, according to Marzulli. The managers' meetings, which take place on the second and fourth Monday of every month, address issues like zoning ordinances which are relevant to students, said Marzulli.

Feb. 28 to March 1 and March 14 to 16, the external affairs department will participate in a University-wide voter registration drive. According to Marzulli, the drive will be a door-to-door campaign through the dormitories to encourage students to vote either on campus or with absentee ballots at home, said Marzulli.

The drive is a major undertaking for the department and will take them well into March to complete, said Marzulli.

The department's plans for the remainder of the year include further research on the general safety of traffic conditions on campus, said Marzulli. The department intends to address any potential traffic problems, she said.

Also, the department is discussing the possibility of setting up personal meetings with Radnor Township officials, according to Marzulli. The purpose of the meetings would be to allow township officials to formulate a new image of Villanova students based on personal interchange between officials and students, she said.

Construction continues

By SHARON M. NEUBAUER
Staff Reporter

Villanova University is presently in the process of converting the campus electrical system and is laying conduit, or underground piping for wires, on main campus in front of Sheehan Hall and next to Stanford Hall on south campus.

According to Thomas N. Trucks, director of Maintenance, "Villanova presently has a single [line] system in which the main, south, and St. Mary's [west] campuses are all on different electrical systems.

"With the completion of the new system, Villanova will be running on a dual system in which all the campuses will be connected. This new system will be more efficient than the old," said Trucks.

The construction of two new dorms on south campus prompted the decision to switch services, said Trucks.

He said construction began on south campus in early December while construction on the lawn in front of Sheehan Hall and the parking lot began over the Christmas break.

All duct work for St. Mary's and west campus was laid four to five years ago when telecommunications lines were being installed in that area, said Trucks. He commented that once a hole was dug, lines that will be used in the future are laid to circumvent redigging the same hole.

The Philadelphia Electric Company said it would supply dual service to the University at the company's cost if the University would tie the south campus system into that of main campus, said Trucks.

A dual service provides two separate electric lines from different sources with an automatic tiebreaker, so that if one line goes down, the other line will automatically take over, according to Trucks.

He further said that putting this major service on one billing saves money.

Trucks said that construction will take place across Lancaster Avenue probably in mid-March, depending on the weather and state approval.

South campus

whether the dorms will be male or female. "We need to look at the entire campus and how the population is distributed," Neville explained.

The buildings will be constructed so they can be used by either gender, and a decision based on current housing needs will be made after their completion.

Several concessions in the design of the new resident halls were made in order to gain the approval of Radnor Township. The University agreed to use the same plans for the current housing project as it had for the last, and to limit the buildings to three floors. Also, the dormitories' windows will not open in order to keep the noise level to a minimum, Neville said.

Upperclassmen will most likely occupy the newly-created rooms, according to Neville. "More upperclassmen will be housed . . . there will be fewer juniors that we ask to move off campus," he said. Because upperclassmen allowed to remain on campus have first choice of dormitory rooms, they will have the best opportunity to acquire the new accommodations.

The University had originally intended to complete the dorms by the upcoming fall semester, but problems with gaining Radnor Township's approval for the project delayed the construction.

If the work begins on schedule this month, the buildings should be ready by the summer of 1989, and be available in the fall semester of that year, said Neville.

Palestinian lecture held

By JOHN M. CHEPEGA
Staff Reporter

Villanova's Institute of Contemporary Arab and Islamic Studies and the sociology department are presenting a lecture by Professor Salim Tamari on "Contemporary Palestinian Society" on Feb. 23 at the Connelly Center.

"Salim is one of the leading authorities on Palestinian studies in the world . . . he is internationally known," said Dr. Thomas M. Ricks, the institute's assistant director for program development.

Ricks and Tamari met at Harvard nearly a decade ago. They were reunited during the two years that Ricks spent teaching at Birzeit University in the mountain town of Ramallah, Israel, southeast of Tamari's birthplace of Jaffa (now Yafo) from which he fled due to war in 1948.

Ricks described Birzeit as "the most prominent" and "the most nationalistic and militant" of the Palestinian universities in the region.

Tamari, the editor of the Palestinian studies journal, "Birzeit Research Review," which he and Ricks co-founded, has been a member of the Birzeit sociology department for over 10 years.

Currently, however, he is a Fulbright Scholar-in-Residence at the University of Michigan, and as such consults, teaches and gives lectures to be shared with other American universities.

In accordance with this, and due to his close association with Ricks, Tamari has agreed to give several lectures to eastern universities, including the University of Pennsylvania and Georgetown University, following his visit to Villanova.

Ricks said Tamari will probably answer a few questions on the recent occurrences in the troubled region, but will "mostly focus on changes in contemporary Palestinian society.

The free lecture will be held in the Wayne-St. David's Room of the Connelly Center from 4:30-6 p.m. For more information, call 645-7360.

Women's studies

lege] has been kind enough to allocate funds from University College to finance off-campus speakers as well as to provide a secretarial support staff in the past" for the program.

Armenti said that the budget for women's studies was "out of University College funds for the reason that there are so many small activities [for which] the University doesn't have specific funding."

Blewitt said, "The main issue [behind women's studies] is not about women but about gender and gender issues."

The number of women's studies programs in the United States alone has increased dramatically within the past 15 years. During the 1969-1970 academic year, less than 20 women's studies courses existed. Today, there are nearly 30,000 courses, according to Wall.

Within the University, "many students take some of the courses for a certificate and a concentration [in women's studies], but very few take all of them," said Armenti.

Women's studies encompass not only the study of women's contributions, but also differences that exist within society. These include differnces of race, class, religion, political conviction, region and sexuality.

"To any extent where any individual has been stereotyped and treated unfairly, all people in society suffer," Wall said.

Academic dishonesty to be investigated is punishable by the grade of F, and is to be reported, through the dean, to the vice president for Academic Affairs. A second offense will result in the dismissal of the student from Villanova University."

Marks criticized this definition, labeling it "unclear and ambiguous." He said, "This description does not adequately convey University policy on cheating. Does 'punishable by the grade of F' mean for the exam or for the entire course? As a professor, I did not even understand the correct procedure for an incident like this."

Laura Stevens, coordinator of Student Government's investigation into academic dishonesty and cheating, agreed with Marks. "The Student Handbook is very vague on the subject of cheating. The school should definitely institute clearer and stricter penalties for cheating," she commented.

Marks first suggested the idea of an honor code to Dr. Michael E. Burke, director of the honors program, who referred it to Student Government, according to Switala.

Marks described the role of the honor code at his alma mater, the University of California at Davis. He said that "students are on their honor to protect the integrity and honesty of the school and student body."

Any reported incident of cheating would be brought before a judicial board composed of students, faculty and administrators, who would subsequently conduct a hearing and pass judgment on the accused party, according to Marks.

Marks revealed some reservations on the success of such a system at Villanova. "In order for an honor code to work at Villanova, you would have to change the mindset of the student body. There will, of course, be a transition period in which the students will not take the matter seriously. An honor code has to be a part of the intellectual heritage of the school; it is an attitude more than a policy," he said.

Dr. R. William Marks, biology professor, encountered problems with student cheating in his core biology course for non-science majors last semester.

"Villanova is not ready for an honor code if it requires students to turn other students in," Burke commented.

"The larger problem of cheating is not the acutal copying of answers during an exam, it is the large amount of plagiarized assignments and copied papers from two years ago that students attempt to submit. Right now cheating at Villanova is perceived along the lines of breaking the 55 m.p.h. speed limit, and that attitude must change," Burke said.

"For the immediate future, we are hoping to arrange forums for students and faculty to come and talk about cheating and what can be done about it," Stevens added.

Switala said that Student Government is examining other colleges and universitites which utilize the honor code, particularly Haverford College.

According to the documented Haverford honor code, students are required to sign a pledge which demands that they uphold the principles of the code. It reads, "The goal of the honor code is to encourage individuals to develop responsible judgment capable of directing their conduct as active members of the community."

Switala researched the honor code issue in the Student Government files and found that it had first been recognized in 1974 at a University Senate meeting. The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, who was then a member of the subcommittee on cheating and plagiarism, submitted a proposal that advocated the institution of an honor code at Villanova.

The idea was rejected and not heard of again until 1980, when it was again dismissed by the Senate because "there have been no reports of flagrant violations of cheating and plagiarism and [the Senate] sees no need for an honor code," according to the minutes of the meeting.

The issue surfaced for a third time in February 1985, when the proposal was approved and recommended for implementation to the administration. The matter was turned over to Driscoll, and since that time nothing has been heard on the subject, according to Switala.

Rush

dents to be really involved," he explained.

There was also speculation about hazing, the amount and use of alcohol and the general nature of Greek life and rush.

Both the IFC [Interfraternity Council] President Rob Colton and Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, answered that hazing is not allowed by both national and University standards. Suspected incidences are immediately investigated and reported to judicial affairs, and a conviction can result in a termination of the fraternity's University charter.

These penalties, however, do not altogether remove the presence of hazing. "We're seeing an increase in hazing from about two years ago," said Gary H. Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities. "We're vigilant of it," he explained, "but it's very difficult to police."

"It is not in every group but it is there," noted Stack. "There are two types of hazing: deliberate and obvious orders, and a second type of subtle pressure from the fraternity that the pledges should act a certain way if they want to be accepted. The second type is more dangerous because it is difficult to detect. How can you tell where group-building ends and hazing begins?"

Bonas also expressed a desire to see the fraternities move from a "quasi-dry rush policy to a completely dry one."

Stack agreed, saying, "I don't mind if anyone has a beer, but the problem arises when the fraternities use alcohol as a means of attracting pledges. The groups should be able to stand on their own without the alcohol."

There is concern, however, about the criterion for accepting men and women into a Greek organization and of the exclusiveness of these organizations.

"I worry that rush can be a traumatic experience for a person who does not get an invitation, but I don't know how to resolve it," said Neville.

Bonas named the chief criterion of the sororities and fraternities in looking for new members as a commitment to the organization.

Stack, however, was concerned about more subjective bases for judgment of rushing students, saying, "I'm not sure the criteria are fair."

Bonas did agree that "there will be disappointed women" among the 570 prospective sorority pledges.

BERMUDA COLLEGE WEEKS

When you break away this year, do it with style.

Your College Week in Bermuda is more than just sun, sand and surf.

Right from the first outrageous "College Bash" at Elbow Beach, it's a week of unrelenting pleasure.

Spectacular seaside buffet luncheons. A calypso and limbo festival like none other. Smashing dance-til-you-drop beach parties, featuring Bermuda's top rock, steel and calypso bands. Even a "Party Cruise." All compliments of the Bermuda Department of Tourism.

Bermuda is all of this—and much, much more. It's touring the island on our breezy mopeds. (Do remember to keep left!)

It's jogging on quiet country roads—including an early morning 2-k "Fun Run" from Horseshoe Bay. It's exploring the treasures in our international shops, playing golf on eight great courses, and tennis on over 100 island-wide courts.

But most of all, it's the feeling you get on a tiny, flower-bedecked island, separated from everywhere and everything by 600 miles of sea.

This year, break away with style. See your Campus Travel Representative or Travel Agent for details.

Villanova honor code urged

Villanova has a major academic dishonesty problem and nobody seems to care. Villanova's honor policy is basically defunct and the blame for widespread cheating rests on not only the students, but the faculty and administration as well. We implore University officials and students to initiate an honor code that would be both respected and upheld.

Many Villanova students cheat, obtain test questions and answers prior to taking exams and plagiarize papers on a regular basis.

The issue has recently resurfaced when students revealed to Dr. R. William Marks, biology professor, that members of the core biology course had cheated extensively on the final exam last semester. The University policy was so vague that Marks was left with no alternative but to let the situation slide, since the students refused to reveal names of the individuals who had cheated.

Academic dishonesty was addressed by a Senate subcommittee in 1974 which advocated the institution of an honor code at Villanova. However, the idea was rejected, and in 1980 the Senate dismissed the issue because there were no reports of flagrant violations of cheating or plagiarism.

Perhaps part of the blame for academic dishonesty rests on faculty and administration for turning their backs to cheating students.

How many professors leave the classrooms during exams?

How many professors give the same exam to several sections at different times?

How many exams have been given in overcrowded testing situations that invite wandering eyes and academic dishonesty?

Unfortunately, cheating in one form or another is accepted among many students. This dishonest attitude must change in order to have an honor code effectively installed at Villanova.

Students must realize that cheating is wrong, sinful and dishonest.

Students who cheat not only hurt themselves in the long run by not gaining knowledge, but they also hurt those who do not cheat.

Grade point averages, class curves and Villanova's integrity lose all meaning when cheating occurs on a regular basis.

Attitudes must change, stricter penalties must be enforced, and an honor code must be implemented immediately to secure Villanova's future as a fine institution of higher learning.

Update book borrowing system

The new dorm storm anti-vandalism campaign is a great idea to curb campus destruction in the dormitories. But we can't stop there.

Vandalism control in Falvey Memorial Library must be implemented immediately, as we are losing many valuable books and materials each year.

The University should invest in a more effective book tracing system where texts are equipped with metal devices that set off an alarm if taken from the library unaccounted for.

The current system where a library employee glances at half-opened bookbags to check for library materials is archaic and costly. Villanvoa must update their loan system to reduce stolen library books.

Letters to the Editor

Unified graduation urged

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to assistant dean of students, Christine A. Lysionek's letter concerning the 1988 graduation ceremony.

As a member of the class of 1988 I was surprised to read that, "The decision to return to separate ceremonies was made after carefully weighing both the problems and advantages associated with a single, outdoor ceremony."

The question is, "Who weighed these advantages and problems?" It is clear that it was not the members of the class of 1988. It is also clear that there is no current plan to consult the members of the class of 1988 on exactly how they would like to graduate.

The format of graduation should be voted on by the class of 1988. After four years of working toward graduation day, we have earned the right to decide the style of our graduation ceremony.

I feel very strongly that the format of graduation should be the choice of those graduating. Not one of the problems raised in Lysionek's letter is unsolvable.

For example, when the Villanova football team played Holy Cross in November, the stadium was filled to capacity and all the cars of those attending had a place to park. Also, during the football season, shuttle buses were run from the St. David's Inn.

Since hundreds of parents will be staying at the St. David's Inn, this is a logical solution to a major part of the parking problem. In regard to the weather, thousands of graduations are held outdoors every year in the month of May and all the institutions which hold these ceremonies formulate plans in the event of inclimate weather.

I find it difficult to believe that Villanova University could not do the same.

The format of graduation should be voted on by the class of 1988. After four years of working toward graduation day, we have earned the right to decide the style of our graduation ceremony.

Organizations should unite

By MICHAEL A. DE ROSA, JR.

Too many times since I have been at Villanova, have I heard of a lack of cooperation and communication throughout all factions of the University. Well, I believe that the first step towards a unified Villanova has come out of the Office of Student Activities.

In response to student leaders' requests, the staff in 214 Dougherty Hall has been instrumental in planning and executing three activities which will "break ground" for better understanding and future cooperation between major campus organizations.

In the fall, a leadership day was held in King Of Prussia for the executive boards of the major student governance organizations. These groups include the Resident Student Association, the Association of Commuting Students, Student Government, the Villanova Union, the Interfraternity Council and the Panhellenic Council. Also included in this day was the Villanovan and the Blue Key Society.

The day included leadership training, instructional workshops, icebreakers and (most importantly) the opportunity for each president (or editor) to get up and say something about their group.

Many of those who spoke not only spoke highly of the activities and campus involvement their group was involved in, but also took the opportunity to dispel some of the myths which everyone turns into stereotypes. The feedback was positive and some of the results could been seen in greater inter-group activities and communication. This day led to the timely fireside chat in December.

The fireside chat placed these same groups together (with additional new board members) in the Villanova Room with the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students and Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life.

The night began with an icebreaker, but led to an exchange which helped to start many a dialogue. Stack and Neville discuseed their views of student organizations and how they view the University in the next 10 years.

They entertained questions from student leaders about fraternity expansion, plans for the west campus and other concerns. It seemed as if the hot topic of the night was the fraternity and sorority roles in the University. The imaginary lines which students use ;to classify Greeks and non-Greeks were being explored more fully. Due to time limitations the discussion was short, but many students in attendance went away feeling more informed and as if they had made new contacts throughout the campus.

Now that the ball was rolling, Student Activities couldn't help but plan a third 'leadership event'. This meeting, co-sponsored with the Villanova Leadership Society, will be taking place on April 6 in the Villanova Room.

The topic of the evening will be ethics and should produce some interesting results. Students are looking forward to this event, not only for its educational value, but also for the opportunity to meet and work alongside their fellow campus leaders.

Now the important question: why should this concern you, a student who is not on these executive boards? Because these major organizations, in some way, represent you. If you are Greek or non-Greek, a commuter, off-campus resident or campus resident, a politically active or politically non-active student, a programmer or a programmee, an interested reader of the Villanovan (which obviously you are) you are important and have a voice on this campus.

It's not up to those boards to tell others how you feel — you can tell them how you feel! Talk to those who represent your interests — better yet, get involved with these groups and make your voice heard.

Through cooperative efforts, combined events and mutual understanding, all of us can help make Villanova a place to call home.

Michael A. DeRosa, Jr. is a graduate student in the higher education counseling masters degree program and staff assistant in the Office of Student Activities.

Athletes should receive stipends

By JIM BOWMAN
Assistant Sports Editor

Although I have always been a devout fan of college sports, I did not truly understand the passion and allegiance of the collegiate fan until I became one this year.

When a group of students get together to shoot the breeze, the conversation inevitably drifts to the fortunes of the basketball team. There must be enormous pressure on these players to succeed, especially in a program that traditionally produces winning teams.

For their four years of commitment they receive a free ride — tuition and room and board. Not bad. But also not enough.

Playing Division I sports requires total commitment. It is difficult enough managing an academic schedule, but players who commit themselves completely to a sport have no time to take a part-time job to pick up spending money. The NCAA should establish a graduated scale, based on the family's financial need, for monthly payments to collegiate athletes.

The cynic to this proposal will immediately interject, "But the school is giving them a free ticket to the future. What more do they deserve?"

How about a free chance to enjoy the present?

They provide a majority of students with something to look forward to every weekend. If their financial need warrants $50 or $60 a month to stop for food after practice or to call home or to take in a movie, then why not?

I agree with the vigilant struggle by the NCAA to eliminate alumni misconduct. However, if the NCAA cuts off the illegal money supply to student-athletes from boosters without dealing with the problem of financial need, they are treating the symptoms, not the disease.

If student-athletes in need are not given the opportunity to use any of these great purses their schools devour from sell-out crowds and juicy television contracts to fill basic necessities of a college student, do not look for overzealous alumni with padded wallets to go away.

As a matter of fact, they will probably be here to stay.

Seniors refute policy

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to assistant dean of students Christine A. Lysionek's letter concerning graduation. Lysionek wrote a very solid letter which clearly listed and explained the reasons behind the decision that was made regarding graduation.

Lysionek states, "The decision reflects our unwillingness to risk having the success of an event, which should be enjoyable and rewarding for our graduates and their families, hinge upon the promise of good weather." For more, the key words in that statement are not "good weather"; they are "unwillingness to risk."

The most desirable graduation ceremony is one that is outdoors and unified. This ceremony has successfully come off in the past and it can happen again.

The reason it is not going to be outside this year is because it "might" rain. As a vital, young senior who is about to break out into the real world, I must say that this reasoning does not sit well with me.

Many of us have had things done for us our whole lives. We have been told what to do, and we have dutifully followed orders. We have had our decisions made for us, our tuition paid for us; you get the picture.

What I am trying to say is, "Take a risk!" Students, get off that bar stool and write a letter. Administration, flirt with Mother Nature; do not let her bully you.

We have worked hard and have formed strong friendships here at Villanova. Graduation day is the bittersweet culmination of the four greatest years our young lives have known. It is a day we will remember forever; tearful hugs with friends, proud smiles from parents. We want to be together on this day, and we want to be outside.

We are going to be on our own very soon and we have got to learn to take chances. If we follow the example set by the administration and take the safe road, think how boring our lives will be. I shudder at the thought.

Risk taking is what life is all about. Imagine the wonderful feeling we would all leave here with, if we actually got together and achieved this goal. Even if it rains and we end up having it inside anyway, we will still have the satisfaction of knowing we did everything we could to make it work. To me, and to many others, it is well worth the risk.

In closing, I would like to directly address those individuals who are charged with making this decision. I implore you to rethink this very important issue and to let the seniors get involved.

Hold a meeting or conduct a survey; just give us a chance to be heard. Who knows, maybe we can come up with some useful suggestions.

Policy unfair

To the Editor:

As graduating members of the class of 1988, we share a common complaint with many other seniors regarding the segregation and indoor placement of the commencement exercises to take place in May.

After spending four years of our lives studying, partying, learning and growing up with the same students, we simply would like to spend a few hours graduating with them — together and at the same time.

If the choice was put to the senior class, as it should be, we would be graduating outdoors as a unified body of family and friends.

Why not let the graduation ceremony reflect the wishes of the graduates?

Art not offensive

To the Editor:

We are writing in response to the letter in, the Feb. 5, 1988 issue of the Villanovan regardaing the offensiveness of George Huffman's exhibit of paintings entitled "Sex, Terror and Other Flights of Fancy."

While respecting the authors' opinions, we could not help be dismayed by a number of their reasonings.

It seems the authors of the letter are confusing surface images with substance, for example, mistaking the depiction of figures for the meaning of the art.

If the authors feel that the visual images are offensive to the eye, we agree. Indeed, the images depicted are horrifying, yet it would not be proper to label Huffman's work inappropriate and offensive for a Catholic university.

If one views the paintings with a limited, confining scope, he fails to see that Huffman's style of presentation reinforces the primitive brutality of acts such as abortion and nuclear war.

When examined on a deeper level, fusing titles, style and image, it is apparent to us that Huffman is conveying the brutality of such acts. His method of exposing the real horror of essentially dehumanizing aspects of life indicates a concern with having the viewer see the injustice and moral issues at hand in the paintings. One is cheating his higher instincts if he dismisses the art as offensive based solely on the figures depicted.

Of as great a concern to us is the authors' implied notion that Huffman's work is not appropriate as it conveys rebelliousness and lawlessness.

It is the spirit of rebellion which has often fostered positive change, and while it is not our intention to equate Huffman's art with rebellions such as the Civil Rights Movement and the Women's Movement, we feel that if Huffman succeeds in making the viewer think and re-examine his position on the themes depicted, his rebelliousness and his art have served a purpose.

Most disturbing is the claim that the authors are not suggesting censorship. Certainly it is censorship, hiding behind the guise of respectability.

Perhaps the issue here, then, is not the appropriateness of Huffman's art.

Perhaps the issue here, then, is not the appropriateness of Huffman's art. Maybe it is a problem of conventionality.

Over a century ago, Charlotte Bronte wrote, "Conventionality is not to assail the last."

We urge those who found Huffman's art offensive to look at the art again, more thoroughly, and with an eye toward understanding.

Senior Week

To the Editor:

The senior week committee has already begun meeting to plan the week long events of senior week. We are a 12-person committee with representatives from each of the six major organizations on campus.

For the time period between the last day of finals until graduation weekend, the committee is ready scheduling events such as: the final days celebration, the golf outing and the senior picnic.

We have also discussed the possibility of bringing back an old tradition: a senior gift to the University. After asking people individually, we have realized that a senior gift is an important decision which should be open for comment by everyone.

We are not doing a formal survey although we are looking for as much input as possible. This is your opportunity to speak up and voice your opinion, whether you feel strongly for or against re-instatifig a senior gift.

Please drop off any comments or ideas you may have to the Villanova Student Union Office in Connelly Center. All information should be addressed to the senior week committee.

It is up to all of you to let us know how you feel. We would like this to be as much of a unified decision as possible.

Security thanked

To the Editor:

On Jan. 2 over 500 students driving from all parts of the U.S. arrived in Philadelphia to attend the National Catholic Student Coalition leadership conference.

Heidi Rojas, transportation chairperson, arranged the schedules of anticipated arrival times. However, the high cost of parking in the city forced us to find alternate arrangements. The option of parking at Villanova was presented to the students.

As a member of the transportation committee I would like to thank Security for all of their time and effort in assisting with the parking arrangements. They were very helpful in assuring the students that their cars would be safe in the main lot during the week.

Tradition promoted

To the Editor:

I would like to commend the Villanovan for printing the splendid article in the Jan. 29 issue "Academic freedom disrupts Catholic teaching" by Gerald Lee, class of 1945.

The currently popular business of bashing papal credibility and theological orthodoxy has gone far enough on the campus of a university whose tradition is steeped in loyal Catholicism.

The opposition thinks they alone are to be followed ... some, when challenged, retort, "How uncharitable!" (a counter challenge, among many). Was Christ uncharitable when He reproved challengers to His divine teaching?

Biblical references to "false prophets" still apparently apply, and those who would challenge the Church's credibility appear to be at odds with the mission of Villanova University. That is the way it has always been understood by my family, interested supporters, some graduates and now successes in life.

They, also, are to be heard in this serious matter.

Valentine's Day: The legend lives on

By JACQUELINE GENTILE
Assistant Features Editor

You better start sending those flowers and mailing those cards because the most romantic day of the year is just around the corner. For centuries, St. Valentine's Day has been a day dedicated to lovers. Even if you do not have a sweetheart, the festive traditions associated with Valentine's Day are enough to make you fall in love with love, at least for the day.

Perhaps appropriately so, no other holiday is surrounded with more myth and mystery regarding its origin. Several theories exist to account for the traditions associated with Valentine's Day, and some of them are decidedly unromantic.

Little is known about the life of St. Valentine, except that he was a priest who was beheaded on the date of his feast day in Rome, about 269 A.D. To complicate matters, there is a second St. Valentine whose feast day is also Feb. 14. He did not fare any better than the first. He was also beheaded in the third century outside of Rome.

The name St. Valentine's Day and the festivities that surround it seem contradictory. What does a priest who was canonized a saint have to do with sending love notes to our sweethearts? The answer is absolutely nothing. There is no connection between romantic Valentine's Day traditions and the lives of the two St. Valentines, except that by chance we celebrate those traditions on their feast day.

How then did we come to associate February with love, romance and all the sweet nothings that go with it? One theory which existed in Europe in the middle Ages claims that birds begin to mate on Feb. 14. But, if you feel that the mating patterns of birds does not quite make the grade in explaining how we connect lovers and Valentine's Day, do not worry. There are plenty of other legends.

Valentine's Day may be a christianized version of the ancient Roman feast Lupercalia. On this day of worshipping certain gods, women placed their names in a hat and the men drew them out. Each man courted the woman whose name he chose for the next year — or at least for the day of the festival.

The clergy, who found this pagan practice highly objectionable, substituted saints' names for women's names and, for the next year, each man was supposed to imitate the saint whose name he received. Indeed, this made for some passions that were raging rather than romantic.

The feast of Lupercalia occurred in the middle of February, and most likely for the sake of convenience, the feast day of St. Valentine was chosen for the day of the celebration.

Regardless of how Valentine's Day emerged as a time for lovers, traditions have surrounded the day for centuries. In England, people believed that the first person you encounter on the morning of Valentine's day would be your true love. Also in England, people believed that one could discover who his or her true love was through a dream induced by pinning five bay leaves to one's pillow.

In America, we are surrounded by cupids, flowers, heart shaped boxes of candy and hearts pierced with arrows — traditionally a symbol of union. But most of all, we are flooded with Valentine cards from family, friends and lovers.

The first commercial Valentine's card was produced in the United States in 1840. Since then, people have gone to the trouble of sending their Valentine's cards to towns with romantic names, to be postmarked and forwarded. Some of these towns include Love, Mississippi; Darling, Pennsylvania; Romance, Arkansas; Eros, Louisians; Kissimmee, Florida and Loveland, Colorado.

So, to all you sweethearts out there, now is the time to be romantic — that is, if you need a reason. Do something special for your honey. Or if you would like to be very traditional, send an anonymous love letter to that person you have been watching with "private eyes."

If you find yourself valentineless this year, do not fret. You have a couple of options. You can pin bay leaves to your pillow and keep hoping, or you can go out and buy your own box of candy.

Philadelphia musicians perform for peace

By IRENE V. LANGRAN
Staff Reporter

On Feb. 7, approximately 20 Villanova students and faculty members joined musicians, business executives, nurses, doctors, psychologists, lawyers and educators for a single event and purpose. The event was a concert at the Philadelphia Academy of Music. While that is not unusual, there was indeed something quite different about this evening's performance.

The purpose of the evening, symbolized by a dove and olive branch, was to show support and hope for peace and nuclear disarmament. This year's concert was the third such concert, and is a result of a group of Philadelphia musicians coming together to use their musical talents for this cause.

They formed the Philadelphia Musicians for Nuclear Arms Control, and held their first Concert for Humanity in April 1983, and their second in November 1984.

The concert itself was conducted by Riccardo Muti, and performed by members of the Philadelphia Musicians for Nuclear Arms Control, which includes artists from the Philadelphia Orchestra, the orchestra of the Opera Company of Philadelphia and the Pennsylvania Orchestra. It featured music from Bellini, Beethoven and Tchaikovsky.

What made this concert so memorable was not only what the evening stood for, but how this was stated throughout the evening's performance. The ambassador, Ralph Earle II, one of the nation's top authorities on nuclear disarmament, spoke on behalf of the many people who worked to bring this concert together.

The Villanovans who attended the concert were organized by philosophy professors Dr. Barbara E. Wall, O.P., and Dr. Walter Brogan. Wall and Brogan teamteach a course in Peace and Justice. Wall is a member of the Educators for Social Responsibility, which, among other activities, seeks to promote an awarness of the dangers of nuclear war.

Through this education, Wall and Brogan hope to teach people how they can take responsibility for creating a safer world.

At the end of the performance, all attending were invited to toast the occasion. The Villanovans, in a toast proposed by Wall, joined other professional organizations in expressing the hopes for a safe and peaceful future.

Important to many of the students was that they were able to be a part of this endeavor, alongside lawyers, doctors and many other professionals. The feelings of many of these students were expressed when Bernadette Coll, a Villanova junior, stated, "As students we are preparing for our futures, and if we don't protect it now, it might not be there later."

Activists activate

By MARTIN KELLEY
Staff Reporter

On Feb. 5, over 700 student activists converged on the New Brunswick campus of Rutgers University for the three-day 1988 National Student Convention. They came to plan the direction of a national activist movement. They left making a stand for the direct democratic process.

These students have been active in many different causes. Some were involved in the fight for college divestments of South African interests. Others had protested CIA recruitment on college campuses. There were those who called for an end of funding of the Contra rebels in Nicaragua, and those who led the fight to solve the problem of America's homeless. But it was not these causes that were the center of attention.

The debate centered around the distribution of power within the national organization that was to be set up. This debate often took form along factional lines, which were most clearly drawn out by a delegate from Berkeley, Bill Nesson.

On one side was the Sectarian Left, which idolizes figures such as Marx and Lenin, and whose authoritarian structure anger many in the activist movement. Nesson charged that this group's "inter-necine ideological battles" were partly responsible for the destruction of the anti-apartheid movement of 1978.

Another faction of student activists at the convention were the so-called Progressives, who emphasize electoral politics as the method towards change. Although more palatable to many at the convention than the Sectarian Left, Nissen and others distrust their top-down approach to organizing which emphasizes elites and sees "the majority of people as incapable of moving and directing themselves."

In between these two factions lie the "mainstream" of present-day student activists, identified by Nissen as the Radicals. This group believes in grassroots direct democracy and direct action, a confrontation designed to force people who have closed their eyes to social problems to make a moral stand on an issue. An example of direct action is the construction of shanty towns on many college campuses to demonstrate the plight of South African blacks.

The first day was full of factional fighting among many of the students. The three political factions were debating each other, with the Marxist-Leninists incurring the most anger and condemnation. In addition to this, many minority groups left marginalized by the heavily white heterosexual makeup of the delegations. For example, the people-of-color caucus pointed out that their 2 percent of the convention was under-representative of the national student population. Further tensions arose when smaller schools worried that the larger delegations, such as Berkeley, M.I.T. and Rutgers, were dominating all of the debate.

The third and final day saw the confrontation heat up when the people-of-color caucus demanded that no constitution be ratified by the convention as their under-representation would invalidate it. This anti-constitutional movement was quickly joined by other marginalized groups and by the Radical faction which felt that the drawing up of the constitutional proposals had not included the majority of the convention delegates.

After much debate, Berkeley and the other large schools agreed that no constitution should be ratified.

The delegates then agreed on increasing diversity and decided on holding regional conferences in the next few months, culminating in another, more representative, conference next year.

The 1988 National Student Convention thus adjourned without any constitution passed. To seniors who might not see another convention, this was somewhat of a disappointment. But, a clear message was sent as to the future of a national student movement.

What's coming up

By KAREN IOVINO

Do you find that recently you have the winter blahs? Are you tired of watching the same old shows on television? Then why not add a cultural aspect to your life? Exhibits, films and lectures fill Villanova's calendar in the coming weeks.

If you are a movie fan, the Spring 1988 Cultural Film Series is examining the "Cinematic Images of Women." The third film in the series, "Therese," was shown Feb. 6-8 in the Connelly Center Cinema. The French film centered on the life of a Carmelite nun, Therese Martin. Known as "The Little Flower," Therese died at a young age from tuberculosis, leaving behind her diary. "Therese" is loosely based on the contents of this diary.

Following the showing on Feb. 8, Joan D. Lynch, director of the Cultural Film Series, held a discussion on the film and its concepts, especially the meaning of a "simple life."

Interested in the happenings in the Middle East? The 1988 Spring Lecture Series focuses on contemporary Arab and Islamic societies. On Feb. 9, Villanova's Institute for Contemporary and Islamic Studies, together with the sociology department, co-sponsored a lecture titled "Contemporary Lebanese Society." It focused on prominent issues in the Middle East today. Professor Samir Khalaf, of Princeton University, hosted the lecture.

Why study foreign languages

By THERESA JONES
Staff Reporter

As Villanova students receive a diverse education with the University's core requirements, the study of a foreign language is an integral part of a liberal arts education. Unfortunately, a majority of students fail to realize the potential value of this course of study.

For many, the language courses are seen only as credits to get out of the way before receiving one's diploma. In reality, a handle on a foreign language can add great value to that diploma for students in any of the colleges, not just liberal arts.

As Ilse Hawrysz, one of Villanova's German instructors points out, "Not only is German the language of poets, philsosophers, artists, scientists and many of our ancestors, most German speaking countries are important trading partners and crucial allies of the United States."

Also, "German is one of the four languages useful for diplomatic negotiations on both sides of the Iron Curtain."

Clearly, familiarity with this language has usefulness for those who study the arts. But it is useful for business and those in technological and political fields as well. Considering the economic strength of Germany and Japan today, one could hardly deny the benefits of a familiarity with their words and ways.

In our world of telecommunication, international business and foreign marketing, there is a need to be acquainted with foreign cultures. Not many people would go into an interview or place of employment without knowing something about the corporation or company. Yet many Americans enter into dealings with foreign countries ignorant of that country's ways.

Ellen Hummert, a senior international business major, stresses the importance of understanding the point of view of foreign customers when marketing. Hummert said, "There are so many mistakes made in idiomatic expressions ... which can result in ridiculous or even offensive advertising.

The Rev. Kail Ellis, OSA, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, also recognizes the value a command of a foreign language can have in the business, banking and corporate worlds. "That is the reason why we at the College of Arts and Sciences have been stressing ... the modern language department." He points out the increase of credit hours for introductory language courses, and the addition of Chinese, Arabic and Russian courses in recent years, all "in recognition of the study of 'critical languages'."

Ellis tells a story of an economics student who began his studies in the Arab/Islamic field. The student works at a Wall Street bank and has expressed to Ellis that his knowledge of languages was a very important part of his obtaining that position. Anyone who has been in the World Trade Center knows that not only English is spoken within those walls.

Comedy comes calling to V.U.

By CINDY BOSNIAN
Staff Reporter

Ready to enjoy a good laugh and a bit of relief from homework before midterms creep up? Comedic Daze gives you six different ways to do it.

This symposium, presented by the junior class of the honors program, features six nights of comedy ranging from cartoons to commentaries. The program runs Feb. 15, 16, 18 and 23-25.

Each year, the honors juniors organize a symposium based on a central theme of their choice. This year's committee has been working since September to coordinate the program. Committee members chose the facets of comedy because they would be both "intellectually stimulating and fun at the same time," according to Christine Wnuk, chairperson of the committee.

Opening night on Feb. 15, in the Wayne-St. David's Room, features Jim Christy of the theatre department and Earl Bader of the English department. Both will speak about the history of comedy and its healing qualities.

On Feb. 16, also in the Wayne-St. David's Room, Barbara Dale, co-author of the risque Dale greeting cards and gift products, and co-author of The Working Woman's Book and The Joys of Motherhood, will provide a humorous insight into the world of an author and artist in the field of humor.

Featured on Feb. 18 will be Tony Auth, the Pulitzer Prize winning political cartoonist and satirist for the Philadelphia Inquirer. He will show a slide presentation of his most recent work.

The following week, on Feb. 23 in Connelly Center Cinema, author/producer/performer John Powers will reminisce about growing up Catholic in America. His books, including Do Patent Leather Shoes Really Reflect Up? and The Last Catholic in America, show us the need to laugh at ourselves and regard humor as a labor of love.

On Feb. 24 in Connelly Center Cinema, producer and creative consultant Gene Reynolds of M*A*S*H fame will discuss the role of social commentary in television.

To wrap up the symposium on Feb. 25 in 305 Tolentine Hall, the author of Devious Means (playing at Vasey Theatre in February), Bruce Graham, will investigate so-called "black comedy" — off-the-wall and taboo subjects. Graham will also amuse with tales of his life as a stand-up comedian.

With such a diverse variety of programs, you definitely do not want to miss Comedic Daze, which has something for everyone. All shows begin at 7:30 p.m.

A reflection on love for Valentine's Day

By LINDA JACZYNSKI

This weekend we celebrate both romantic love on Valentine's Day and filial love on Sibling Weekend. How important both of these loves are in our lives. Yet I become more and more aware of what a romanticized idea I have had about love. It is an underlying expectation in our society that people grow to a certain age, get married, have children and "live happily ever after."

Everyone is "hungry for love" and "cannot wait to have children." This ideal called marriage and family that we dream about is, in reality, filled with hard work. It demands perseverance and commitment, even when we do not feel like it. It requests that we accept another in their good and not so good qualities.

True joy and true love is often born after much labor, pain and sacrifice. We can enjoy the good feelings that love can bring, but it is when we share the hard times and come out on the other side together that love is purified and edified.

Love is never cheap. Few of us want to readily give what love requires of us.

Love brings two people to commitment, and can lead to the creation of a family. Nothing so deeply touches us as our family does. So much of who we are and who we have become has been built on the foundation of our childhood years spent in the presence of our parents and siblings.

Their ability or lack of ability to love us within the context of their life situation forms a strong basis of our ability to love ourselves. Their love for us has so often made us happy. This is the reality of love that both fills our heart and requests that we stretch our heart to attend to another before ourselves.

There is a complexity in our relationships with mom, dad, brother, sister, husband or wife. We can often hear of the ideal family situation, but that limits and depreciates the depth and diversity of these relationships.

Love and hate, and attraction and fear often live side by side in our interactions with others. It only seems natural that we would feel these same variety of feelings in family relationships, which are the deepest and have the most impact on our lives. To the same degree that we love those who are the most intimate with us, we will struggle with them as well. But these can be the challenges that lead to growth.

It is often easier to live the gospel of love in our world than it is to authentically live that message in our homes. After all, these are the people who come in contact with our personalities day in and day out. These are the people who see us when we have put our masks away and let our real selves hang out. In the same way, we see their real selves. It could be so easy to turn it off or shut it out.

We can use these opportunities to learn about ourselves and the many ways that we all still need to grow. If we can love in this context, we, in some small way, approximate or reflect the unconditional love of God. God knows all about us and still chooses to love us.

Foreign language

Americans tend to think that everyone knows English, so a foreign language ability is not necessary. While the Europeans do indeed place a much greater emphasis on language study, believe it or not, not everyone does know English. While a language ability may not be necessary for the English-speaking, it is still a great advantage.

International businesses are always looking for employees; and those applicants with a language background possess an asset which could prove to be the edge necessary.

Even for the traveler who merely plans to visit a foreign country, some familiarity with what one will encounter can make the trip much more enjoyable by reducing the frustrations of communication barriers. Additionally, the citizens often appreciate any extra interest and attempt of the visitors to truly experience what the country has to offer, and become even more friendly and helpful.

Considering that many young people in America have foreign speaking relatives only one or two generations back, the lack of interest in cultural heritage is amazing. True, the U.S. is a "melting pot," but so much individuality and value is lost when the melting is over.

The revival of education in the language and ways of the world beyond our borders is therefore a must in today's world. The University has realized this and is taking steps to implement such a revival. They are even considering introducing Japanese. Now it is time the students realize how valuable this field of study is for reasons both practical and pleasurable.

Black Cultural Society hosts Black Greek Festival

By KAREN M. MITCHELL
Staff Reporter

If you walked by the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse Saturday you would have heard loud festivities eminating from inside. The occasion was the Black Cultural Society's Second Annual Black Greek Festival.

The festival consisted of a series of events including an open house from 6-8 p.m., a dance party from 8 p.m.-2 a.m., with an hour interval for a Greek stepshow. The stepshow is when each Greek organization does several different dances and chants, along with their organization's song.

Some of the schools represented were Temple University, University of Pennsylvania, Drexel University and LaSalle University. The Greek organizations representing these schools included Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity, Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority and Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority.

"The festival was a great success," said Karen Peterkin, secretary of the Black Cultural Society and a primary organizer of the event. "We raised $3035 in comparison to last year's $771."

She attributes the success of this year's festival to the fact that more people knew of the event and the appeal of disc jockey Jeff Mills from Power 99 FM. Mill played the music for the festival's dance party.

The purpose of the event was to inform students at Villanova that black fraternities and sororities from area colleges are interested in recruiting them. In turn Peterkin states, "There are black fraternities and sororities that need recognition on Villanova's campus."

In the future the Black Cultural Society plans to hold another Black Greek Festival in addition to a number of other activities and events. Anyone interested in becoming a part of the Black Cultural Society stop by their office in 108 Dougherty Hall.

For Your Health

By TARA L. BURKE
Staff Reporter

No matter how healthy you are, discovering the role that certain nutrients play in hypertension can reduce your risk of heart disease. By making some dietary changes, you may be able to prevent, or at least control high blood pressure.

Everyone should have a blood pressure check. Systolic pressures under 140 and diastolic pressures under 90 are considered normal in adults. A high systolic pressure — the first and highest number of your pressure reading — is hazardous. Systolic is the amount of force on the artery walls when the heart beats.

High cholesterol levels are related to coronary-artery disease, with cigarette smokers, diabetics, the obese and the sedentary at highest risk. By lowering blood cholesterol we can slow and perhaps reverse the progress of atherosclerosis.

You are never too young to have your blood cholesterol levels monitored to detect inherited forms as well as high levels due to diet. Recommended cholesterol levels for people in their twenties are below 200mg/dl.

Here are a few suggestions to take to heart:

1. High calcium intake may lower blood pressure — use skim milk, low-fat cheeses and yogurt.
2. Buy lean cuts of meat and trim off visible fat, and remove the skin from poultry before cooking.
3. Add new flavor to your vegetables with herbs and seasonings instead of butter and sauces — onions and garlic have been shown to keep blood pressure in check.
4. Try fruits and unfrosted cookies and cakes in place of gooey desserts.
5. Pasta, rice, bread and cereal are low in fat and rich in nutrients.
6. Be aware of hidden sources of fat, such as sauces and frostings.
7. Eat fish and have a meatless meal about once a week.
8. Bake, steam, roast, boil or broil foods instead of frying them.
9. Limit yourself to two egg yolks a week.
10. Potassium rich foods — potatoes, bananas, broccoli and cantaloupe — may help the body rid itself of sodium.

So take action in controlling hypertension and keep in mind that the best protection is still to exercise, eat a low-fat, low-salt diet and do not smoke.

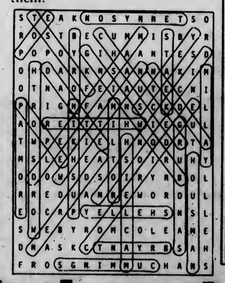
Cultural events yet to come at Villanova include art exhibits and theater productions. Located upstairs in the Connelly Center, the Villanova University Art Gallery is featuring the exhibit "Assemblages in Mixed Media." This artwork, created by artists Bob Clore and Gary Woodward, is being shown until March 4.

The Villanova Art Gallery is open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. on weekdays and from 12 noon until 9 p.m. on weekends.



If you are a theatre enthusiast, the Villanova Theatre is presenting the comic drama "Devious Means" in the Vasey Theatre. The play will be showing Feb. 10-13 and Feb. 16-21.

"Devious Means" focuses on the search for fame, wealth and the "good life." Performances are at 8 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays, and at 2 p.m. on Sundays. Tickets can be obtained from the Villanova box office.

So instead of sitting in your dorm room complaining that there is nothing to do, why not get out and take advantage of these opportunities to enjoy an event and increase your knowledge at the same time? You might be surprised at how much you enjoy them.

Vasey play entertains

By ALLEN AMBROSINO
Assistant Entertainment Editor

"Devious Means," created by playwright Bruce Graham, is a play which appears, at first, to be a comedy filled with hilarious one-liners and off-beat characters. However, after watching all of the action, it is obvious to the audience that the play is much more than just light-hearted humor. During the second act, a vagabond named Dudley (Paul Guerin) effectively addresses many of the everyday problems in today's society. His down-to-earth attitude makes "Devious Means" a successful, well-rounded production.

Dot's Diner offered a very realistic setting from the authentic Coke dispenser to the semi-worn booths for the customers. The set designer, Eric Schafer, did an excellent job creating this small, out-of-the-way diner. It even had a high chair for the little customers who happened to stop by from time to time.

The action begins with Izzy Spiegelman (Beth Dannenfelser) and Tony Di Sardo (Jeffrey Voice) conversing about several topics. Spiegelman is the waitress for her mother's diner and Di Sardo is an unsuccessful barber who works across the street. They are both stuck in their present-day jobs, but wish for something more out of life.

Because of Voice's typical Italian appearance and loud stage presence, he is the perfect person to play the role of Di Sardo. His spontaneous comments throughout the play caused the audience to praise him with their laughter several times. The way that Di Sardo handles all of his potential customers is one example of his unique style and personality.

On the other hand, Dannenfelser aspires to be a ballet dancer and is determined to be a success. Her demanding role was handled with a great deal of skill as she displayed a wide range of emotions during many of the scenes. There were a few times when she over-acted, but they did not have an adverse effect on the authenticity of her character.

Many times, the supporting actors in a production make a major contribution to its success. Dawg (Alcide C. Hobbs) and Bill (Randy Wise) are two totally opposite characters; one is wild and carefree while the other is very timid and easily embarrassed. The most enthusiastic performance of the evening was given by Hobbs as he leaped around on stage, with his punk-rock appearance and cocky attitude. Several times, he combined with De Salvo to form an unbeatable comedy team. Their comments about Gilligan's Island and The Brady Bunch had everyone in the theatre rolling in the aisles.

Dot Spiegelman (Barbara P. Little), Sandra Wimbleton (Carolyn Noone) and Nick (Dave Fiebert) each made their own special contributions to the play. Little was bubbly and energetic as the owner of the diner and would-be victim at the mall. Meanwhile, Noone and Fiebert complemented each other when they tried to get an exclusive interview to achieve immediate success.

The character that at first glance looked like a worthless bum, ended up to be the most substantial person in the play. Dudley Fuggitt (no pun intended) has many flaws that are made evident through the dialogue in the diner. However, he represents the truth and goodness of mankind and brings up many serious issues. His character is fully developed in the second act and it allows "Devious Means" to develop a serious side to go along with the constant comedy.

A different twist was added to the play when all of the characters had their own monologues. They personally talked to the audience and most of them were filled with endless one-liners which were, for the most part, entertaining. "Devious Means" will be playing at Vasey Theatre on Feb. 13, 14 and also from Feb. 16-21. It is a play that will entertain you, but it will also leave you with many questions running through your mind as you leave the theatre. For tickets or information, call the box office at 645-7474.

Chad Lowe matures as an actor

"Apprentice to Murder" directed by R.L. Thomas
New World Pitures
½

"Apprentice to Murder," the New World Pictures release starring Donald Sutherland, Chad Lowe and Mia Sara, is a movie that is hard to classify. It is not a slasher flick, a horror movie or a love story, although it has elements of all three of those genres.

"It's whatever you want it to be," said Lowe (yes, Rob's younger brother) in a recent interview at the Four Seasons Hotel.

However, ambiguity is not what great films are made of. "Apprentice to Murder" is an okay flick, but will not be a smash at the box office because it tries to be too many things at once.

"Apprentice to Murder" is the tale (based on a true story) of a medicine man and his apprentice in the 1920s. Donald Sutherland portrays John Reese, the "Pow-Wow" doctor. "Pow-Wow" medicine is based on medieval methods that are a cross between faith healing and sorcery.

Sutherland's portrayal of Reese is so subtle that the viewer is not completely aware of how unbalanced Reese is until the very end. It is a shame Sutherland's talents are wasted in a movie that will go nowhere.

Mia Sara, the girlfriend in "Ferris Bueller's Day Off," again has a girlfriend role. She plays Alice Spangler, an independent girl who plans to leave her small town and make her fortune in Philadelphia.

But the moviegoer's attention is drawn to Lowe in "Apprentice to Murder." For someone making his screen debut, he brings an innocence and believability to the character of Billy.

Billy is spiritually seduced into the dark world of "Pow-Wow" medicine, by Reese. Billy is skeptical of Reese's power at first, but is hooked when he witnesses the effects of the medicine man, including his father's being cured of alcoholism.

When asked how Billy was different from himself, Lowe replied that he is not as naive as Billy. As for being alike, they both were ready to get out on their own at the age of 16.

Reese draws Billy in primarily by teaching him to read and write. In a parallel way, Sutherland taught Lowe about acting.

"Not that he sat down with me and said, 'Chad, this is how to be an actor.' I learned by watching him. He's a pro personified," commented Lowe.

Also on the subject of Sutherland, Lowe added, "He's really weird, but also warm and sensitive. He knows so much about books, too. I felt like I had to go out and read because I didn't know what he was talking about."

Before appearing in "Apprentice To Murder," Lowe played a troubled teen who committed suicide in the telemovie, "Silence of the Heart."

This movie is equally as dark. "It was a little depressing," said Lowe. "It got to me a little bit, because it deals with what's real and how."

When asked if he believes in the occult, the main theme of the movie, Lowe replied, "I don't know much about the occult to say yes or no, but I do believe in fate."

The occult is the first main theme in "Apprentice to Murder." The other two are the love relationship between Lowe and Sara and Billy's maturation. As Billy matures, so does his relationship with Alice. In the end, it is the relationship with her, not Reese, that lasts. The love scenes between the two are touching.

Lowe was asked if any on-screen romance had developed during filming, and said that it had not. His comment on Mia Sara, "I haven't cracked that nut yet."

Billy comes of age in "Apprentice to Murder." Lowe described his character as someone who loses touch with reality for a brief period. He tries so hard to get out of a lifestyle he wants no part of (Billy is a poor farm boy), that he cannot discern the line between good and evil.

"Apprentice to Murder" shows the growth of Chad Lowe as an actor. Unfortunately, it tries to expand into too many themes and does not work as a film.

Once upon a time, there was an excellent show on ABC Tuesday nights called "Moonlighting." It was about an ex-model who ran a detective agency with her happy-go-lucky partner. The detective show spoof proved to be one of the most creative, innovative and hilarious programs on television.

These days, "Moonlighting" is nothing more than a melodramatic soap opera about whether or not the two partners, Maddie and David, will make a commitment to each other, despite all the obstacles in their way. It is hard to believe that this is the same program everyone was raving about last year.

"Moonlighting's" problems are numerous. First and foremost, each episode takes an unbelievable amount of time to make; the producers claim that this is necessary to ensure the quality of the show. The cast and crew are sometimes kept waiting hours at a time on the set for their scripts.

The result of these production delays is an endless number of repeats.

This season, the production problems have been worse than usual. Cybill Shepherd was on maternity leave in the fall, and filmed most of her scenes at the beginning of last summer, but Bruce Willis was working on a movie and did his scenes later. Executive producer Glenn Caron, the brains behind "Moonlighting," was also working on a feature film, and was unable to supervise the show. The result of this madness was a batch of uneven episodes — some without Shepherd, and some without either of the series' two stars.

Even though Shepherd, Willis and Caron were reunited on the "Moonlighting" set last month, the show has yet to improve. Maddie's marriage to another man, in last week's episode, was completely out of left field. Enough with these neurotic storylines.

"Moonlighting" was at its best when Dave and Maddie were solving those ridiculous, but very funny mysteries. There was romantic tension between the two, but it was always a backburner storyline. Now, their so-called romance is the only storyline, and the episodes have virtually no plots. When was the last time Dave and Maddie worked together on a case?

There is no turning back for "Moonlighting" now, but at least the producers could send the two detectives back to work, with less emphasis on their romantic involvement and more emphasis on humor.

The audience is already showing signs that it is tiring of the show — its ratings are slipping, and several Michigan radio stations have launched a "Boycott Moonlighting" campaign, which is developing grass-roots support.

By the way, do not look for any more new episodes of "Moonlighting" to air until next month. The show will be pre-empted by the 1988 Winter Olympics for two weeks, and several reruns will be shown after that. ABC only expects about 15 new episodes to be completed this year, compared to 22 episodes for most other series.

MUSIC NOTES:

Bruce Springsteen brings his "Tunnel of Love Express Tour" to the Spectrum in Philadelphia on March 8 and 9. The E Street band joins him, making it the first time they have performed on the road together in two and one-half years. Meanwhile, the next single from Springsteen's "Tunnel of Love" album, entitled, "One Step Up," will be released Feb. 16 . . .

Grace Slick has announced that she will no longer tour with Starship, and that she may leave the group, depending on her negotiations with MCA, the group's label. Slick has been in the music business since 1966, when she was with Jefferson Airplane . . .

Michael Jackson will perform live on the Grammy Awards, airing March 2 on CBS. He will sing "Man in the Mirror" in his first live TV performance since "Motown 25: Yesterday, Today, Forever" in 1983 . . .

RCA Records is planning a follow-up to the "Dirty Dancing" soundtrack, titled "More Dirty Dancing," which will be released in March. The first LP spent nine weeks at the top of Billboard's album chart . . .

And on a humorous note, Squeeze's new single, "853-5937," is wreaking havoc for those unfortunate enough to have that now-famous telephone number. Families in Birmingham, AL, and Worcester, MA have already changed to non-listed numbers, and a family in Brooklyn, NY has disconnected its phone altogether. The same kind of thing happened in 1982, when Tommy Tutone's "867-5309" hit number 4.

Superb seafood selection found

By THERESA JONES
Staff Reporter

Every now and then we all get cravings. Our tastebuds long for something more delectable than Pit or Spit fare, or frozen dinners thrown in the nuke-box.

Lately, my craving has been for seafood and fresh fish. The last good seafood I had was way back in August at a lobster feed in Maine. After living in Maine for several years, I developed the love for lobster, and there is little that beats it. But I thought I might be able to find something close enough to satisfy the craving, and headed to the Bryn Mawr Seafood Cafe.

The Seafood Cafe, formerly Winston's but under the same management, is located on Lancaster Avenue across from the Bryn Mawr Trust Bank. I met my former roommate, and we were seated near the bar in a well-lit section of the dining area. Had I been seeking a romantic atmosphere with someone of the male persuasion, I would surely have been disapointed, but since we were just catching up on girl talk and the area was not crowded or loud, the arrangement was fine. I would guess most couples are afforded the booths further in the back.

Our waitress came quickly to see if we wanted drinks. I considered wine from the wine card on the table, but decided against it. My friend, who knows more about good grapes than I, was not impressed by the selection.

We did choose appetizers from an extensive variety — New England style to Tex-Mex. However, the more traditional salad was the choice of my friend, and I had the baked onion soup. When faced with a crock overflowing with mozzarella, I was again glad that I was not trying to impress a new male friend, since it is difficult to be ladylike with cheese stringing from spoon to lips. I love cheese, but this was really too much.

While waiting (a bit too long) for our dishes to be cleared and the entrees to arrive, cucumber chunks with a tasty light marinade, rolls and oyster crackers were on the table for nibbling. They should have been avoided, though, because there was plenty on the dinner plate to fill us up. My friend chose Jambalaya, a combination of meats and seafood with a cajun spice creole sauce and rice. I did not hear any complaints, except that it might have been a bit too spicy.

My house special entree consisted of assorted seafood served on pasta with marinara (or creamy herb) sauce. Both plates were rimmed with mussels in their shells — visually appealing but somewhat awkward.

I was disappointed that the scallops did not taste like scallops. Perhaps the overcooking stole the flavor. The shrimp was better, and the marinara was spiced just right. The garlic bread which accompanied the serving was left untouched after one bite.

We left our meals not quite finished in order to save enough room to split a dessert. The desserts do not appear on the menu, but are memorized and rattled off quickly by the servers. I did catch carrot cake somewhere in the list of assorted chocolate delights, and a piece just the right size for two soon appeared. After a harmless mishap with my friend's tea (and profound apologies), two forks dug in and two sets of tastebuds were satisfied of the carrot cake craving for at least a little while. I have had better, but this was good. The bill was moderate to expensive, especially considering no drinks were ordered. The average meal would probably run quite beyond what the average student likes to spend for a meal, even when driven by the not-so-average craving.

Still, there were enough appealing items on the menu to possibly lure me back. Such variety may mean the establishment is trying to do too much, but overall, I would rate the food quite highly, only the service fell short.

Aside from seafood, one may sample meats, pasta, salads and American and Italian favorites. The crab nachos avocado appetizer caught my attention, and may warrant another visit to The Bryn Mawr Seafood Cafe. But they have cheese, too, so I had better not bring a male friend.

Books examine "Survivalist right"

By JOE McGOWAN

Armed and Dangerous: The Rise of the Survivalist Right
by James Coates
Hill and Wang

The premise of journalist James Coates' Armed and Dangerous is that the ushering in of a conservative era with the Reagan terms has pushed the American right-wing to new extremes. Whereas the '60s and '70s saw the violent left-wing activity of organizations such as the Weathermen Underground, the '80s are the age of The Order, the Posse Comitatus, the Bruder Schweigen, Ku Klux Klan and Aryan Nations.

Coates first noted the rise of what he calls the "Survivalist right" in 1984 when he was assigned to cover the assassination of Denver radio talk-show host Alan Berg by members of The Order, a neo-Nazi organization modeled after Hitler's SS that has grown rapidly in the West and Midwest. The Berg murder trial revealed that these right-wing extremist groups were not comprised simply of disgruntled and foreclosed farmers or ardent NRA advocates. Coates draws together the Berg murder, the armored car robberies by The Order, and the shootouts between federal authorities and the survivalist compounds to show that the movement is neither small nor disunited.

From The Order's armored car robbery that netted over $3.6 million to the spread of Identity Christianity (an anti-Semitic fundamentalist derivative creed obsessed with preparation for the apocalypse), Coates' account of the "survivalist right" is all the more chilling for the breadth of its scope.

The movement not only has its own computer networks, training camps, arsenals, newspapers, magazines, literature (The Turner Diaries, a post-nuclear war survivalist fantasy and, not surprisingly, Mein Kampf, are bestsellers), religion and educational system, but is so well organized and supported that no major American city or prison does not have its own chapter of, for example, in the case of Philadelphia, the Aryan Nations.

The most disturbing section of Armed and Dangerous is the discussion of the religious facet of the extreme right. Nearly every organization representative of the "survivalist right" believes in the imminence of the nuclear holocaust and assigns the responsibility for such to the Jews. In fact, certain neo-Nazi and survivalist Christian elements warn of the ZOG (Zionist Occupational Government) that controls both Washington and Moscow.

Coates' broad survey of survivalist and other right-wing extremist organizations is to be commended for putting together for the first time seemingly disparate acts of violence and racism. Coates' interviews and research link these groups together like the computer bulletin boards that keep members of the national Aryan brotherhood abreast of current activities.

The Fiery Cross: The Klu Klux Klan in American
Wyn Craig Wade
Simon and Schuster
★★★½

One of the survivalist-oriented organizations whose activity and membership has grown in the 1980s is the most popular American hate group, the Ku Klux Klan (the name is an amalgam of "kuklos," the Greek for "circle," and the clan ideal borrowed from the Scottish ancestry of the organization's founders). Wyn Craig Wade's The Fiery Cross offers a voluminous and rigorous history of the dreaded KKK.

Wade's dark chronicle portrays the movement's turbulent rise, from the days of its founding (Pulaski, Tennessee, 1866) to its fierce battles with civil rights workers to its immersion in the '80s in the survivalist right. Brought before the reader's eyes are several of the movement's Imperial Wizards, including Hiriam Evans from the notorious '20s Klan, Robert Shelton of the '60s, David Duke of the '70s and Bill Wilkinson of the '80s.

And Wade also brings into the picture the opponents of the Klan — from the harried Reconstruction prosecutors to the early NAACP to the SCLC (Southern Christian Leadership Conference) and the contemporary Klanwatch organization, steered by attorney Morris Dees of the Southern Poverty Law Center.

One of the most salient points of Wade's book is his exploration of the Klan mythos. The Klan has always inspired awe and fear not only because of its eerie ceremonial garb (the hooded white robes were intended, in the early days, to intimidate blacks into thinking that Confederate war dead had returned to champion the old order), but also its terminology and what could even be called its culture as well. The "Invisible Empire" is one that issues "Fiery Summons" to its Grand Dragons and Titans, Furies, Giants, Goblins and Genii.

Although Wade covers events up to early 1987, the book was out before the settlement of the 1981 Michael Donald case had been made. This involved the incident in which 19-year-old Michael Donald had been chosen at random on the street by a carload of Klansmen who proceeded to execute and hang the young black man for no other reason than to show that the Alabama Klan was alive and well. But this show of Klan power turned out, this year, to be the downfall of one of the larger United Klans organizations. A multi-million dollar restitution settlement was awarded to the victim's mother, Beulah Mae Donald, in a case brought by Morris Dees of Klanwatch.

Whitesnake stifles Spectrum

By RUSS CECCOLA
Senior Reporter

Whitesnake has been around longer than most people realize. Lead singer David Coverdale started his musical career with Deep Purple in the early '70s. After a brief stint, he went on to form Whitesnake, a band immensely popular on the other side of the Atlantic and pretty much ignored over here. That was true up to the release of the latest album, simply entitled Whitesnake. Even the last LP, Slide It In, did not garner as much fanfare. The success of Whitesnake spawned a headlining tour which stopped in Philadelphia last week at a sold-out Spectrum.

Opening band Great White are an underrated group of professionals. The band members' lives have revolved around music and they just get better with every album. In support of Once Bitten, Great White is: Jack Russell (vocals), Mark Kendall (guitars), Michael Lardie (keyboards and guitars), Audie Desbrow (drums) and Tony Montana (bass). Opening with "Shot in the Dark" from the album of the same name, Great White concentrated more on the latest album.

Russell kept the audience amused with what he was talking about and managed to get what was expected to be an audience ignorant of Great White songs to sing along resoundingly with him in "On Your Knees." From Once Bitten, "Lady Red Light," "All Over Now" and "Save Your Love" were played, with "Rock Me" saved for the end of the set. You have probably heard that song on the radio and if the response given to Great White on Friday is any indication of future success, expect to see them at the Spectrum headlining on the next album.

The success of Whitesnake spawned a headlining tour which stopped in Philadelphia last week at a sold-out Spectrum.

Whitesnake put on a very strong show, relying unfortunately only on the two latest albums, both on Geffen, for numbers. This is my major gripe with Coverdale and the show — that six albums' worth of material was neglected. With this stupid stunt, older Whitesnake fans were alienated and an audience that would be classified as fans of only the Geffen albums missed out on a lot of songs that they would probably love, like "Ain't No Love In the Heart of the City," "Walking In the Shadow of the Blues" and "Love Hunter." If you have only heard recent Whitesnake, do yourself a favor and get the older albums — purely dynamic material and Coverdale at his best.

Regardless of material selection, Whitesnake only performed 10 songs, two more than their opening act. If you are wondering where all the time went, it was spent on solos from guitarists Adrian Vandenberg and Vivian Campbell and drummer Tommy Aldridge. Bassist Rudy Sarzo rounds out the supergroup. Normally, lengthy solos are a nuisance. But, because of the incredible talent contained in Whitesnake, they were more than bearable. Still, more songs could have been played if the solos were shorter.

Opening with "Bad Boys," Whitesnake took the stage to a very warm and loud reception from Philadelphia. Packing all the power that they do on vinyl, the band effortlessly reproduced all of the hits from the Geffen albums, with an enthusiastic crowd helping out Coverdale on vocals more than usual. Coverdale's voice was very raspy and I suspect that his use of the crowd and echo effects was an attempt to make the vocal cords last for the rest of the night. Undoubtedly, the concert highlights were "Here I Go Again," "Slow An' Easy," "Crying in the Rain" and "Still of the Night," saved to the end of the set.

Philadelphia knew all of the songs and sang along, whether Coverdale requested them to or not. Anymore, once a band gets big, the fans flock to it like a fox in a hen coop, ready to digest all that is there. Coverdale has worked long and hard for his success and he deserves the attention that he has captured. Ironically, "Crying in the Rain" and "Here I Go Again" were on an album called Saints & Sinners over five years ago and nobody paid any attention. Makes you question the loyalty of fans, doesn't it? Is Whitesnake experiencing the Bon Jovi syndrome? Only another album can tell.

Responding to a virtual demand to return to the stage, Whitesnake re-entered the arena to play "Give Me All Your Love," following it up with a surprising, yet heavy, cover of ZZ Top's "Tush," changing the part of the female anatomy of the original in the chorus to a part higher up on the body that fits the lyrics quite well. That bit of ingenuity hints that the brash, rude and funloving Coverdale is still in there, coming out every now and then.

Whitesnake put on a great show and proved that they are now, as always, the kings of melodic, blues-based, hard-driving rock.

SKATE OR DIE •••• ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128

Skate or Die is the first skateboard game to be released for the home computer. Although only available for the Commodore 64, other versions are sure to follow. There are five skateboarding events for the player to compete in: downhill jam, downhill race, freestyle ramp, pool joust and high jump. All are a real test of joystick proficiency and require much practice to do well.

The graphics in Skate or Die are superb. They help the player get the feel of the skateboard. Controlling the board is easy; finishing the events successfully is hard. Downhill race is a favorite, throwing a lot of obstacles at you and putting you against a clock. The manual that comes with Skate or Die gives all the details of the game in no-nonsense skater's language. Humor runs rampant in this game.

SPEED BUGGY •••• DATA EAST C64/128, ST

This game is a home adaptation of a popular arcade racing game. In it, you control a dune buggy through obstacle-ridden courses, competing only against a time clock. The player can use small logs to jump in the air and tree stumps and small stones to turn on two wheels. Typical obstacles are road signs, giant logs and fences. Regardless of obstacles, Speed Buggy captures all the action of the arcade version.

The ease with which one can load the game and start playing is impressive. One does not need to read the manual except to find out the goal and discover the obstacles. This factor alone had me sitting at the computer for over an hour when the game came in the mail. It is as addictive as the arcade version and the graphics are just as good. It feels good not to have to part with a quarter to play Speed Buggy.

PAPERBOY ••••½ MINDSCAPE C64/128, ST

Paperboy is yet another arcade game adaptation for the home computer. As with the previous game, Gauntlet, Mindscape has accurately captured the thrill and challenge of Paperboy on disk. Considering that the original had the best graphics of any game at the time and a lot of memory, this is an accomplishment.

All of the challenges of the arcade game are in Paperboy. One must guide your bike up a street avoiding obstacles, while delivering papers to the doorways of the customers' houses with a press of the joystick button. One also uses papers to hit targets and non-customers' houses along the way.

The most interesting part of the game is the bonus round, a test to see whether one has control of the bike or are just faking it. The graphics for Paperboy are good and the replayability factor high. Delivering papers could never be this much fun.

ECHELON ••••½ ACCESS C64/128, AMIGA, ST

Echelon is the name of a secret starbase set up on the planet Isis to stop space pirates from attacking shipping and mining fleets. You have a C-104 Tomahawk at your disposal, with which you must explore 36 areas, with 196 sectors in each area, to find the Space Pirate Stronghold. Nine of the areas are mapped — you have to do the rest.

Echelon is a 3-D game using vector technology. Exploring is made even easier with a keyboard overlay card with all commands on it and The Lip Stik, a voice-activated joystick device that you can use to control your ship. The Lip Stik comes packaged with Echelon and makes the package more worthwhile. The manual also includes lots of hints and pertinent information. Echelon is easily one of the best flight games to come out in a while.

BISMARCK: THE NORTH SEA CHASE ••••½ DATASOFT C64/128

Bismarck combines a lot of different elements of war games and strategy games to make for a great challenge. You can choose to pilot the famous German ship of the title or command The Royal Navy and defend yourself from the Bismarck. In either case, the game is not a simple one to win. All factors have to be considered.

You have a lot of controls at your hands, from the air reconaissance screen (which allows you to fly a plane) to the bridge command (which allows full control of the ship of your choice). You have choices of different weapons to use and various strategies that can be followed. Regardless of the options at your command, the collective strategical use of the game's features is the key to doing well. Bismarck is yet another simulation/strategy game that is enjoyable to play, yet difficult to master.

GEOCALC •••• BERKELEY SOFTWORKS C64/128

This program is one of the latest additions to the GEOS system for Commodore computers. It is a spreadsheet program to be integrated with other GEOS programs and to expand the usefulness of GEOS applications. The spreadsheet is easy to use and all commands are entered through menus and icons with a click of the joystick.

The spreadsheet program allows worksheets up to 256 rows by 112 columns. You can use basic mathematical functions, accurate to 12 decimal places, and complex mathematical functions, accurate to nine decimal places. You can look at portions of two spreadsheets on the screen at once and print out data according to your own selection criteria. Also, different type styles are available for printing. Easily, this latest addition to the GEOS system is a welcome relief for spreadsheet users.

By KEVIN HECHT
Senior Reporter

Never Die Young
James Taylor
Columbia Records

His soothing voice is unmistakeable, his flowing lyrics are unique and he is in a class by himself, but it seems that James Taylor will never get the critical recognition that he deserves.

Taylor's music has been dismissed by critics who throughout his career have labeled the musician's work as simple and without substance. Taylor may not be a Bono or Sting in terms of depth, but he has put forth beautiful acoustically rich compositions with an almost hypnotic quality that have been matched by none.

This is Taylor at his best, of course. J.T. is quite capable of a clinker now and then, but by no means can his impressive list of classic compositions be dismissed. Taylor's latest work, Never Die Young, produced by Don Grolnick on Columbia Records, is a typical Taylor mix of the bold, the beautiful and the boring.

The list of Taylor's classic songs grows with the title track, which is a symphonic blend of flowing guitar and keyboard melodies layered with the harmonious mixture of gliding background vocals and Taylor's distinctive voice. The song's sleepy lyrics suggest an ear pleasing lullaby with a magical richness and warmth.

Never Die Young is a typical Taylor mix of the bold, the beautiful and the boring.

An equally amiable tune is "Baby Boom Baby," a melancholy melody painted blue with Taylor's classical signature of sadness. Again the lyrics flow and exude a heart touching emotion condensed in poetic lines that linger long after the song is through.

"T-Bone" is more of an upbeat Jimmy Buffet-sounding ditty that sails with a Latin rhythm punctuated by a piercing tenor saxophone. Similarly, "Sweet Potato Pie" is a soulful funky song that packs a bluesy punch, highlighting Taylor's tongue in cheek lyrics that also reach a high point in the sardonically humorous "Valentine's Day." ("Beneath the tide the fishes glide, Fin to fin and side to side, For fishy love has now begun, Fishy love, finny fun.")

A capella harmonization interrupted by rattling percussion provides a unique sound on "Sun on the Moon," a pleasing although forgettable song that shines light on the potent euphonic blending of Taylor's voice, along with the voices of long time band members, Rosemary Butler and Arnold McCuller. Butler and McCuller also lend voice to the optimistic and serene melody of "First Day of May." This simple tune is a bouncy vocalization of vernal joy. Enjoyable and carefree, the song is a delight.

Of course, there are the boring, such as the mundane "Letter in the Mail" and the sluggish repetition of "Home by Another Way." These songs may not work, but 10 of these for every one Taylor classic is worth it.

Although Sweet Baby James is beginning to show the signs of age, his music continues to evolve. Taylor continues to write and to tour with a seemingly new found peace of mind and a philosophy as he states on the album, to "Never give up, never slow down, never grow old, never ever die young."

Sinead O'Connor shocks with LP

By DINA INNELLA
Staff Reporter

The Lion and the Cobra
Sinead O'Connor
Chrysalis Records

Sinead O'Connor's new album, The Lion and the Cobra, is not something to be taken lightly. Her shocking voice combined with her uncompromising music makes the album an exceptional breath of fresh air. O'Connor's voice is alarmingly sweet and not unlike that of Kate Bush.

Be forewarned, 20-year-old O'Connor is completely bald, but according to Rolling Stone Magazine, not a Neo-Nazi skinhead. She claims that she shaves her head because she wanted to do something that makes her look "different." Here, in America, it may seem that her name (pronounced shin-ayd) may be unusual, but it Ireland, where she is from, Sinead is a very popular name.

For all U2 fans, O'Connor, according to Rolling Stone, has worked previously with the Edge on the single "Heroine" for the soundtrack of the film "The Captive." Her association with U2 got her the recording contract she needed to make her debut.

Although her looks and her name may be somewhat strange, O'Connor's voice makes up for it. Listening to her gives one the feeling that her voice is going to reach out and grab you. In all of her songs her vocals are strong, deliberate and unforgettable. "Mandinka" and "I Want Your (Hands on Me)," both dance tracks, are perfect examples of her forcefulness within her songs.

The Lion and the Cobra has a broad variety of dance tracks and ballads, which makes the album flow easily from song to song. There is also a diversification of subjects ranging from love to war. O'Connor produced the album herself and wrote or co-wrote the majority of the songs.

The album starts out with a haunting song, "Jackie," a ballad about a dead woman waiting for her Jackie, who was lost at sea 20 years ago.

In "Jerusalem," O'Connor's fluctuating tones are prevalent throughout. At one point the words become harsh and rapid and then at another point become soft.

"Troy" is about a jilted lover wondering "when the light died" as the tone eventually turns to anger with her screaming "you should have left the light on."

The album ends with "Just Call Me Joe," a sweet ballad with lyrics like "Don't call me sweetheart/ Just call me Joe/ Don't call me lady/ just call me Joe." What seems to be a love song has undertones of a protest against nuclear arms and other bad uses of technology. If listened to closely, a man named Leslie Winer is giving a speech in favor of using technology to help further communication and space travel.

The Lion and the Cobra currently tops the college album charts.

Cher gets 'Moonstruck' in new film

By MARYJO YANNACONE
Staff Reporter

"Moonstruck"
Metro- Goldwyn- Mayer Pictures Inc.
directed by Norman Jewison

The moon has long been regarded as an agent of romantic encounters deep in the night.

If you have ever felt the passion that comes with gazing at the moon, you have known what it is to be "Moonstruck."

Cher and Nicholas Cage star in Norman Jewison's film about love and life in the "Little Italy" of Brooklyn. A cute romantic comedy, "Moonstruck" comes without a message, but with a character, thereby making it enjoyable, if not award-winning. The movie says little of any relevance, but still manages to capture your attention.

The reason for the film's success certainly cannot be attributed to the storyline, which is weak and far-fetched. Rather, it is the ensemble cast, with their hysterical portrayal of a classic first-generation Italian family that saves the film.

The lead female character is Miss Loretta Castorini, a single brunette in her thirties played by veteran actress Cher. Among Cher's credits are the films "Mask," "Silkwood" and "The Witches of Eastwick." With a combination of humor and finesse that only women like Cher can master, Loretta provides a strong cornerstone on which the remaining cast can build.

Playing opposite Cher is young actor Nicholas Cage in the role of Ronny Cammareri, brother of Loretta's fiance and loathsome shopowner to his local neighborhood. Cage does a decent job in this film, although his past credits are less than impressive. His one shining star was his role in the critically-acclaimed movie about Vietnam vet, "Birdy."

Supporting Cher and Cage are several wonderful character actors who come together to become Loretta's Italian family and fiance, Johnny Cammareri. The latter is played by Danny Aiello, who has been seen in "Once Upon A Time In America," and Woody Allen's "The Purple Rose of Cairo," among others. A middle-aged man with an eternal emotional attachment to his dying Sicilian mother, Johnny finally decides to marry Loretta once his mother is gone. Like many first-generation men, he is a sweet gentle man who cannot "betray" his mother's love while she is still alive.

Rounding out the cast are Loretta's grandfather, Aunt Rita, Uncle Raymond, father Cosmo and mother Rose. Together, these men and women truly bring the film to life, using the cultural oddities of Italian-Americans to make the movie and themselves real. Loretta's mother Rose is undoubtedly the scene-stealer in the group, with her funny and insightful one-liners. Portrayed by Olympia Dukakis, Rose Castorini is the Italian mother we would all love to come home to: painfully honest yet wonderfully heartwarming.

Although the story leaves much to be desired, the sets and background music are fantastic additions to the film. Elaborate velour wallpaper, heavy use of red, green and gold, and Dean Martin's "That's Amore" all add color to the highly ethnic production. From bedboards to desk lamps, everything looks exquisitely authentic.

"Moonstruck" will definitely not garner any awards for its gripping social message or intricately woven plot, but it will be remembered as a film worth seeing.

It made me laugh and that is something not too many recent films have been able to do.

Cher stars as Loretta Castorini, a widow whose life is transformed when she unexpectedly falls in love with her fiance's brother in "Moonstruck."

Deadly virus invades in 'Outbreak'

By STEPHEN POWERS
Staff Reporter

Outbreak
by Robin Cook
G.P. Putnam and Sons

Imagine a highly contagious virus, one more deadly than AIDS, that becomes an epidemic and sweeps the country, killing everyone in its path. Then imagine that this virus is not occurring naturally, and that someone is intentionally spreading it. This is the plot of Robin Cook's latest novel, Outbreak, which is being released in paperback this month.

Cook is the physician-turned-best-selling author whose previous works include Coma, which was the basis of the very successful 1978 film. Cook's novels are always set in the medical world, but his earlier books were often slow-moving and more concerned with medical technology than action. Some, like Brian and Godplayer, became so bogged down with medical terms that it was almost a chore to get through them, something no author strives to achieve. However, Cook redeemed himself two years ago with the suspenseful Mindbend by cutting down on the medicine and focusing more on the plot.

Outbreak marks the further evolution of Cook's medical thrillers, and is easily his best book to date. The story opens at a pre-paid health clinic in Los Angeles, where one of the staff physicians comes down with a fatal illness and seems to have spread it to his patients.

Particularly effective is Cook's ploy in which the reader is not informed whether several characters are good or evil until the very end

Enter Marissa Blumenthal, a young doctor from the government-operated Center for Disease Control, who is sent to Los Angeles to contain the outbreak and find its source. Although the deadly disease is contained, and identified as Ebola Hemorrhagic Fever, its source is not discovered.

Strangely enough, the fever begins to appear in other cities, and Marissa must confront some difficult questions, as well as her own fears of contracting the disease. First of all, why is the virus the exact same strain as one that was supposedly wiped out in Africa over a decade ago? Had the virus been spread naturally, it surely would have changed to some extent. Also, why is the virus appearing at pre-paid health organizations, with a doctor as the initial case?

As Marissa unlocks the answers to some of her questions, she realizes that the people who are closest to her may be involved in a devious plan to spread the disease. What starts out as a relatively simple assignment turns into her worst nightmare.

While the plot of the story unfolds, Marissa is taken from city to city in a deadly game of hide-and-seek. Here, Cook displays his knack for action and suspense, creating a rollercoaster of surprises that no one, including Marissa and the reader, is able to get off.

He manages to keep the plot moving at a pace fast enough to make this story a page-turner, yet maintains the clarity of Marissa's every move. Particularly effective is Cook's ploy in which the reader is not informed whether several characters are good or evil until the very end.

As the story heads toward the climax, the reader is put through an emotional wringer. This book is for anyone who loves a good suspense novel, but do not try to read it before you go to bed, because you will be instantly awake. Outbreak is about as heart-stopping as a book can get.

"Cat on A Hot Tin Roof" roars

By JEFFREY P. GILLIES
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Tennessee Williams' classic play, "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," was brilliantly performed at the Walnut Street Theater Saturday before a near sell-out crowd. The acting and stage direction were superb, making the production a great success. This production marked the first time in 13 years that the Pulitzer Prize-winning play has been seen in the Philadelphia area.

The theater presented the 1974 version of the 1955 Williams' play. This rewritten version was Williams' favorite since it was both uncut and uncensored.

The plot revolves around the life of a couple, Brick and Maggie, whose marriage is on the rocks. Family and personal problems make things even more complicated, and the issue of homosexuality is examined. The play is set in the rural South and takes place in one room of a plantation house.

As Maggie, a wife who feels trapped like a cat on a hot tin roof, Jana Robbins gave an enthusiastic and believable performance. She knew her part well, and it reflected in her ability to project the thoughts and feelings of her character to the audience. It was not surprising to learn that Robbins had acted on Boadway in "Crimes of the Heart," another Pulitzer Prize winning play.

John Wesley Shipp stars as Brick, and is equally as impressive as Robbins. Shipp plays the part of an alcoholic, without giving in to the temptation of slurring his speech and stumbling around the stage, two actions which take away from the effectiveness of such a portrayal.

The supporting cast of Humbert Allen Astredo (Big Daddy), Mary Nell Santacroce (Big Mama), Jona Harvey (Mae) and Al Hamacher (Gooper) also gave fine performances. The children, referred to by Maggie as "no-neck monsters," were played by Jonathan Banta, Eva Greenstein, Candice Marie Samero and Christi Ann Samero. They were entertaining and talented.

The stage setting and general atmosphere of the theater also contributed to making the play an enjoyable experience. The props were realistic of the time and situation, and the people working at the theater were friendly and helpful. After the show, the house manager took money out of his own pocket to refund the money an elderly lady had paid for a hearing device that went dead during the show. The theater itself is both beautiful and charming.

Although "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" is no longer playing at the Walnut Street Theater, theatergoers can catch "Dusky Sally" starting Feb. 17 and running through March 13. For only the second time, the musical will be brought to the stage. Since there have been revisions in the script, the production will actually be a world-premiere.

The 1,052-seat theater is located at Ninth and Walnut Streets, and is easily accessible by train or car. The Walnut Street Theater is proud to be the longest continuous running theater in the United States. It is a great place to spend an evening or weekend afternoon.

Students may be interested in working as ushers at the theater, which would provide some extra income as well as the opportunity to see the show for free.

If you get the chance, the Walnut Street Theater is a great place to see a quality production.

Sequel released

By ELANA ROSE STARR
Staff Reporter

"There is no such thing as fate," scoffs a misguided character early in the French film "Manon of the Spring," and he comes to regret that statement. As the rest of the movie unfolds, we are shown what a large part destiny can play in people's lives, often with traffic consequences.

"Manon of the Spring" is the much-awaited sequel to "Jean de Florette." The films are based on the popular two-part epic written by French playwright/film director Marcel Pagnol. Both were directed by Claude Berri ("The Two of Us").

"Jean de Florette" features the prolific French film actor Gerard Depardieu as a hunchback who inherits water-rich acreage in the otherwise drought-stricken countryside of Provence.

Jean, a simple, good-hearted man, moves to the land with his beautiful wife and young daughter Manon. Jealous neighbors, Cesar Soubeyran and his nephew Ugolin, cheat Jean out of his birthright, leading to Jean's premature death. Jean's wife and daughter are left to fend for themselves.

"Manon of the Spring" picks up the story approximately ten years later. Jean's wife is now an opera singer, traveling throughout Europe. However, Manon, no longer a child, refuses to accompany her mother, preferring to remain in the countryside herding goats. She is an aloof young women who stays away from the townspeople and thus is unaware of her ethereal beauty and its power over men.

When Ugolin Soubeyran, now a homely, unmarried man in his thirties, happens to glimpse Manon bathing in a spring, he is captivated and wants to make her his wife. Manon, of course, is repulsed by Ugolin's coarseness and spruns him. At the same time, Manon discovers how Ugolin and his uncle, with the tacit complicity of the other villagers, wrested away her father's property. Manon then takes revenge.

American audiences love revenge movies; witness the success of the "Rambo" and "Death Wish" films, as well as most of Chuck Norris' movies. Typically, each of these pictures features a heroic agent who triumphs over thoroughly evil people through brawn and weaponry (any combination of knives, guns and karate chops), and there is an abundance of blood and violence.

In "Manon," however, the deployment of vengeance is much more sophisticated. This film's villians are not completely despicable beings, but rather fallible mortals who have given in to their greedy nature. In addition, retaliation in "Manon" involves very little gore; rather, it is achieved through the heroine's determination and the intervention of fate.

Berri has assembled an outstanding cast. Actress Emanuelle Beart, who plays Manon, has very little dialogue, but her flashing eyes amply convey the young women's spirit, and she is certianly beautiful enough to inspire Ugolin's adoration. For his rich portrayal of Ugolin, Daniel Auteuil won last year's Cesar Award (French equivalent of the Oscar). Auteuil forces us to feel pity for Ugolin — he is so lovesick — as well as hate him for what he did to Jean. As Cesar, veteran actor Yves Montand gives a complex, understated performance. By the end of the film, the viewer cannot help feeling sorry for Cesar because of the cruel cards destiny has dealt him.

Berri allows the narrative to unfold in a straightforward, unobtrusive manner, much the way an old-timer would pass on a story to younger generations. (Indeed, Pagnol's original novel was inspired by a supposedly true tale of a young woman trying to avenge her father's death.)

There is only one piece of fancy camerawork, early in the film, when Manon spies on a handsome young schoolteacher while wandering among her goats. Berri shoots the scene entirely from Manon's point of view, allowing us to identify with her almost from the start.

Do not feel that if you have missed "Jean de Florette," you cannot enjoy "Manon." The sequel stands on its own, and familiarity with the basic storyline is quite enough preparation for anyone to appreciate this beautiful film. "Manon" is currently being shown in an exclusive area engagement at the Ritz Five. Should you want to see "Jean de Florette," the Ritz is featuring one daily matinee performance of the prequel. Both films are in the original French with English subtitles.

Mark Plansky excels for 'Nova

By DOUG SCANCARELLA
Sports Editor

April 1, 1985. A date that will be cherished by Villanova fans everywhere — the day Villanova's men's basketball team captured the hearts of millions by downing the "unbeatable" Patrick Ewing — led Georgetown Hoyas for the NCAA championship. From that year one player remains — Mark Plansky.

Plansky, then a freshman, has blossomed into one of the Wildcats most valuable assets in 1988, his senior year.

Plansky came to Villanova in 1984 after graduating from Wakefield High School in Massachusetts. At Wakefield, Plansky, who started all four years, scored 1,798 points to make him the school's all-time leading scorer. He also attained honors such as Division II player of the year in 1983-84 and all-state honors in 1982, '83 and '84.

Additionally, he was noted for being one of the most versatile players of his class, playing all five positions.

Coming out of Wakefield, Plansky was highly recruited, but he finally picked Villanova after narrowing down his choices to V.U. and Duke. "I had my possibilities narrowed down to Villanova and Duke, but I stuck with Villanova because I liked the guys on the team. I wanted to stay in the Northeast, and Philadelphia seemed to be similar to Boston (where Plansky lived). I also liked Villanova because I followed the Big East in high school and I wanted to be a part of it," stated Plansky.

Boston College, the school Plansky's parents graduated from, never really figured into Plansky's plans. "I wasn't really interested in B.C. I knew their coach would be leaving soon," added Plansky.

Villanova recruited Plansky primarily as a shooting guard/power forward, but because of a lack of depth Plansky saw as much time underneath as he did outside. He thus received a reputation, as in high school, as an extremely versatile player. "I used to love to play outside, but after starting two years underneath, I feel just as comfortable inside as outside. I still enjoy the outside more, though... I have the ball more, I can shoot more and I get to pass inside," commented Plansky.

Freshman year Plansky, who started three games, saw valuable time off the bench. He was the seventh leading scorer on a team that included household names such as Pinckney, Pressley, McClain, McLain and Jensen. That team would eventually win the national championship.

Plansky broke into the starting line-up in his sophomore year, where he was mainly used as a power forward. That year, as the fifth leading scorer, he helped 'Nova to a 23-14 record and a second round appearance in the NCAA's. He also proved to be a tough rebounder as he managed to rank second on the team in rebounding behind Harold Pressley.

Plansky's junior year was a disheartening one. The Cats suffered a 15-16 record and failed to make the NCAA's, but Plansky still managed to have an outstanding year. Starting at power forward again, he led the team in rebounding and finished fourth in scoring.

Plansky is having the same type of year this season. He has moved back outside where he is averaging 12.3 points per game and is leading the team in rebounding for the second straight year. He is co-captain (along with Pat Enright) and has emerged as an excellent leader. He has 'Nova off to a 16-6 start along with a second place 8-3 record in the Big East.

It is a great improvement from last year and Plansky knows it. "Last year was frustrating, it was not a typical year. We just lost Harold Pressley and we had to rely on freshmen inside. This year we are a lot more experienced and there is a lot more chemistry."

Next year the Cats should have another fine year, but Plansky's skills will be sorely missed. His versatility will be hard to replace. However, Plansky's remaining career includes the remainder of the regular season, the Big East tournament and possibly the NCAA tournament. According to Plansky, "If you make the tournament and catch the breaks, anything can happen."

Ice hockey drops pair

By JOHN SWIFT
Statistician

The weekend of Feb. 6 and 7 offered to the Villanova hockey team and their loyal fans, if nothing else, a reason to believe that the future will be brighter for the team. The struggling Ice Cats dropped a pair of heartbreakers to Mercyhurst and Delaware at the Haverford Skatium in their final home appearances of the 1987-88 campaign.

In the first contest, matched against a quality Mercyhurst squad, the Cats suffered a disappointing 6-4 loss, with the final goal for Mercyhurst coming on an empty net in the closing moments.

Junior Sean Curran notched a hat trick and freshman George Schneider added the other goal for Villanova. Junior goalie Mitch Doren, who has played superbly this season, made 43 saves in the loss.

On Sunday, the Cats wanted to finish their home slate by playing well and defeating the Delaware Blue Hens. They played well, but once again, they wound up on the short end of a 6-4 score.

Sophomore Bob Ward, the Ice Cats' leading scorer, posted a hat trick while sophomore Kevin Stadtler was credited with the other goal for Villanova. Freshman Jim Clark and senior Dave Duffy split the time in goal for the Wildcats.

The Ice Cats will wind up their season by playing a pair of games at Notre Dame on Feb. 12 and 13. Their overall record is 7-16-1, and the team is currently posting a 4-10-1 mark in the ECAC South Conference.

Ice Cats Notes:

Freshman sensation, George Schneider, was named the ECAC "Rookie-of-the-Week" for the week ending Jan. 31. In three games, Schneider recorded two goals and five assists.

Swimmers end 12-3

By AMY C. SPENCER
Staff Reporter

The Villanova men's swimming and diving team (12-3 overall) heads into the Big East championships this weekend on a downward note. After a dominating start to the season, the Cats dropped their last three meets of the season by an average of over 50 points each to Army, Penn State and Navy.

During the regular season, the Wildcats had a 2-0 record in Big East competition. They defeated Georgetown in the first meet of the season 122-83 and St. John's felt the fury of the Cats as they lost 65-39 in December.

Perhaps the best performance of the season was at the National Catholic championships in which Villanova totaled 757.5 points to take the victory. Competition in the championships included Big East members Boston College (396 points), Providence (250) and St. John's (220.5) who finished in fourth through sixth places.

Since 1981, Villanova has not finished lower than third place in the Big East and they have finished second the last three years. The Cats go into the tournament expecting to finish second once again, this year to host school Pittsburgh. While an upset victory would be possible, it would be difficult for the Cats to pull it off. Pittsburgh is expected to be strong in most swimming categories and to sweep the diving events.

Still, the Cats are expecting a good meet. They are defending champions in five events: 500-yard freestyle (Chris Craft), 200-yard freestyle (Lou Dearstyne), 50-yard freestyle (Blaise Matthews), the 800-yard freestyle relay and the 400-yard freestyle relay.

The Cats are counting on junior Craft to help lead the team to a high finish. Craft, a holder of eight Villanova school records, has previously had outstanding performances at the Big East championships.

He has won six Big East titles in the last two years, four individual and two relay. He is one of seven swimmers who have won three individuals at one conference meet. In addition, Craft qualified for the 1988 Olympic trials, to be held August 8-13 in Austin, Texas, recently in the 100-yard butterfly.

The Big East championships are Feb. 12-14 at Trees pool at the University of Pittsburgh.

Gary Massey, who chipped in eight points against B.C., also managed to shut down Eagle point guard Dana Baros.

Cats stuff B.C. Eagles

"Gary Massey did a great job covering Baros," Greis commented, "We ran a little bit of a box and one on him for a while. We saw how Georgetown had shut him down in their second game and we tried to do the same thing."

The victory was indeed a big one, not only Big East-wise but in terms of the NCAA tournament as well.

With 16 wins, Villanova is probably only four victories away from a tournament berth. Though the remaining schedule is tough, the Wildcats have eight regular season games and the Big East tournament remaining, and look to be in great shape.

Who knows, if the team continues to improve as they have the entire season, in a few weeks the Cats might be humming the tune, Kansas City here we come!!

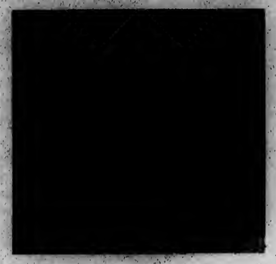
Runners qualify for IC4A's

By TERRY KELLY
Staff Reporter

This past weekend the men's winter track team traveled to New York for the prestigious Millrose Games indoor track meet. From looking at the results of the meet you would certainly not figure that Finn Kelly was a freshman competing in only his seventh track meet as a college student.

In only his seventh meet at the collegiate level, Kelly ran his way to fifth place in the college mile at the Millrose Games. In the race, the former meet record (4:00.82) of Villanova alumni Gerry O'Reily was shattered by Charles Cheruiyot of Mt. St. Mary's, with a new record of 3:57.95.



Kelly's time in the race was an excellent 4:06.48. Besides his place in the race, Kelly's time added him to the growing list of 'Nova athletes to qualify for the IC4A meet at the end of the season. His performance differed from the rest of the team's performances so far this year as he is the first runner to qualify for the NCAA championships to be held the second weekend in March.

The meet also saw an extremely strong performance from the two-mile relay team of Aidan O'Regan, Mark Sullivan, Howard Jackson and Bruce Harris. This relay team also added itself to the list of IC4A qualifiers with a time of 7:31.62 (splits 1:54.8, 1:51.6, 1:53.8 and 1:51.4 respectively).

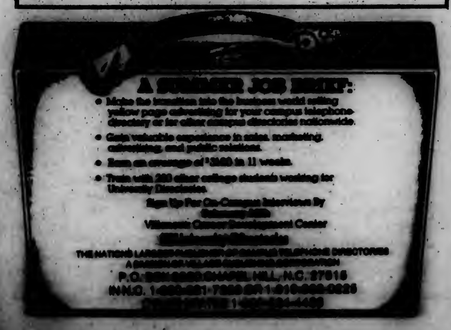
Their time had them finishing less than a second behind event winning Georgetown.

The team is now preparing itself for its next challenge at the Olympic Invitational in the Meadowlands. If the recent past is any indication, the team is in for a good showing.

Athlete of the Week

Lisa Angelotti

This week's Saco East athlete of the week is Lisa Angelotti.



Angelotti, a senior on the women's basketball team, led the Wildcats to wins over Boston College and St. Peter's this past week. In the Boston College clash Angelotti tallied a career-high 36 points and added 24 in the win over St. Peters. Angelotti also grabbed 16 rebounds in the two games, helping the Wildcats outrebound both teams.

Angelotti, who now ranks as the women's basketball team's leading scorer, has been the force that has led the Cats to a 1988 record of 16-5, 7-3 in the Big East.

Angelotti is a nursing major.

V.U. places 3rd in F&M tourney

Campbell leads wrestlers

By MONICA BYRNE
Staff Reporter

On Feb. 6, the Villanova wrestling team competed in the Franklin & Marshall Tournament, its last regular season tourney. The Wildcats placed third with a team score of 64.75, behind Franklin & Marshall (117.25) and Duke (105).

Leading the Cats this season in wins and pins is freshman Lyndon Campbell. Campbell, a two-time California state champion who was ranked No. 1 by Amateur Wrestling News, currently holds an impressive 18-1-2 record at 134 pounds and has already tallied six pins.

Commenting on 'Nova's third-place tourney finish, Campbell felt that, "Overall the team wrestled pretty well. Individually, the lower weights did a real good job."

Freshmen counterparts Greg Alfonsi (118 pounds) and Tad Thormodsgaard (126 pounds) joined Campbell in copping first-place honors.

Al Re took a second at 142 pounds and Jorn Erickson (150 pounds) and Tom Rogers (177 pounds) both wrestled to third-place finishes.

Pointing out that the team was at a loss because of injuries, Campbell said, "Where the other teams were competing in all 15 classes we could only enter 10."

Despite this handicap, Lyndon feels that tonight, the Wildcats will "try their hardest" to beat Moravian/Millersville at 7 p.m. in the duPont Pavilion. This willl be the wrestlers' final home meet of the season.

Wildcats ground B.C. Eagles, 66-54

(Photo by Shafie)

Wildcat guard Kenny Wilson scored 15 points in the Villanova 66-54 win over B.C.

By JOHN RICCO
Sports Editor

For teams with serious NCAA tournament aspirations, a 20-win season is a common mark to shoot for. To win 20 games, especially in one of the nation's top conferences, usually means an automatic berth in the tournament which, for many, marks the pinnacle of the sports year.

Last Saturday the Villanova Wildcats took a giant step towards "the NCAA promised land" with their solid 66-54 beating of the Boston College Eagles in the Boston Garden.

The Wildcat's 1987-88 out-of-conference-schedule is such that it is remarkably void of the so-called "gift" games with which many team's around the nation pad their schedule. If one looks at a list of the Wildcat's opponents only four or five fit into this category.

This means the team must accumulate 15 or 16 victories against the best competition the nation has to offer to make the tournament.

One place the squad looks for some easy wins is against its lesser conference rivals. Though talk of parity is sweeping through college basketball, there still remain teams which should represent wins for the Cats. The Eagles are one such team.

"We definitely can't afford to look past them (the lesser conference teams)," said sophomore center Tom Greis. "When you're playing a team who people think are a lesser opponent, opposed to a team like Pittsburgh, there is the temptation to take it for granted that you will beat them, or look past them to another bigger game. We can't afford to do that."

With such conference rivals as Pittsburgh and Georgetown coming in the next week, it would have been easy for the Wildcats to do just that, and look beyond the Eagles. Seton Hall and Georgetown, both losers to B.C., tried that approach and lost.

Fortunately, the Wildcats learned from both the Hoyas' and Pirates' mistakes, and their own (their 82-76 loss to seventh-place Providence), and set their sights fully on the upset-minded Eagles.

"We went into the game in a very business-like fashion, knowing that we had a job to do; to beat Boston College," Greis said.

To stop the Eagles means one thing- shutting down junior point guard Dana Baros. Baros, a preseason first team All-Big East selection, is averaging 21.9 ppg., and is not only the Eagles' floor leader but the glue of the B.C. team.

Though Baros managed to pump in a game-high 17 points he was not as big a factor as the Eagles would have liked.

Wildcats shine at Millrose

By MICHAEL E. JONES
Staff Reporter

People start to wonder what the Villanova women's track team will do for an encore as the indoor season unfolds. It always seems like once a Wildcat steps onto the track, the only real mystery is who will secure second place.

Well, this past weekend five Cats went up to the Millrose Games to show the New Yorkers what they were made of. Four runners garnished yet another victory and an American record. The fifth walked away with a collegiate record and the satisfaction of knowing that she is capable of running with anyone in the world.

Junior Vicky Huber knew what she was up against. The Panasonic Mile contained no less than five Olympians, two of them Gold-Medal winners.

Head Coach Marty Stern told Huber, "This won't feel like the Olympic Trials. This is what it will feel like running in the Olympics." It was by far the most competitive race of Huber's life.

"Vicky was a bit in awe of the competition, but didn't let it affect her negatively — she ran her own race and didn't let anyone affect her strategy." Huber ran one of her fastest half miles en route to a mile time of 4:28.31, a collegiate record and personal best, on a wooden track not designed for fast times. She hung on to finish third behind Romanian multi-medalist Doina Melinte and Britain's Kirsty Wade.

A little while later, the two-mile relay team, consisting of freshman Michelle Bennett and juniors Kathy Franey, Michelle DiMuro and Celeste Halliday, was in a world-record state of mind. The mark of 8:41.70 was unquestionably within their capabilities — it was now up the them to go get it.

Bennett got things started with a strong leadoff leg, drawing praise from Stern. "It's a big credit for a freshman to lead off at Millrose. She responded brilliantly to the pressure, and I was very proud of her," he said.

She gave the Cats an early lead and handed the stick over to Franey, who opened up more daylight and handed off to DiMuro. "I'd particularly like to single out Michelle," pointed out Stern. "I'm as proud of her as I am of any runner to ever attend Villanova. She has been in the shadow of some great runners, and at Millrose she came out and showed everyone that she is truly one of the finest runners in America, something which we always knew."

DiMuro blew the race wide open with a scintillating half in 2:06 and handed off to anchor Halliday. Unfortunately, a perfect evening was not to be. Stern explains, "We have Celeste run anchor because she responds best under pressure. We were on world record pace, yet we received no help — the Madison Square Garden announcer was giving the results of other races and never even informed the crowd of our status. The crowd can help push a runner against the clock, and might very well have helped us break the world record."

The Cats missed the world record by a tantalizing two-tenths of a second, and one can only wonder if it might have been broken had the crowd been a factor. Their time of 8:41.90 turned out to be an American and collegiate record, and makes them, along with Huber, heavy favorites for the NCAA's.

Angelotti lead Cats, St. Peters and B.C. fall

By JIM BOWMAN
Assistant Sports Editor

With the Big East Tournament and the NCAA's just weeks away, the Villanova women's basketball team started to pick up steam last week with victories over Boston College and St. Peter's. Their overall record now stands at 16-5, 7-3 in the Big East.

Senior forward Lisa Angelotti had a career week with 60 points, 16 rebounds, nine assists and four steals in the two contests. She was named Big East Player of the Week for her efforts.

In the Boston College game, Angelotti scored a career-high 36 points. Assistant Coach Lynn Tighe commented, "Our half-court execution was perfect and Lisa hit all the wide open shots. She was bound to have a game like this sooner or later."

Accompanying Angelotti's offensive explosion was the return to respectability of the Cats' rebounding game. After being manhandled by Syracuse on the boards two weeks ago, the coaching staff went back to stressing the basics of boxing out. The results: they outrebounded Boston College 26-23 and St. Peter's 38-31.

"All year we've been outrebounded," explained Tighe, "so we've really been stressing it during practice these last few weeks. Not boxing out was the problem and now they're concentrating more on it and having more success."

In the backcourt, sophomore Helen Koskinen has continued to excel at the point. She committed only five turnovers while scoring 32 points in the two games. Senior Teresa Pasik notched 24 points and an impressive 17 assists in the victories.

Not including the Feb. 10 game here against the University of Connecticut, the Cats' season includes only five more games, all conference match-ups.

Tomorrow, the Cats host Providence here at the duPont Pavilion. In a previous meeting, the Lady Friars rocked 'Nova 84-63, but Tighe believes this time around will be different.

"They're not a very good team on the road and we've improved since our last meeting, so it should be a good chance for a win-up-up."

Driscoll to speak at Senate today

Coed dorms to be discussed

By KEVIN C. HEIL
Assistant News Editor

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, will deliver his final State of the University address at the University Senate meeting scheduled for 4 p.m. in the west lounge of Dougherty Hall, according to Dr. Philip A. Maurone, Senate chairperson and physics professor.

The order of Senate business will also include a student life report on coed dormitories, according to the Senate agenda.

Maurone said he does not know what topics Driscoll will present in his address to the Senate.

Following the president's address, the Senate will announce that its next meeting scheduled for March 18, in the west lounge of Dougherty Hall will be postponed until March 25, and will be held in the east lounge of Dougherty Hall. The meeting is postponed in order to give the Senate budget committee the necessary time to prepare its report, according to the Senate agenda.

Also, Senate Budget Committee Chairperson Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance, will deliver a report on the progress of the Senate budget committee, and a progress report from the ad hoc committee on Security and parking policies will be presented as well, according to the Senate agenda.

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, said earlier this month that the report of the Program Evaluation Committee [PEC] on the Security department may end the need for the Senate ad hoc committee to present its own report.

Stack said that "because the PEC report thoroughly evaluated the problems present in Security and made subsequent recommendations, any further investigations by the committee will be redundant."

The last order of official business will concern a report on coed dormitories from the department of internal affairs of Student Government.

According to Phil Brach, Student Government president, "The goal of the report is to make coed dorms an official issue." Production on the report originally began two years ago, he added.

The Senate does not have the jurisdiction to vote on the issue of coed dormitories, so Student Government hopes to increase the power of the report by gaining the Senate's approval of it, said Michelle Ciccolo, secretary of the internal affairs department for Student Government.

"As a collective group, if they [the Senate] say 'we agree with what is stated here,' then it might bear more weight: when it does get to Father Driscoll and the Board of Trustees," Ciccolo said.

Brach agreed, saying that with support of the Senate, the report would be twice as strong, and the issue of coed dormitories would have a greater chance of being

"Student Government believes that coed dorms would be a substantial improvement to Villanova's campus," according to a report by the department of internal affairs for Student Government.

The report will be submitted to the University Senate today during its meeting in Dougherty Hall.

The report was compiled to address the issue of coed residence halls at Villanova. It includes research of previous studies of the issue, responses from other Northeastern colleges who have coed-ucational residence halls and surveys of students, parents and alumni.

Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, said, "I thought it [the report] represented a lot of work ... it seems to me that the outcome is not conclusive because equal amounts of people are both in favor and opposed."

Fifty Northeastern colleges were contacted in the fall of 1987 to obtain information on the successes and the failures of coed residence halls at their school. The report states, "All the letters received from the different institutions indicated an overwhelming success of coed dorms at their schools."

The report also asserts, "Since many Catholic institutions offer coed dorms, this is not a Catholic issue."

Michelle Ciccolo, secretary of the department of internal affairs, said, "It's a Catholic issue if you believe it's a morality issue."

Neville said, "Certainly there are many Catholic schools that have coed dorms, and it has worked out well."

Two of the schools contacted were Boston College and the College of the Holy Cross. A person from Boston College responded, "I will attempt to begin by expressing my shock that Villanova does not have coed halls, but alas, I already knew that."

The student survey, which was conducted in the spring of 1987, found that 91.6 percent of those surveyed were interested in coed residence halls. Neville responded, "That doesn't surprise me — I would expect the students to be supportive of that."

The survey of parents was conducted in the fall of 1987. Over 46 percent of the parents surveyed were opposed to coed residence halls and 47.4 percent had little

Barleycorn's Pub raided

By SHARON A. WATERS
Assistant News Editor

Seventeen Villanova University students were among 22 people issued citations for underage drinking at John Barleycorn's Pub, 654-656 Lancaster Ave., Bryn Mawr, on the night of Feb. 4, according to a Haverford Township police report.

Twenty officers from the Pennsylvania state police liquor control division and six Haverford township officers entered the bar at 10:39 p.m.

According to Sgt. Charles Brooks of the Haverford police department, the department requested the assistance of the state police to be able to better secure the area during the raid.

Brooks said that the police "have to be able to secure all the exits" and handle all the patrons.

According to one of the Villanova students involved, she now has the choice of paying a $348 fine or attending four alcohol awareness programs which require a $50 registration fee.

Drew Conboy, owner of John Barleycorn's Pub, said, "That is the first time we've [Barleycorn's] been hit" with a raid.

Conboy defined a raid as when the police enter the bar, the lights are brightened, music is stopped and business is discontinued.

Brooks could not be reached to verify Conboy's claim.

Conboy said that since October 1988, police have entered the bar in response to complaints about three or four times and did not find anyone underage drinking in the bar.

Conboy added that the week before the raid, Haverford police entered the bar and did not find any underage patrons.

Concerning Barleycorn's "continuing efforts" to crack down on underage drinking in his bar, Conboy said, "I think our reputation in general is quite good."

The student interviewed, who was involved in the raid, said she had used a license which had been changed with "white-out and make-up." She called the license "pathetic-looking" and said the bouncer at the door "laughed at it [the license] and then let me in."

The student added that one of the state police officers also laughed at her license and said, "I can't believe you got in with this."

Conboy attributed his record for being raided infrequently, which he considered "excellent," to "card[ing] heavy," an off-duty police officer who is sometimes in uniform at the door or inside the bar and the bar's reputation.

Also, a video camera was installed at the door last fall to protect the bar and discourage people under 21 from entering the bar, according to Conboy.

Conboy said that in the past some people have decided not to enter the bar upon seeing the video camera.

About 12 to 13 underage patrons admitted using fake I.D.'s [identifications], according to Conboy, and he said the others "said they weren't carded, which isn't true."

Conboy said the videotape from the night of the raid showed people presenting I.D. to the bouncers.

Conboy said he has collected about 40 fake I.D.'s in the past and that if someone attempts to enter the bar with an altered I.D., the bar will confiscate it.

Bridge to be replaced

By DANIEL MORIARTY
Staff Reporter

The Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority [SEPTA] has announced plans to replace four footbridges over rail lines in Villanova, Park View, Haverford and Bryn Mawr, beginning this spring.

The Villanova footbridge, which crosses the Norristown High Speed Rail Line near Moriarty Hall, is used by south campus residents as well as SEPTA commuters.

George Rice, manager of the footbridge construction project for SEPTA, said, "The replacements are part of a larger program to evaluate all SEPTA bridge and track structures."

Rice, who estimated that the bridges were at least 50 years old, said that SEPTA resolved to replace the pedestrian bridges after reviewing inspection reports.

The cost of the Villanova footbridge project is $235,000. The total cost of all four bridges is $975,000, according to Rice.

Mark Stitz, project manager for the construction company, said that although he did not know which bridge they will work on first, he anticipated that the entire project will be complete by the end of the year.

Both Stitz and Rice gave assurances that the old bridges will remain in service during the construction.

Restoration plans continue

By LAURA STEVENS
Staff Reporter

Efforts to raise money and refine plans for the Main Chapel restoration project are continuing, said the Rev. Shawn T. Tracy, O.S.A., director of Campus Ministry.

Tracy cited "obvious needs" in the chapel, which is more than 100 years old. Spots most in need of renovation include the floor, the benches, the sanctuary floor, the "poor" lighting and the wiring, which "is to the point of being dangerous."

Other plans include restoring the stained glass windows, updating the "outmoded" heating system, and possibly installing a climate control system, he said.

In addition to the physical needs in the chapel for renovation, there are liturgical needs in the building's structure and atmosphere. Tracy cited the priority established by the Vatican II council for developed liturgical designs and structures that will facilitate a spiritual appreciation of the church services.

"The flow of people in the service should be freed up for a spiritual sense ... as God's people, they should be flexible in heart and prayer and able to move to the altar at procession time and able to gather in such a flexible pattern as services such as baptism and matrimony would invite," explained Tracy.

Restoration plans would therefore include an effort to structure the aisles and benches in order to facilitate movement to and from the altar. Bench positions might be adjusted so that no location will block a person from a full view of the altar.

These needs may call for a change of the general chapel design. Tracy stressed, however, that "the traditional motif of the atmosphere will remain intact."

Costs for the renovations will be "well over $1 million," estimates Tracy. The University is planning to establish the Covenant III foundation to raise money for the restoration project.

The project "has already been started in terms of preparation," explained Tracy.

Tracy expects that the chapel will have to be closed for up to six months. "If we replace the floor," he said, "the chapel will be closed for some time."

He said, however, that most of the work will be done while students are away, so there will be a minimal disturbance of the spiritual atmosphere of the chapel.

Rutgers frosh pledge dies

By NOEL E. FALCO
News Editor

Rutgers University freshman James Callahan, 18, a pledge of the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity, died after an all-night party at the fraternity's house last week, apparently of alcohol poisoning, according to an article in Monday's Philadelphia Inquirer.

Callahan "reportedly was given a vomit bag and told to 'drink until you were sick,'" according to Monday's article.

Callahan was pronounced dead Feb. 12 at the Robert Wood Johnson University Hospital in New Brunswick, NJ., where he had been taken from the fraternity house, according to a Philadelphia Inquirer article Saturday.

Saturday's article also said that the fraternity house was left "destroyed" after the party and that several other students were found to be suffering from "apparent alcohol over-consumption."

Middlesex County Prosecutor Alan A. Rockoff said in Saturday's article that another freshman was hospitalized, treated and released, while several other students caused concern for the fraternity brothers, who observed their condition for several hours.

In Saturday's article, Rockoff said that about 40 or 50 fraternity members and guests attended the party. Police said that people had apparently been drinking a mixture of vodka, triple sec and lime juice, known as a "kamikaze."

According to Saturday's article, city building inspector Michael Gupko said the fraternity house was "literally destroyed" during the party and therefore he ordered the building vacated and padlocked. The New Brunswick police department reported Wednesday that the fraternity house was closed.

Investigators have not yet determined whether anyone will be charged in Callahan's death, said Rockoff in Saturday's article.

Rockoff's office has begun a criminal investigation of the incident, according to Monday's article.

The incident has motivated the university to ban indefinitely social activities by the school's nearly 50 fraternities and sororities on the New Brunswick campus, according to Monday's article.

About a week before this incident, 48 Princeton students who were attending parties to join campus eating clubs [the university's equivalent of fraternities] were treated for alcohol-related illness.

Student government to study scholarships

By JENNIFER REIDY
Assistant News Editor

In response to concerns with scholarships and financial aid, members of Student Government plan to establish a task force committee to examine the possibility of increasing the number of academic scholarships available to incoming freshmen, as well as to currently-enrolled students, according to Mark Holobetz, secretary of the department of academic affairs for Student Government.

Holobetz explained that presently, the only academic scholarships available to Villanova students are the 20 presidential scholarships awarded to high school students who apply to the University.

Because of the low number of scholarships offered and the selectivity of the decision process, the presidential scholarships serve to attract an elite group of students, the "cream of the crop" of high school applicants from across the country, Holobetz said.

He commented, "They seek to enhance and diversify the environment of the University by adding different characters of people to the community, as well as promote academic excellence."

The strongest argument against the increase of the number of academic scholarships is the fact that about one-quarter of the granted presidential scholarships are refused, according to Dr. Michael E. Burke, director of the honors program.

"The reason for this is most probably that the student was accepted somewhere else, and optioned to enroll there. Thus this defeats our argument to increase scholarships because we haven't justified why there needs to be an increase," Holobetz noted.

Burke commented that "this situation is the experience of most schools. It is nothing unusual.

"I would like to see an increase in academic scholarships, but not at the expense of regular financial aid programs. The problem is, where would this funding come from?" Burke questioned.

The recipients of the presidential scholarships receive a full four-year tuition scholarship, which does not include room and board. A minimum grade point average must then be maintained by the awardee.

"A committee composed of all academic deans, the dean of admissions and myself assess the applications, grant the interviews and make the final selections," Burke said.

Holobetz recently suggested that the institution of academic scholarships for currently enrolled Villanova students would "stimulate competition within the University as well as increase its academic atmosphere." He stressed that this issue is "not well-defined and very informal — it is still an idea."

"I don't see a motivational problem with students right now, and I wouldn't want to see a program that encourages cut-throat competition at Villanova," Burke said.

Holobetz elaborated that "these scholarships would not be awarded simply on academic merit, as in the traditional sense.

"The scholarships would be more like cash awards for research projects, based on the premise that the person could make a vital contribution to the community through his efforts," Holobetz concluded.

However, he said that such scholarships would not aid the student with tuition payments.

"The academic scholarships we have now attract the best students, while financial aid can attract many very good students. This then brings us to a separate problem — that of financial aid, which is extraordinarily lacking at Villanova," Holobetz noted.

"A formal competition [as Holobetz suggests] would entail numerous bureaucratic costs. However, I feel that current as well as incoming students have legitimate demands on a system of limited resources," Burke concluded.

Democratic Governor Bruce Babbitt

By G.J. DONNELLY
Staff Reporter

Former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt will have difficulty continuing his campaign after finishing sixth in New Hampshire's Democratic primary, according to an article Wednesday in the New York Times.

Babbitt finished sixth out of the seven candidates running for the Democratic nomination, garnering only 5 percent of the vote. Only Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado finished lower, gaining 4 percent of the vote. Babbitt also finished poorly in the Iowa caucuses held last week, placing sixth.

Babbitt's bid for the White House emerged from his reputation as a cooperative liberal populist willing to work out a compromise for the good of his constituents.

As a Democrat from a heavily Republican state, Babbitt, 48, served two terms as governor, starting in 1978, and managed to push through the conservative legislature innovative environmental and education bills to improve the state's sagging reputation in each area. The result of his work was a re-election victory by a large margin in 1982.

The main focus of his presidential campaign has been on the deficit and how to cure it. He calls for a 5 percent federal sales tax worth $40-50 billion a year when fully phased in. He would also tax the Social Security benefits of some wealthier people and would limit mortgage interest deductions.

To further reduce the deficit, Babbitt proposes half spending cuts designed to save another $40 billion in the first year. He also wants to implement a "universal needs test" to target spending on "entitlement programs," including Medicare and Social Security, only to the most needy.

He approves giving the president a line-item veto on specific spending, and is against the proposed balanced budget amendment and the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act.

Babbitt's liberal economic policy also extends to foreign trade. He supports an international agreement requiring each nation to balance its trade accounts with all countries, including the United States, over three years. Violators would be struck with phased-in tariffs of up to 100 percent.

Although a Catholic, Babbitt's views on social issues are liberal. He is for free choice on abortion but against federal funding except in cases of rape, incest or danger to the mother's life.

On foreign policy, Babbitt supports the INF [intermediate-range nuclear forces] treaty and is also willing to cut $10 billion from the defense budget. He also opposes Midgetman missiles and more MX missiles, but wants to increase conventional readiness.

Babbitt is also willing to continue research on the Strategic Defense Initiative [SDI], but will reduce spending on it. He is against aid to the contras, who are attempting to overthrow the Nicaraguan government. He is also against reflagging Kuwaiti tankers, although he is willing to allow the Navy to remain in the Persian Gulf to protect them.

Babbitt previously served as Arizona's attorney general before becoming governor when the presiding governor died.

Portions of this article were based on reports in the New York Times, People and the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Republican Governor Pete duPont

By G.J. DONNELLY
Staff Reporter

Former Delaware Gov. Pierre "Pete" duPont finished poorly in Tuesday's New Hampshire Republican primary, receiving only 10 percent of the vote. duPont rounded out the bottom of the list of current Republican candidates for the presidency, finishing last with former television evangelist Pat Robertson.

"duPont has no significant amount of money left, and his results here will not help raise more. duPont has no organization in the South ... so while he may decide to maintain a symbolic candidacy, his future impact is likely to be little greater than that of former Republican candidate Alexander M. Haig," according to an article in Wednesday's New York Times.

At 52 years of age, duPont became the first candidate to formally announce his candidacy for the nation's highest office. His notoriety has come from the somewhat controversial stands he takes on what he calls "damn right" issues.

For instance, duPont favors drug testing for students, cutting off subsidies for farmers and a private alternative to Social Security. His economics are also quite conservative.

duPont opposes any tax increase and derides the balanced budget amendment as "dangerously inflexible." He prefers a constitutional amendment limiting growth of federal spending with Gramm-Rudman-Hollins spending restrictions. Also, he plans to save $26 billion by cutting subsidies to farmers. In addition, he supports the line-item veto.

duPont strongly favors free trade and urges tax cuts in order to stimulate the competitiveness of American businesses abroad. In other foreign policy affairs, duPont supports the contras and the current administration's policy in the Persian Gulf.

The former governor also supports the Reagan defense budget, although he is unwilling to buy any more MX missiles and would close unneeded military bases in order to cut costs. He is a strong supporter of the Strategic Defense Initiative [SDI].

Although much of duPont's viewpoint mirrors that of the Reagan administration, he is staunchly opposed to Reagan's signing of the INF [intermedicate-range nuclear forces] treaty.

Before his election as governor in 1976, duPont served in the House of Representatives, but quickly tired of the Congressional grind. Eventually duPont gravitated toward the statehouse. His eight years is the governor's chair resulted in a drop in the unemployment rate from 13 percent to 7 percent.

Moreover, there was a cut in income tax from 20 percent to 9 percent, which resulted in a large influx of new businesses flooding in the state.

Recently, duPont finished fifth in the Iowa caucus Feb. 8.

New chairperson selected

By DANTE J. SCALA
News Editor

Dr. John J. Schrems, political science professor, will become the new chairperson of his department in September.

He was recommended by his department in December, after Dr. Priscilla Hopkirk, the current chairperson, declined to run for another term. Schrems said Tuesday that the recommendation was accepted by the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, in early December.

The chairperson-elect said he applied for the position because he "thought [he] could make a contribution" in terms of certain administrative skills.

His plans for the department include continuing the development of the international relations and comparative politics areas of study.

In addition, Schrems said he wants to pay new attention to American politics and create summer grants and workshops, involving University professors and graduate students, to study the subject.

"A chairperson has to be able to promote the interests of all the persons in the department" and aid faculty members in "bringing out the best" from within them, said Schrems.

Schrems obtained his bachelor's degree in history at Aquinas College, Michigan, and gained his master's degree and doctorate from the Catholic University of America. He has been a Villanova faculty member since 1965, leaving for one year to become academic dean at Mater Dei College, New York, according to the newsletter.

His articles have been published in The Review of Politics, The Political Science Reviewer and The Thomist. His book, Principles of Politics, was published by Prentice-Hall in 1986, according to the newsletter.

This is the first time he will serve as chairperson, said Schrems.

Hopkirk, the current chairperson, has held the job for a decade. She said she declined to run for the post again because "10 years seems like a good period of time."

Hopkirk, a University faculty member since 1967, will remain at Villanova, although she will be taking a sabbatical during the fall term.

She said she will use the time to complete her study of the political controversy surrounding the construction of the Blue Route, a section of interstate highway which extends from Chester and links with Conshohocken.

During her term as chairperson, the number of political science majors has tripled to 240, according to Hopkirk. Over the last two to three years, the department has rivaled the department of communication arts in terms of number of majors, she said.

Also, the department inproved its offerings in Mideastern and Latin American politics and public administration, and added a specialist in American political thought, she said.

Phila. archbishop installed

By STEVEN MONTRESOR
Staff Reporter

Archbishop Anthony J. Bevilacqua was installed last Thursday as the seventh archbishop of Philadelphia at the Cathedral Basilica of Saints Peter and Paul in Philadelphia.

According to the Philadelpia Inquirer, Bevilacqua accepted the symbolic staff of authority from Cardinal John Krol and called for the Philadelphia area's 1.35 million Catholics to "drive out demons of all kinds," such as drug abuse, racism, poverty and abortion.

Krol, 77, submitted his resignation two years ago, upon reaching the mandatory retirement age of 75. Bevilacqua, 64, will have to submit his resignation in 11 years.

Bevilacqua is the son of Italian immigrants who came to America in 1911 and originally settled in Queens, New York City. He is the eighth of 11 children.

His parents, Luigi and Maria, moved to Brooklyn shortly before his birth on June 17, 1923.

According to Michael Bevilacqua, a brother of the archbishop, in a related Philadelphia Inquirer article, their mother "felt that there had to be a priest in the house ... he had the feeling that he wanted to be."

Bevilacqua received his seminary education at Immaculate Conception Seminary in Huntington, N.Y. He was ordained in 1949. He later attended Gregorian University in Rome during the mid 1950's. He has also attended classes at Columbia University.

Bevilacqua was named auxiliary bishop of Brooklyn, New York City in 1980. He attended St. John's University at night during this time to earn a secular law degree, in order to help immigrants and refugees who seek the help of churches, according to the Washington Post.

Bevilacqua's appointment to the position of archbishop is expected to be seen as a drawback by those who want to see a wider role for women in the church, the article said.

In 1985, he directed priests in the diocese of Pittsburgh not to admit women to the Holy Week rite of foot-washing, reversing the present tradition. According to the Washington Post, his argument was that none of the 12 apostles whose feet Jesus washed were women. He concluded that the administering of this rite to women is erroneous because it has no precedent.

The Committee on the Liturgy of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops ruled one year later that women were to be included in the ritual, in response to a request for clarification by Bevilacqua.

In a speech after his installation, Bevilacqua told his audience that he already feels at home, "and this is now my home."

Tuition lowered at university

Washington University (of St. Louis) School of Medicine trustees announced Jan. 27 they were lowering tuition by five percent, or about $700, for next year.

The trustees said they were lowering the rates to try to relieve students of the need to enter only the highest-paying areas of medicine in order to repay their student loans. The American Medical Association found in 1987 that the average new doctor left med school $32,000 in debt.

"That debt may be forcing young physicians to select the higher-paying specialties in order to repay their financial indebtedness," said Associate Dean John Herweg in announcing the unusual rate reduction.

Herweg added he wished other schools would follow Washington's example, but the wish may not come true.

U. of Arkansas receives grant

The University of Arkansas [UA] was recently awarded a $91,500 federal grant to conduct a two-year drug and alcohol abuse prevention program. According to Julie Gram, UA student health services administrative coordinator, the program will target freshmen because they are a high-risk group.

The program will use a media campaign, classes, workshops and substance-free functions to change three aspects of substance abuse: attitude, knowledge and behavior.

Education budget may increase

After six years of cutting federal education funding by as much as 33 percent per year, the Reagan administration will apparently ask Congress to increase the education budget for 1989.

According to the Associated Press, the administration will pose a budget to Congress asking for $21 billion in federal education programs, ranging from preschool programs to college student aid. This is an increase from last year's request for $14 billion in education programs.

In June 1987, Secretary of Education William Bennett, hinted that the administration would be revising its strategy in education spending. This was followed by the 1988 education budget of $20.1 billion, which was approved last month by both Congress and Reagan.

Also, the Reagan administration's new program for U.S. savings bonds also relates to students. Reagan plans to ask Congress to approve legislation that will give parents a tax break if they buy U.S. savings bonds to pay for their children's college education.

On Feb. 12, several Villanova students demonstrated on the corner of Lancaster and Ithan Avenues to gather support for a pedestrian bridge.

Christopher McDonnell began the protest at 11 a.m. with four other students and a canvas poster with the slogan reading, "We want a bridge."

Chief protestor McDonnell explained the reasons for the demonstration. "I feel that a bridge would terminate unnecessary injuries and the general threat of dangers that we pedestrians experience every day," he said.

Doctor lectures on AIDS virus

By PAUL FRATAMICO
Staff Reporter

On Monday, Caroline L. MacLeod, M.D., gave a lecture on AIDS [Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome]. The lecture was jointly sponsored by the Sigma Xi Honor society and the biology department.

MacLeod's lecture centered around the causes and spread of a variety of infectious diseases, including AIDS, and their medical and environmental aspects and prevention.

According to Dr. Joseph Orkwiszewski, chairperson of the biology department, MacLeod said the best way of preventing AIDS is behavior modification. The safest behavior modification is abstinence from sexual contact. Improving environmental and health conditions would also contribute to public safety.

MacLeod noted that people who are ill or whose health condition is poor because of limited diet may be susceptible to the AIDS virus.

She also said that groups at high risk for AIDS included Haitians, members of the gay community and intravenous drug users.

MacLeod said that the exchange of certain bodily fluids among high-risk individuals was one vehicle through which the transmission of the AIDS virus may occur.

MacLeod stressed the importance of changing behavior patterns in preventing the spread of AIDS. She noted that condoms may not be an infallible preventative. Orkwiszewski said that his impression of her attitude was that education, improving health conditions and behavior modification were her primary prescriptions.

Orkwiszewski also noted that MacLeod cited mosquitos and horseflies as potential carries of the virus. However, in her lecture, MacLeod also pointed out that the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, Ga., did not recognize mosquitos or horseflies as potential carriers at this time. Her statements were based largely on her own data and observations.

She noted that there are people in the tropics who contracted the virus, were not in the high-risk group and did not imitate any of the behavioral patterns known to researchers that would explain how they contracted AIDS.

Tropical environments, including certain regions of Florida, were cited as the key places in which this type of mosquito activity could occur.

Orkwiszewski said that MacLeod's estimation of the number of mosquito bites necessary to transmit the AIDS virus was very high, but it must be remembered that in this area of Florida, mosquito concentrations are so high that these insects may bleed a cow to death.

Student threatens south campus R.A.

By COLLETTE S. MITCHELL

Radnor Township Police responded to a request for assistance that came from Villanova Security Feb. 6 at 1:50 a.m. The original call indicated that there was a student who was threatening a Resident Assistant [R.A.] with a cinder block.

According to a report from the Radnor Township Police Department, Michael Noonan, a student at Villanova University and a resident of Stanford Hall, threatened an R.A. in Good Counsel Hall with a cinder block. The Good Counsel R.A.s that were involved were Ellen Minzer and Caryl Duffy.

Radnor police took Noonan to the station, and he was issued citations for underage drinking, harassment, disorderly conduct and public drunkenness. He was held at the station overnight because it was felt that he posed both a danger to himself and to others in his intoxicated state.

Jeaneen Riley, south area coordinator, said that Judicial Affairs Officer Stephen McWilliams and the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, have been informed of the incident and a statement from them is forthcoming. McWilliams refused to comment when questioned about the incident, and Stack was unable to be reached for comment.

According to Noonan, nothing has been resolved yet with the police and with the University.

Lecture asks, Marxism: tyranny or liberation?

By THOMAS BRUGGER
Staff Reporter

The Villanova Political Union presented a debate, "Marxism: Tyranny or Liberation?," with guest speakers Tom West and Alan Spector, visiting professors, Feb. 11.

This was the first event of the year for the Political Union. President Sean Carroll, noting the sizable turnout, commented, "I was glad there was this much interest."

Incurring flight delays from a Chicago snow-laden airport, Spector was not present at the onset, but arrived approximately 45 minutes after the 3:30 p.m. start.

West, from the University of Dallas, thus began the event with his anti-Marxist arguments. One primary focus of his was the emphasis on the Marxist regime's elimination of the individual by the investment of all power into the proletariat class as a whole.

He said Marxism teaches that "a given individual among us is master of nothing." According to West, "The government is going to be constantly looking at anyone who wants to be an individual as an enemy of society."

In further description of this form of government, he explained that Marxists do not believe there is a God, and that "atheism is the beginning point of communism." According to West, the end that Marx expected to find from the implementation of this regime was a peaceful society without war.

Spector, from Purdue University, began his side of the debate without having heard a word of West's argument. While West had centered upon the actions of supposedly Marxist countries, Spector challenged the individual liberty assumed to be present in capitalist societies, such as the United States.

Spector depicted capitalist nations as alternating between two extremes, the mechanized world portrayed in George Orwell's 1984, and one devastated by anarchy and war. He contended that capitalism is ultimately based on corruption and that its greatest enemy is itself.

He said that Marxist philosophy was founded on Marx's thought that "we can and ought to have a world based on equality."

The problem that Spector judges as the downfall of liberation is the dollar. He said, "When you rely on the dollar, you inevitably introduce a poison into the system that will ultimately destroy it" and that "the reality of capitalism leads to the 'big guys' destroying the 'little guys.'"

Carroll, although happy with the number of students present, relayed some concerns for the future of the Political Union. He said, "In 1971, the Political Union was the largest extracurricular activity on campus, and now it is the smallest."

Carroll, a senior, is looking to build the union for next year with dedicated, politically-interested students. In recent years, while 20 to 30 people would attend the functions, many members would only come for those topics of personal interest.

Carroll said that the union is meant for more than casual visits. He said, "it's supposed to be a participatory activity."

at the time and if they get the support that they need from various groups on campus.

During the meeting, it was speculated that the events would take place on Mendel Field and the Grotto, said Gorski. She also said that the festival will begin in the early afternoon and may last through dinner, depending if Food Services agrees.

Also, Gorski said that various clubs will work food booths and that the money made may be given to a social service organization, such as the Special Olympics or Project Sunshine.

Sean Closkey, founder of SACC [Student Activities on Campus Committee] initiated the idea in the fall of last year because he felt that "there is a lack of social activities on campus."

Gorski said the committee supported the festival mainly to help students who live off campus feel more comfortable coming to the campus on weekends to use the facilities.

Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, gave the final permission for the festival, even though he was concerned that students may act "violently and irresponsibly" when they get in a large group.

He agreed to the festival because it will be an "affair on campus for recreation . . . engendering spirit" and because the students who gave him the proposal did so in a responsible way.

Closkey said that providing alcohol is a large factor in the spring festival because "it is unrealistic to have a social event without alcohol." He said that the problem was figuring out the constraints so as not to conflict with University regulations.

Gorski supported "providing alcohol for those 21 and over because it allows them to socialize with those who are not yet 21."

She also said that students think of the authority as merely being "fun-busters." The festival will be "a way of having alcohol in a legal and controlled way," and students will not have to bring their own, she said.

She emphasized that this event will not be like a tailgate in terms of the control of alcohol.

Gorski said she hopes the spring festival will become an annual event. She said that this will depend on how the festival works out financially, if the facilities will be available and how well the alcohol will be controlled.

Shuttle lecture to be held

By KRISTEN FALLAN
Staff Reporter

Roger Boisjoly, former engineer for the company that designed the space shuttle Challenger's faulty rocket booster, will be speaking at the Thirteenth Annual Distinguished Public Lecture, sponsored by Villanova's Engineering Joint Council Feb. 24.

Boisjoly is promoting the importance of ethical responsibility among the engineers of today and tomorrow. He has gained insight into the moral decision-making process of professionals through his experience with NASA [National Aeronautical and Space Administration] and the Morton Thiokol Corporation, the company contracted by NASA to design the solid rocket boosters.

Both NASA and Morton Thiokol ignored Boisjoly's warnings of Challenger's flawed O-ring seal.

Because of his first-hand experience, Boisjoly has been campaigning throughout the country, urging both students and professionals to come to the realization of their responsibility.

He claims, "You have a professional and moral responsibility to yourselves and your fellow man to defend the truth and expose any questionable practices that will lead to an unsafe product."

It was Boisjoly who, after much research, found the potential dangers involved in the planned shuttle lift-off. The management of Morton Thiokol thought Boisjoly's findings were "too sensitive to share with anyone." Subsequently, Boisjoly and his facts were shunnmed as preparations for launch day continued.

Taking a stand and exposing the truth was very difficult for Boisjoly. Yet, he firmly believes that it takes courage, and the possible threat of losing a job, to prevent disasters such as the Challenger's.

Since the disaster, Boisjoly has filed a $1 billion damage suit against Morton Thiokol, and a $10 million damage suit against NASA. Along with his attempt to regain personal losses, Boisjoly wishes to make it evident to both agencies "that they cannot make arbitrary and irresponsible decisions that kill people and ruin the lives and careers of their employees without accountability."

Boisjoly also wishes to convey a message to the students of today. Understanding that engineering students' schedules are full of required courses, he believes in the early exposure and awareness to the possible choices in ethical decision-making.

Boisjoly will be speaking Feb. 24, in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. A buffet will begin at 6 p.m., with the lecture following at 7:45 p.m. The tickets are $8 per person and are available at the office of the dean of engineering.

Senate

passed when it is presented to the University president and the Board of Trustees.

Ciccolo added that Student Government is definitely in favor of coed dormitories.

Student Government is asking that the two new dormitories to be built on south campus be coed. According to Ciccolo, this would alleviate the expense which would result in remodeling a current dormitory in order to house both male and female students.

Student Government is also looking for the elimination of the visitation policy, she said.

Coed dorms

or no desire for their son or daughter to live in coed residence halls.

Ciccolo attributed the results to a misunderstanding of the issue by the parents. She said, "There are ways of creating coed dorms while keeping the existing privacy levels. The option to live in a coed dorm should be at least offered."

The alumni who were surveyed had graduated after Villanova had become a coed institution. Ciccolo said she felt that the issue was more understandable by those who had attended the University while it was coeducational.

Sixty-eight percent of those surveyed said they felt that coed residence halls would not change their support of Villanova.

The report also stated, "The option of coed halls, though a modern change, is required if the University wishes to promote the best possible experience for its students."

Neville said, "We seem to be attracting applicants in record numbers. We don't need the change to attract more people." He added, "Much more study of the question needs to be done before the administration would make a recommendation."

Raid

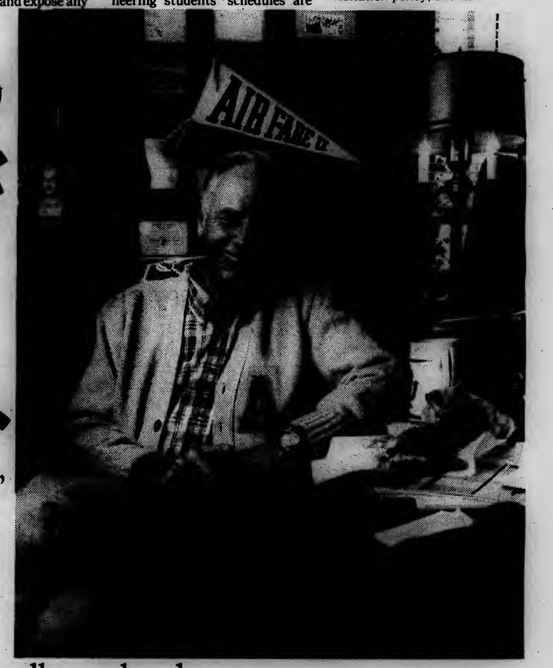
Another student involved, who used a license which had been stenciled over, said there were about 15 officers not in uniform during the raid.



The student also said that one underage patron jumped into the area where the disc jockey normally is and "pretended he was the DJ [disk jockey] . . . and they [the police] didn't bother him."

The first student interviewed said the police were "really nice," considering the circumstances.

When asked whether she would enter a bar again before she turned 21, the student said, "For a while, [the incident at Barleycorn's] will keep me out" but added she would probably go to a bar again before she was 21.

The second student said if she had another I.D. (the police took away her previous one), she would go to a bar again underage, but not Barleycorn's.

Greek support must be reconsidered

James Callahan, an 18-year-old Rutgers University freshman and pledge of Lambda Chi Alpha, died from apparent alcohol poisoning last week in New Jersey. Forty-eight Princeton University students, who were attending parties to join campus eating clubs, the University's equivalent to fraternities, were treated for alcohol-related illness just one week earlier. Will Villanova be the next institution to see its students poison themselves with alcohol?

The University should seriously reconsider its support of any organization like Greek fraternities and sororities that permits underage and excessive alcohol consumption. Although the Villanova Greek system claims that its primary goals are to promote brotherhood and sisterhood, service and community, one cannot ignore the many excessive alcohol-related activities in which these groups participate.

Almost every weekend fraternities and sororities hold "TG" parties where many members excessively consume alcohol. Closed "theme" parties are also held and alcohol is present.

Although Villanova has a dry rush, pledging quite often involves drinking to excess, especially during "Hell Week" or "Hell Night," the final stages of pledging.

The service functions these organizations provide simply do not balance with their secondary goals of alcohol consumption.

If the University is to continue to support the Greek system as it stands today with many activities specifically geared toward alcohol, Villanova is in effect promoting alcoholism.

The death of James Callahan raises many important questions that every Greek system in America should answer. Perhaps, in the best interest of all Villanova students, the University should seriously consider discontinuing fraternities and sororities. Let's act before someone else dies from Greek-related alcohol poisoning.

Don't let issue die

New ideas and drastic changes take a notoriously long time to circulate through the Villanova system. Today Student Government will take the first step toward implementing such a change when it presents its report advocating coed dorms to the University Senate. The question now is, will the report be well-thumbed and creased with use, or will it gather dust in some obscure Senate file?

How various University groups respond to this question will determine how soon coed dorms will become a part of Villanova, if they will at all.

For Student Government, the presentation of this report is only the first step in a long, frustrating process. If its ideas are ever to move off the pages of their report into reality, the organization will have to provide the strength and effort needed. They will have to lobby intensively for their goal and keep the issue in people's minds — all too often, issues become cold and forgotten as they fade from public view.

The question of how much power the University community has to decide this issue, however, will have to be answered by the main sources of power on campus — the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, and the Board of Trustees. They have the power to halt progress on issues indefinitely, as Driscoll has shown by letting the Senate's grading system decision sit on his desk for nearly a year.

In all, if Driscoll and the Board truly respect the Senate, they will ask that body to reach a decision on coed dorms, and then abide by its resolution. The Senate is the one place where all parts of the University — faculty, students and administration — can make decisions on major issues.

Villanova must face the issue of coed dorms, as other Catholic colleges and universities have done. And it must do so in the light of community debate, not in the darkness of a boardroom.

Letters to the Editor

Student conduct deplored

To the Editor:

Recently, I attended the Villanova-Georgetown basketball game. Although the game was thoroughly enjoyable, I would like to express my disappointment at the behavior of some of the Villanova students.

While traveling on the Paoli local to the game, a large number of students did not pay their fare, nor did they make any effort to pay. Granted, the overflow of riders was not well handled by SEPTA, but riding the train for free constitutes theft of services.

In one instance, a conductor took a $20 bill from a student and told her to collect her $17.50 in change from other riders.

In one instance, a conductor took a $20 bill from a student and told her to collect her $17.50 in change from other riders.

Although the conductor's actions were totally inappropriate and unfair to the paying rider, she received no aid from other riders in the car who had not paid.

Rather, the students chose to verbally berate the conductor whenever he entered the car. Simply paying her their fare would have alleviated the problem.

Upon arrival at Suburban Station, I witnessed numerous cases of public urination within the station. The age, dress and group size were a clear indication to me that these were Villanova students.

Finally, while waiting in line for the subway, I witnessed at least 50 students jump over the turnstiles to obtain free access to the subway. Once again, this is theft of services. I do not think these students would accept Philadelphians using their University facilities (dining hall, sports facilities, etc.) for free.

I do not believe that these students are thieves — however, in this case they were acting as such.

How an individual acts on his or her own is his or her own choice. It was the behavior of a group representing Villanova that concerns me.

I would hope that in the future students would be more aware of the fact that when traveling with a large group of students they are projecting a certain image for their university. That projected image that I witnessed last night was not a very favorable one.

Students lack community

By DANTE J. SCALA
News Editor

First, the good news. Student Government is continuing the period of rejuvenation that Joe Allman's administration began. The organization has worked for student interests on a number of issues, including academic advisement, coed dorms and off-campus housing.

The trouble is, few students besides the organization's members seem to care.

Evidence of students' indifference to Student Government pervades the University. Only 15 to 20 percent of undergraduates voted in last year's student elections. Hardly any students ever go to University Senate meetings, where issues such as the grading system and fall break have been discussed. Above all, there is the oppressive apathy, the arresting sense that students can change nothing at Villanova.

This sense of apathy was felt by Dr. Arthur Shriberg, who recently evaluated the Office of Student Life for the Program Evaluation Committee. He said students described it as the "Villanova way;" students are treated like children, they said.

Indeed, like children, Villanova students feel implicitly that their situation is out of their control. Power rests in the hands of shadowy, ambiguous figures who no one really knows, like the administration, the Board of Trustees and the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president.

And because these figures cannot be pinned down anywhere, they exist everywhere. For students, all power seems to constantly emanate from them, offering no release, no freedom.

These feelings of helplessness are intensified by the prevailing student mindset, which can be titled, "me against the system."

When students feel that something is wrong at Villanova, they do not know where to look for help; indeed, they are convinced there is no such place of aid.

Thus, they give up before they have started, and are reduced to grumbling about what is wrong with Villanova, concluding, "You can't beat the system."

This explains the disinterest surrounding student elections. Every spring, candidates speak about how they will work to change things in the Villanova system. And every spring, the unspoken question among student voters is "How? How can you change things? You are a student, like myself, and everyone knows that no one listens to students. How are you different?"

Every spring, this question goes unanswered, and the system wins again. Students turn away from Student Government, refuse to vote and remain chained to their belief that you cannot fight the system.

Driscoll remains behind his office door, and for students passing by it in Tolentine Hall, the door might as well be locked.

For Student Government, the challenge now is to unlock that door. It must convince students that they can have a voice in how the University is run. And it must do so by taking steps to create a student community.

Community — it is a word that is tossed around a lot at Villanova, and its frequent misuse has weakened the concept behind it considerably.

For instance, it ill describes the 7,000 undergraduates at Villanova, who lead their individual lives everyday with little thought of being part of a larger whole. Students split themselves up into Greeks, non-Greeks, commuters, residents, nurses and engineers, but find little that bonds them together.

Indeed, like children, Villanova students feel implicitly that their situation is out of their control. Power rests in the hands of shadowy, ambiguous figures whom no one really knows, like the administration, the Board of Trustees and the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president.

When they do unite, the results are powerful. The electricity at home men's basketball games is created by the sense of community that binds the student section together. Students disregard their individual differences and join together as Villanovans to cheer for a common cause.

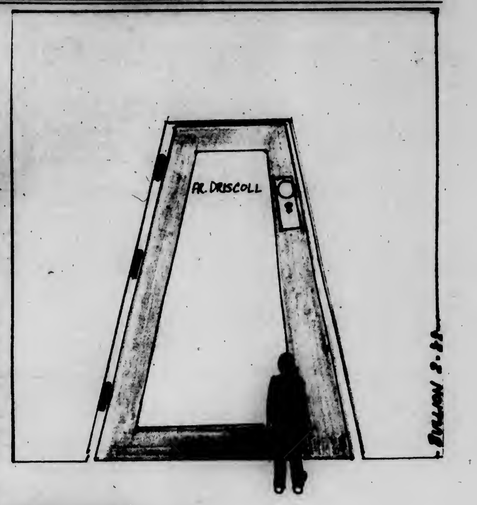
But outside of the duPont Pavilion, that feeling of student community is lost. Students see themselves as isolated individuals, not as part of a larger group, and thus feel too weak to fight the monolithic University bureaucracy.

Political philosopher Alexis de Tocqueville said the solution to this problem is to create groups which act as intermediaries between the individual and the system. The intermediary is a go-between; it is small enough to listen to the individual's problems, and large enough to gain the attention of the system.

By invoking a sense of community among students, Student Government can become this intermediary. It must persuade students to regard each other as members of a group who rally around a common cause: student interests.

It must convince students that "You cannot beat the system, but we can."

In order to accomplish this, Student Government must take its message to its constituents. President Phil Brach and his fellow workers have to run a persistent door-to-door, person-to-person canvassing campaign, speaking to each student personally. The strategy worked for him in the election last April, and now he must use it for a higher purpose.



In all, Student Government must rally students around a common cause. This semester, such an issue could be coed dorms, which will be discussed in the University Senate today.

If Brach wants to see coed dorms instituted at Villanova, he cannot simply make his report today in the Senate and let the system decide. Last semester, he sent the furor over Security policies into a Senate committee, and watched the issue die a slow death. Nothing was changed.

This time, he must do better. He must urge his fellow students, who overwhelmingly want coed dorms, to show their support actively and visibly. He must show the University that students care about the issue, and are willing to make their feelings known.

History proves such a campaign can work. The last time Villanova students protested as a community, the University Senate was born. If Student Government can succeed in creating that sense of community once again, another step for student rights can be taken.

Mid East problems grow

By AMGAD SABONGUI

Recently, international affairs have been receiving great media coverage in the United States. The Iran-Contra mess, the Nicaraguan revolution and the Persian Gulf crisis are a few of the many events with which the U.S. has been currently involved.

The United States has all but turned their backs and ignored, however, possibly the most important world problem today — the Palestinian unrest in the Israeli occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

When Israel was formed by the United Nations in 1948, attacks by Arab countries immediately followed. The infant country was constantly on its toes defending its new and beloved homeland.

In June 1967 the famous six-day war again saw Israel successfully defend its country, as well as take over many new territories. Among these lands were the Jordan-controlled half of Jerusalem and West Bank, and the Egyptian-guided Gaza Strip. These acquisitions were the start of the present 20-year problem between the very frustrated Palestinians and the wary ever-cautious Israelis.

Personally, I cannot find blame in the uprising by the Palestinians. For 40 years the Palestinians have been without a homeland and have been treated unfairly in Israel. They are not allowed to participate in the government or army, and most hold low income jobs.

Israel is about as democratic as South Africa in that Israeli Arabs have about the same rights as blacks in South Africa.

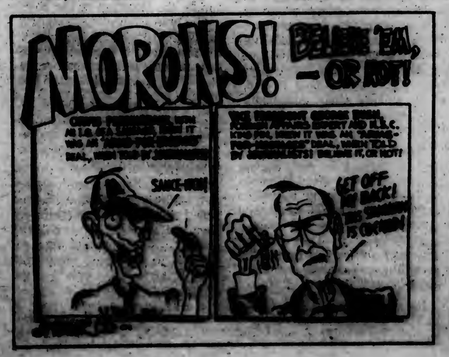
Yet in the occupied territories it is even worse. The living conditions are terrible, and although Israel is trying somewhat to improve the area, they still adamantly refuse to give the Palestinians the right to self-rule.

The United States has done practically nothing to oppose the military crackdown by Israel. We have abstained from all but one United Nations vote and have displayed a cowardly policy on the issue.

We do not want to provoke any unwanted animosity, so we stick to our 'neutral' policy and then give them $3 billion worth of aid every year. In essence, the United States is a puppet to our friendly neighbor in the Middle East.

Israel knows this. Israelis know that their country is used as a strategy for the United States. They also know that the U.S., as well as most of the free universe, is at their fingertips. They have warned the U.S. not to interfere with their problems and, like obedient children, we obey.

A few weeks ago, President Hosni Mubarek of Egypt visited America to discuss this problem with President Ronald Reagan and Secretary of State George Schultz. Egypt is the sole Arab country to have friendly relations with Israel. It seems that they feel they have been openly deceived by Israel.



When Egypt and Israel signed the Camp David accords in the late 1970s, Israel promised that in the upcoming five years it would abandon the occupied Gaza strip. This five-year period ended in 1982, and Israeli troops remain.

However, it seems that Mubarek has his hands tied. Although Egypt has just restored diplomatic ties with the Arab countries, Mubarek does not want to break relations with Israel and definitely does not want to anger the folks in Washington (who give Egypt almost $2 billion in aid every year).

Since nobody especially likes, or trusts, Syria or Iran, and since Jordan has practically no military power, the Palestinians are people not only lacking a homeland, but also an ally.

But the United States could be this ally by giving aid to the Palestinians (through Israel, of course) so they might be able to live in houses instead of huts. We could be an ally by cutting all the military aid we shower Israel with every year. If those bureaucrats who run our country had any guts, the U.S. could be that ally.

Athlete stipends rebutted

To the Editor:

I absolutely disagree with Jim Bowman's op-ed entitled, "Athletes should receive stipends," which was printed last week.

First of all, Bowman's op-ed only addresses basketball players. They are not the only athletes. Here at Villanova the athletic department offers tennis, track, soccer, swimming, water polo and the list goes on. These athletes work hard, too, putting in hours of practice which keep them from holding part-time jobs.

They represent Villanova well, even if they do not bring in a bundle of money or "provide a majority of students with something to look forward to every weekend." Does Bowman plan to pay these athletes, also?

Furthermore, the "great purses their schools devour from sell-out crowds and juicy television contracts," are used to support these other, less profitable sports. If that money was used, instead, to pay basketball and football players, then we could probably say goodbye to some sports. Is that fair?

How about students on academic scholarships? They have to keep their grades up to keep their scholarships. Often, keeping their grades up means studying more and giving up a part-time job. Those students represent the academic side of the University just as the athletes stand for the athletic side. So, should we pay them, too?

I could go on. What about organization leaders? Major organization leaders like the Villanova Union president, the Villanovan editor in chief and the Student Government president easily put in some 30 to 40 hours per week, and they do not have scholarships to fall back on. Why not pay them, too, while we are at it?

Getting back specifically to paying athletes, though. Bowman proposes that the NCAA "establish a graduated scale, based on the family's financial need, for monthly payments to collegiate athletes." Although his plan does keep the stipend amount from skyrocketing by proposing a limit, there are still problems with it.

Since we cannot take the money from the "great purses" without negating other sports, where, exactly, will the money come from? Sure, some of the larger schools may have the funds to pay stipends. However, what about the smaller schools that cannot afford to offer stipends but can offer a quality education? (Oh, yeah, school is for education, is it not?) These smaller schools will be cheated of talented athletes because they cannot pay as much. Again I ask, is that fair?

Furthermore, if Bowman thinks that once athletes receive a stipend "overzealous alumni with padded wallets" will go away, he is sadly mistaken.

No matter how much a school can offer, those overzealous alumni still believe they can give more. The NCAA can best fight the problem of illegal payments by continuing on the present path.

So, yes, I am one of the so-called cynics who would "interject, 'But the school is, giving them a free ticket to the future. What more do they deserve?' " I believe that scholarship athletes get a lot.

Ten thousand dollars a year is more than most students make with a part-time job. And $10,000 worth of education and room and board each year is what Villanova athletes get when they come here. They will not spend the first 10 years after graduation paying off student loans.

There is no reason why they cannot work during the summer and save so they have spending money for the school year. They are not professional athletes. They are here for an education and are lucky enough to have a talent that will pay for that education.

Library book check effective

To the Editor:

"The current system where a (Falvey Memorial) library employee glances at half-opened bookbags to check for library materials is archaic and costly. Villanova must update their loan system to reduce stolen library books." (Villanovan, Feb. 12.)

During one average workday at Falvey Memorial Library, a period of time extending over 16 hours, an average of 2,500 students carrying book bags pass by the doorchecker's desk. This averages out to 17,000 per week.

If 100 bags were missed during any particular week, it would be a lot. But even if this many were missed, it would be only .58 percent. This is a success rate of 99.42 percent.

With marks like this, if a doorchecker was a student, he would graduate magna cum lauda.

In the great basketball game with Temple, the well-vaunted Wildcats were described in the Daily News as playing near perfection, hitting 30 out of 58 shots from the floor, but this is a mere 51.7 percent. The paper said the team was "impressive from the three-point line," shooting 10 for 22 or 45.4 percent.

Rollie Massimino's stellar court stars came closest to the doorchecker's average at the foul line hitting 16 for 18, or 88.8 percent.

The doorcheckers who work on weekends and during evening hours must not only inspect book bags leaving the library, but must also check the I.D.s of students entering the library.

Three of the doorcheckers are over 65 years of age. Two are pushing 70.

For all of this they are paid minimum wages, for this the Villanvoa community should expect Frank Rizzo.

Change calendar

To the Editor:

Looking back at past Villanova academic calendars, I noticed that spring semester classes almost always started on Monday. So why did we start on Wednesday this year?

Graduation is now held a week later than it was the the past. So, to coincide with graduation, the semester should have started a week later, too. But, instead of starting Jan. 25, as we should have, we started the Wednesday before, and this semester is unnecessarily stretched out.

If graduation will always be the weekend before Memorial Day, the start of the spring semester should reflect this, and classes should therefore begin on the Monday between Jan. 19 and Jan. 25. Jan. 25 might seem late for some people, but if graduation is later, then the start of classes should also be later. We returned to Villanova Jan. 20, while many of our friends at other schools, who started the same day as us in past years, had off until Jan. 25.

I believe we should start spring classes Jan. 23 next year, instead of the currently scheduled Jan. 19. It is really worth it to come back for only two days before the weekend? Not only would coming back on a Sunday be easier for many students, we would also benefit from a longer Christmas break, while only going, at the most, two daays later in May. (There would still be an eight-day Senior Week.)

I believe the spring semester should always start on a Monday, which would be Jan. 23, 1989, if graduation is held May 21.

Student says Villanovan limited

To the Editor:

Last year Joe Crivelli wrote a letter to your paper to tell you it was time for a new newspaper at Villanova. Part of his argument was that the newspaper lacked the ability to stir up any form of commotion amongst the students on any major issues.

Although I realize you are all under the heavy thumb of the administration, the newspaper must act as some type of fuel for thought on issues that seem to be barely smoldering in the minds of students.

It is obvious that, for the most part, Villanova is cluttered with a bunch of apathetic rich kids. The sad thing about your paper is that it simply feeds them with the continued Villanova clap-trap in order to maintain status quo.

It's as if you have all been yanked around by your ear by your parents all your life and have continued to do this "yes ma'am, yes father" following, in writing for the newspaper.

I am not saying the status quo is not great, but I think it is a little unrealistic. You report who, what and where very effectively, but it seems nobody addresses "why?"

The front page of the Feb. 5 issue exemplifies this perfectly. First, the "Security evaluated" article reported on the effectiveness of the campus Security. The real issue to be brought out by the paper is that the administration knows that the World War II veterans and other misfits that they hired as security guards are weak.

Secondly, the real issue attached to the "West campus plans continue" article is that the administration is stuck between a rock and a hard place when it comes to housing.

Neighboring towns are becoming less and less hospitable to the students, who are trying desperately to live a college lifestyle. It is a given, that students are going to bring some type of vandalism, noise, underage drinking and drug problem to any neighborhood, but somehow the school must offer some place for students to live, while getting their education. Otherwise they are not being realistic.

The third article that I would like to address is the "Spring festival aproved" article. I could see every orientation counselor and RA's heart tingle when they say "boy oh boy, isn't Villanova just the greatest? They're going to organize a festival for us and we can even drink the forbidden drink: beer!"

Holy cow, I myself, could not believe it either, but after I thought for a milli-second more, I could see the administration's ploy.

When you think back to the past radiation days, that we have annually celebrated in the spring to commemorate the Three Mile Island meltdown, the administration is smart.

If you ask around you will hear stories about when a security guard went mad and started swinging at students after he had been doused in beer at a radiation day celebration.

Obviously, the administration has admitted that they could not handle the situation in the past, and is now attempting to control it. I am not knocking the administration, but I wish the newspaper had the perception to see the ploy of the hierarchy that we live under.

I am not trying to be a trouble maker, but I think some revelations have to be made about what is going down around here.

And if this letter is manipulated or misinterpreted, that will be too bad. I think I have something to say, and all I ask for is a little respect. If you would like to attempt to embarrass me in the Who Knows, Who Cares?, ... go ahead, make my day.

Snow removal unsatisfactory

To the Editor:

This letter should be addressed to "the powers that be at Villanova University." Let's talk snow removal — or lack thereof.

Does the word "lawsuit" mean anything to you? Do you realize that if a student (or anyone else for that matter, parent, sibling or alumni) were to slip and get hurt on University property, the University could be sued?

I know of two falls that, thank goodness, resulted only in minor scrapes and bruises and a flying guitar. But I am sure that there were many others, perhaps even serious injuries. And isn't it strange that the sidewalks in front of Austin Hall were cleared yet St. Rita's Hall has not been touched? And how about the parking lot, or should I say skating rink! Pushing a stalled car across a sheet of ice is not a fun job.

I realize that snow removal is a big job. I also realize that the University has an outside contractor to do that job. However, that job is not getting done. If need be, I know quite a few students who would be happy to earn a few extra bucks shoveling sidewalks.

Artwork offensive

To the Editor:

We are writing in reference to a cartoon which appeared in the art bin in the Feb. 12 issue of the Villanovan. The cartoon depicted sorority rush as a degrading, humiliating and terrifying experience. The idea of sororities in general was completely misconstrued.

It is infuriating to see such a misrepresentation of the sorority system only days after the completion of a successful formal rush. The extensive preparation, careful thought and consideration involved in membership selection was completely disregarded by the cartoon.

Obviously the cartoonist has no conception of what sororities have to offer. The opportunities for leadership, community service, scholastic development and friendships encouraged by sororities were clouded with the notion of parties as the sole benefit.

Perhaps the cartoonist and reader should consider the fact that if rush was as mortifying as depicted, why then did more than 500 girls subject themselves to such "hell."

Equal rights losing its focus

To the Editor:

Although I am in favor of the ERA (Equal Rights Amendment) as a movement to do away with unfair discrimination on the basis of sex, I am beginning to think more and more that the whole affair is reaching a state of fanaticism.

I find the terms chairperson, layperson and selectperson somewhat absurd. Will the jack-of-all-trades soon be called a handyperson?

All of these secular terms are bad enough, but what really topped it off and bothered me enough to write this letter, is what I heard at Mass this past weekend. In the Apostles' Creed, instead of saying, "For us men and our salvation ... " the church is now advocating, "For us and our salvation ... "

I do not know how many, if any, female church-goers were offended by "us men." I think it is safe to assume the phrase was written to infer man as mankind, not that Jesus had no interest in the salvation of women. Or should we believe that Jesus' attention to Mary Magdelene was just an act?

As I said, I think ERA is important to correct the unfair discriminations between the sexes, but let us not get so carried away that we start imagining discriminations.

Student praises Villanovan

To the Editor:

I have been working at Villanova University for eight years now and I want to let you and everyone involved in putting out this interesting newspaper know, that I feel that all of you deserve a huge pat on the back, a round of applause, a standing ovation, etc.

The editorials, features, entertainment and sports were covered in a very professional style and you should be very proud indeed. One particular issue, Feb. 5, had everything.

Besides covering the silly things that are a necessary part of life to survive in an academic atmosphere, a lot of things that are of interest to us all were put into focus much more clearly and with some workable solutions needed to make this a better community for all of us.

While I myself find this a good place to come to every day, that is not the case for everyone. But keep airing the issues and maybe our new theme song will be "One Down, and Two To Go."

Alcohol: an important issue on campuses

By DIANE P. CARMAN
Staff Reporter

Greeks throughout the country have become more aware of the dangers involved in participating in the traditional custom of hazing, according to an article in the Feb. 8 issue of the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Because of the great number of lawsuits contending harm from Greek-related drinking and hazing and pressure from university officials who are threatening to ban them from campuses, fraternities and sororities around the nation are taking measures to clean up their acts.

Incidents which inspired this movement include the disbanding of fraternities and sororities at the University of Lowell in Massachusetts. This occurred after two hazing incidents in a period of 10 years.

The demise of the Greek system at Amherst College because of fraternity-related unruly and dangerous drinking parties, and legal action brought against Penn State fraternities for serving alcohol to minors and beating a pledge, were also factors in the recent developments.

More recently in the news was the death of a Lamda Chi Alpha pledge at Rutgers University in New Jersey. This has further incited university communities to inspect more thoroughly their Greek systems.

Even Villanova has had its problems. In 1982, after attending an off-campus fraternity party involving alcohol, Monica Buckley, a freshman, was killed and five others were injured in a car accident.

Buckley's family and Anne Fasset, another victim who was left a quadriplegic, sued the fraternity. In a landmark decision, a federal court ruled that the organizers of the party and those who bought and served the alcohol were to be held responsible.

That ruling combined with pressure from national fraternity organizations and complaints of noise and unruliness by neighbors has prompted Villanova Greeks to improve their behavior.

Megan Jones, chairperson of the Greek Committee on Drug and Alcohol Awareness, commented that Villanova Greeks have become aware of, and concerned with, such problems.

They have established option programs to educate their members. Many have formed sober committees to collect keys at TG's and ensure responsible drinking.

Jones states that various administrators have conducted a study on the Villanova Greek system, and she feels that they are looking for legitimate reasons to have it dissolved.

"We know that we are being watched. One more mistake by anyone and we're gone," said Jones.

This week surveys will be distributed to fraternities and sororities to discover if there is significant drug or alcohol problem within the Greek system.

Computerized rush a success

By KATHLEEN REICHNER
Staff Reporter

Villanova has recently experienced its first computerized sorority rush, according to Gary H. Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities.

The "Compute-A-Rush" system generated party lists, invitations, and nametags, and handled bid matching, stated Bonas.

The computer did these tasks in a fraction of time that it would have taken to do them manually.

For example, Compute-A-Rush matched bids in one minute, said Bonas, a job which in the past has taken a dozen people six hours to complete.

"I was amazed at the system's accuracy and quickness," said Trish LaMotta, Panhellenic rush chairperson.

"It was the best investment Panhellenic ever made," said LaMotta of the $3,000 system.

The computer was able to give LaMotta important rush statistics while keeping track of the 508 women going through rush.

Villanova is the 30th Panhellenic to use Compute-A-Rush. It was developed by D and D Digital in Ames, Iowa. It was first installed at Iowa State University about 10 years ago.

Rewards of Pledging

By STEPHEN FERRARO
Staff Reporter

"Education is much more than textbooks and class, for more than 100 years fraternities have helped shape young men into confident people and leaders," according to the White Diamond of Pi Kappa Phi fraternity.

The pledging period of a new member in a fraternity is a time of learning and growth. Contrary to popular belief, pledges do not exist only to work parties and run tasks for brothers. The idea behind this is to help the pledges assimilate into the fraternity at large.

The pledging period should develop unity, cooperation and friendship between the pledge class as a unit, and the brotherhood as a whole. This is also a microcosm of getting along in society.

The pledging process takes a lot of time, effort and energy. This helps to promote responsibility in academics by teaching the pledges how to budget time effectively.

Pledges do not have the time to procrastinate. Their time is spent balancing school work and fraternal activities. Pledges must do both or face the consequences. Older brothers are available to offer assistance with studies during the pledge program.

A pledge must also learn the history and tradition of the individual chapter and the national fraternity. He must be responsible in maintaining the highest ideals of Christian manhood.

Pledging helps promote social consciousness. In order to promote awareness, pledges must go to seminars on sexual diseases and substance abuse.

Pledging also helps to develop a professional attitude. It teaches punctuality, how to anticipate a superior's needs, meet anticipations, and dress for every occasion. Pledging also promotes pledge pride, both in himself and in his chapter.

In an attempt to promote awareness of the serious issue of AIDS, the Villanovan has published this supplement with the greatly appreciated help of the following individuals: Natalie McKenna, Kevin Hecht, Noel E. Falco, Kathleen Reichner, Susan E. Corcoran, Cindy Bosnian, Elliott McEldowney, the Rev. Ray Jackson O.S.A., the Center for Peace and Justice, Terry Conner and Lankenau Hospital in Philadelphia.

AIDS: America's fatal reality

When AIDS was first recognized in the United States in 1981, there were fewer than 60 reported cases. As of March 1987, there were more than 32,000 cases of AIDS and about 20,000 deaths. According to federal health officials, 1-1.5 million Americans are now asymptomatic carriers of HIV (human immunodeficiency virus) and the American AIDS death toll is expected to exceed 179,000 by 1991. As of yet, no cure had been found. AIDS is a fatal reality that will not disappear in the near future.

The AIDS epidemic concerns everyone. Children, Catholic priests and heterosexual men and women are dying every day of AIDS — a deadly disease that was commonly considered an exclusively homosexual condition.

AIDS awareness and education is vital for nationwide compassion for victims. A national AIDS policy is desperately needed for medical assistance, work and school regulations and research funding.

America must act immediately to combat this fatal condition.

The Catholic Church promotes sexual abstinence and marital fidelity which all Americans, especially Catholics, should incorporate into their daily lives.

No one is safe. Anyone can contract AIDS under the right conditions.

Be smart. Educate. Learn about AIDS. AIDS is a reality, an American tragedy that will remain for many tomorrows if we do not act today.

AIDS affects more than homosexuals

By
ELLIOTT McELDOWNEY
Staff Reporter

So often when a conversation turns to the subject of AIDS or of homosexuals, it is regarded as time to pull out a series of jokes, puns and stories which mock and scorn those with AIDS.

While these jokes serve to dissipate tension and keep a conversation light, they also reveal much more about exactly what our fears and insecurities are.

Homophobia, the fear or hate of homosexuals, is closely tied to fear and panic about AIDS. I think that it is the excuse of AIDS that has helped homophobia, which is akin to racism in its prejudice, grow to a state of near-acceptance around us.

While the AIDS disease remains a mystery, it will obviously be a source of fear. But fear of AIDS and fear of homosexuals are two distinct matters; one does not imply the other (as so many people seem to think) nor should one be confused with the other. It is easy to cloak a fear or hate of homosexuals beneath the pretence of a fear of AIDS.

The fear of AIDS is understandable, it has at its root the fear of death. The fear of homosexuals, which I have witnessed all around me, is less easily understood. The words associated with homosexuality are part of our daily language; "fag," "homo," "gay" are all derogatory terms we use without thinking. But upon questioning friends about a joke or a word, many have to admit that they have, after all, never really seen a gay person in their life, just on television or in the movies. These who have seen homosexuals seem to identify only the blatant stereotypes also.

What this points to is a massive amount of stereotyping with little or no critical thought, and behind it lies deep fear and insecurity of individual sexuality. Eric Hoffer, in his book The True Believer, said, "Whence come these unreasonable hatreds, and why their unifying effect? They are an expression of a desperate effort to supress an awareness of our inadequacy, worthlessness, guilt and other shortcomings of the self. Self-contempt is here transmuted into hatred of others — and there is a most determined and persistant effort to mask this switch."

This would probably be the time for me to toss in various moving, emotional, and no doubt controversial, biblical passages in defense of my position: instead I will offer this idea. To my knowledge, at no time do the gospels advocate hate, no matter at whom it is aimed.

The Catholic bishops' comment is relevent as well. They state, "We encourage all members of our society to relate to its [AIDS] victims with compassion and understanding, as they would to those suffering from any other fatal disease." They continue, "All of God's sons and daughters, all members of our society, are entitled to the recognition of their full human dignity."

In the novel The Plague, by Albert Camus, the residents of the city of Oran are quarantined because of an outbreak of bubonic plague. The city is closed off, and community springs up between the citizens where none was before. AIDS has reached a stage where it is now epidemic, or a plague. Following a Catholic tradition, ours should be a call to community, not to division in the face of AIDS.

I began this piece with the issue of humor, and its implications. I would ask you to think before retelling that next joke. Who are you hurting, and what are you telling others about yourself?

AIDS patient expresses views: Calling for compassion and hope

By ELLIOTT McELDOWNEY
Staff Reporter

Terry Conner speaks with an enthusiasm that is at once surprising and disarming. His voice is clear as he talks about his recent trips to the hospital and how happy he is to be able to return to work. Terry is 31 years of age, and although he appears healthy, he has the deadly disease AIDS (acquired immune defficiency syndrome).

"Look at me," he said. "You would never know unless I told you." And he is right, nothing about him hints of the disease within him. The external clues certainly do not reveal it; he is lively, his complexion is dark, and he seems athletic. Terry is also heterosexual — proof that AIDS is not an exclusively homosexual disease.

So many people are dying alone. There's no worse crime to me than knowing you're going to die and having to do it alone.

"I grew up in the West Chester area, went to West Chester East High School and then went out to East Stroudsburg for a year and a half. I was president of the student council, I was on the track team.

"I've been involved in music for years. I used to work with a group called The Dovells. And then I got into video, which is what led me to Arizona where I believe I contracted the disease.

"I make no excuses for what I did. I paid to have sex with a hooker and am paying a dear price for it now. That's how I got it ... it was through heterosexual intercourse. I don't mind you saying that, but I don't want to give people the false impression that I got AIDS just because I was with a prostitute. Anybody can get this, and that's the bottom line.

"I was diagnosed August of 1986. The way it came about was six to eight months before I was diagnosed I started getting sick. I had a stomach virus that lasted four months, two of which I couldn't even work, I was doubled over with pain. After that cleared up I was fine for a month, but then got a skin rash all over my body. The thing that kept me from getting diagnosed sooner was that I was heterosexual. And they never thought of giving me a blood test for AIDS because at that time it was a gay disease.

"What I say to people about that is that just happened to be where it started. People think of it as a gay disease because it started there, but it is definitely a heterosexually-transmitted thing as well as homosexual disease.

"... I was so sick I was laying on the couch watching television. I think it was Donahue, Phil Donahue, and this AIDS guy came on with his doctor. He started describing his symptoms. With every symptom he described my jaw dropped because I had everything he was saying. But even at that I refused to believe that me being a straight person could have this disease. Like I said at this time, it was known as a gay disease.

"When I had 103 degree fever I had to do something. My family doctor suggested either a cardiologist or an infectious disease specialist. I went to the cardiologist. I could barely walk when I went. He took one look at me and said, 'you don't need me.' He called over to the hospital to the chief of infectious disease. I was in the hospital that day, diagnosed six days later.

"Fortunately for me and my mom, I had an idea. I didn't want to believe it, but it wasn't a complete surprise to me. Why else should I be in the hospital, someone who's been healthy all his life? The doctor told me point blank, you have been diagnosed with pneumocystis pneumonia and this leads us to believe that you have AIDS.

"And I kind of took it, in stride. What else could I do? After they [the doctors] left, my ex-fiancee called me on the phone to see how I was doing. I just broke down, I couldn't even talk to her on the phone. Then my mom walked in the room, she works at the hospital I go to; I just broke down like a little baby and started crying. Because it was at this point I realized, hey I'm going to die. And I've got this disease that means you're going to lose all your friends, everybody. That was a rough day, probably one of the roughest days of my life. But it was also within the next few days that I came to grips with it and said, 'I've got it and can't do a thing about it. It's sink or swim time and I'm not one for sinking; I'm not giving up. I also said that I have nothing to be ashamed of ... I make no excuses for what I did.

People think of it as a gay disease because it started there, but it is definitely a heterosexually transmitted thing as well as homosexual disease.

"There's such stigma about having AIDS, and, 'you must be gay.' I'm not going to hide this thing, this isn't right to live behind some kind of curtain. And so I came right out with it to everybody. I figured 'accept me or reject me,' and if you reject me, I don't need you in my life anyway. I told everybody; the Phillies whom I work with a lot, I told my friends, my family, relatives. And for the most part I got 100 percent of it back in a good way. Usually it's 'what can we do for you?'

"Once they realize they aren't in danger. My brother and his wife have two children, and they were scared to death and wouldn't let me go near them. And I understood that even though it ripped into me like a hacksaw. I understand that people are afraid of this thing. That's why I'm doing what I'm doing. To help get rid of their fears and tell them what is fact and what is fiction. And there's a lot of fiction out there.

"My brother and his wife ... went out and researched this and found they didn't have anything to worry about. It may still be a little weird in their heads when they see me pick my nephew up and kiss him or hug him but it's not transmitted that way, and they know that. That's the important thing. Now everything's just as it always was.

"It's really a very difficult thing to get unless the conditions are right. That doesn't mean that people don't have to worry about it. If you're going to be with someone you're taking a chance regardless. Because someone could look like I look. You'd never know I had this unless I told you. No girl would have any idea I had this if I didn't tell her.

"I do take responsibility for my actions. There are people who don't. You get real lonely with this disease. I long to walk down the street and hold a girl's hand, or just to snuggle with a girl. That's one of the hardest things I'm dealing with right now. There's that big part that's missing, that one-to-one relationship with a female. That's what I miss the most.

"There's a lot of mental things. There was a time I refused to go into a mall, because most people don't realize that I have more to fear from people than they have to fear from me. When they get a cold, they fight it off. If I'm around them and I catch their cold, it could kill me. Whereas the only thing they have to worry from me is blood to blood, blood to semen.

"I often say that it's the person you know has it you have to worry about least. It's the person you don't know who has it, because they probably don't know they have it; that's the one that's going to go around infecting whoever they're with. That's the scary thing in this whole disease, and I can't emphasize enough that I have more to fear from people than they from me.

I make no excuses for what I did. I paid to have sex with a hooker and am paying a dear price for it now. That's how I got it ... it was through heterosexual intercourse."

"I'm susceptible, anything can kill me, my immune system is not working properly. And when your immune system doesn't work properly you're susceptible to all kinds of stuff; any kind of herpes sores, any kind of flu, anything along that way, opportunistic infections. I have to fear from everybody.

"There was a time I refused to go in a mall; I was scared to death. I figured there's all these sick people in there; if I go in there I'm going to die. I had to get over that.

"Then I went through another phase where I refused to buy myself anything new. I figured I'm going to die why should I spend my money on something I'm never going to get to enjoy? I got a CD player last Christmas; it was great but I refused to spend 17 bucks for something I'm never even going to see the life of. These are all things I had to get over. There are some heavy duty mental things I had to deal with.

"The least of my problems was discrimination. That's what you hear about the most. There was a guy in the hospital bed next to me who lost everything. He had to be hospitalized because his family wouldn't take him; his friends wouldn't take him. He didn't have to be in the hospital, but he had nowhere else to go. And I said, 'what a crime.' Just because of the f--ing stigma people have put on this disease.

"So many people are dying alone. There's no worse crime to me than knowing you're going to die and having to do it alone. That's when I'd consider suicide. And I have though about it but it's not in my cards. Then again I have all the security I need. I have my friends and my family, and my peers, the people I work with.

"Like I said, I didn't hide from anybody and I think that was my biggest advantage. The Phillies called when I was in the hospital. 'Anytime you want to work just call us.' You can't do better than that. That amazes me.

"As of August of 1986 to November of last year, I was in the hospital eight times, for about a month each time. Of the eight times I was only in the hospital twice because I was sick. I had pneumonia twice.

"The other times were the AZT, the one experimental drug the government has okayed, that put me in the hospital twice. It's real toxic. It's kind of like chemotherapy. I'm now on the drug for the fourth time. I felt the good effects from it. But it drops your blood count, white and red. They also gave me a drug called bactrum. It's like a penicillin; the bactrum almost killed me. In 10 days, It almost killed me. I don't know if it's because of the disease or what.

"Along with all this, when you're on the AZT I might get a headache. I might get fevers. When you get headaches the first thing they think is meningitis and spinal tap right away. I've had two spinal taps bronchoscope which is in your nose into your lungs where they do scrapings, bone marrow taps, nuclear medicine. It just goes on and on the sh-- I've had done to me. And all to keep me healthy. That's the ironic part.

. . . People don't realize that I have more to fear from people than they have to fear from me. When they get a cold, they fight it off. If I'm around them and I catch their cold, it could kill me." Whereas the only thing they have to worry from me is blood to blood, blood to semen.

"When I get sick, they treat me for it and I get healthy. Then who knows when I could get sick again. It just depends on how weak my system is or how strong the virus is. That's why it's hard to tell why I'm doing so good right now, and for so long. But I attribute it to attitude, possibly the AZT.

"My attitude is my strongest thing going for me. I'm not ready to give up and I'm enjoying life. I'm having a good time. And that's the most important thing to me. And I think it's a good lesson for anybody to learn to be happy with yourself, no matter what the odds.

"Learn to be happy from within-inside yourself, which is a hard thing for a lot of people to do. Most people walk around miserable all their lives, or they're in a job that's so stressful. And I tend to take life, and I've been working

V.U. AIDS program follows Church

By NOEL E. FALCO
News Editor

Villanova Catholics are receiving confusing signals concerning the use of prophylactics to prevent the spread of Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome [AIDS]. National and local authorities are presenting different and sometimes conflicting messages in statements regarding AIDS and condoms.

The University's own AIDS education program, which started in spring of 1987, mentions "the use of condoms in preventing the spread of disease but in no way endorses the use of condoms," said Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities on Jan. 29.

The program, which falls under the Student Life department, uses peer educators who are interested in working with other students and are trained in knowledge of AIDS and teaching approach. A team of teacher counselors and a member of the AIDS task force also work with the program, said Bonas.

Information presented includes transmission of the disease, behavior patterns and Catholic dogma. "We try to balance dogma with facts," he said.

Bonas said the program does not provide information on how to use condoms but instead "just says that it [a condom] biologically prevents spread of disease."

He further said, "Condoms are only 80 percent effective. They are only as efficient as in preventing pregnancy. Abstinence is the only answer."

Since the program's installation at Villanova, controversy has ensued in the nation over condom use.

The Surgeon General's report on AIDS, released this fall, stated, "If your [AIDS] test is positive or if you engage in high risk activities and choose not to have a test, you should tell your sexual partner. If you jointly decide to have sex, you must protect your partner by always using a rubber condom during [start to finish] sexual intercourse [vagina or rectum]."

The report included a message to youth that stated, "By saying no to sex and drugs, they [single teenage girls] can avoid AIDS which can kill them. The same is true for teenage boys who should also not have rectal intercourse with other males. It may result in AIDS."

The Surgeon General also wrote on the importance of AIDS education. The report said, "Education about AIDS should start in early elementary school and at home so that children can grow up knowing the behavior to avoid to protect themselves from exposure to the AIDS virus."

Condoms are only 80 percent effective. They are only as efficient as in preventing pregnancy. Abstinence is the only answer. Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities

The administrative board of the United States Catholic Conference [USCC] issued a statement titled "The Many Faces of AIDS: A Gospel Response" in November 1987. This statement was issued in order to help make moral choices concerning "the etiology of this deadly epidemic, its prevention, and the care of those stricken."

However, the statement has created controversy over a section that might lead people to be taught how to use contraceptives, a practice that is not permitted by Catholic dogma.

The section stated, "We [administrative board] recognize that public educational programs addressed to a wide audience will reflect the fact that some people will not act as they can and should; that they will not refrain from the type of sexual or drug-abuse behavior that can transmit AIDS. In such situations, educational efforts, if grounded in the broader moral vision outlined above, could include accurate information about prophylactic devices proposed by some medical experts as potential means of preventing AIDS."

The statement also addressed the issue of AIDS education programs in schools and religious and adult education programs. It said, "While we recognize, above all, the inalienable rights of parents as the primary educators of their children and their importance in this area, we also affirm that there ought to be educational programs about AIDS at every appropriate level of Catholic schools and religious education programs.

"Adapted to the maturity of the learners, these programs should communicate the biological facts about AIDS as well as the values which should form their consciences," it stated.

While the statement commented that several U.S. and Canadian dioceses have developed guidelines for this education, the past and present administrators of the Philadelphia diocese, in which Villanova is located, have objected to parts of the USCC statement.

Cardinal John Krol and his sucessor, Archbishop Anthony Bevilacqua, together issued a Dec. 14 statement citing "widespread confusion and a certain amount of misinterpretation concerning church teaching about the use of contraceptive devices" as a result of the USCC statement.

"It is the teaching of the Catholic Church that the sons and daughters of the Church 'are forbidden to use methods [of birth control] disapproved of by the teaching authority of the Church in its interpretation of divine law' (Vatican Council II, Pastoral Constitution on the Church in the Modern World, 51). The use of condoms is not morally acceptable and is not a morally correct way to prevent the spread of AIDS," wrote Krol and Bevilacqua.

They further said, "[I]t is regrettable that there has been some interpretation of the statement of the administrative board that runs contrary to Church teaching and is therefore unacceptable . . ."

The Rev. Owen R. Jackson, O.S.A., of Villanova's Center for Peace and Justice Education, said there is "clearly a division between conservative and progressive bishops" on this issue, although this is just one instance of the split.

"The one paragraph indicates . . . that the Church realizes a lot of people will be involved in pre-marital sex and given the human condition, in order to avoid a worse situation [through] the spread of AIDS, it is better to use contraception in an immoral situation than not. [This is why] the cardinals got upset," he said.

Jackson stressed the principle in Catholic theology that advocates the lesser of two evils.

"Given the fact we know X-amount of Villanova students play around, run around . . . are homosexual, use drugs . . . as a percentage of any population does, then the lesser of two evils is to use a contraceptive, though it's better you weren't involved that way," Jackson said.

He continued, "There's a lot of flap about what you teach. [They] don't want Catholic high schools teaching students how to use contraceptives.

"Colleges are pretty independent. Most colleges would lay it all out and you use your own judgment," he added.

Jackson said he did not feel Krol would interfere with Villanova's AIDS education program.

He commented, "Villanova has an AIDS education program that's not taught in the sense that it's okay to have immoral sex, but emphasizes the sanctity of marriage . . . it should make that clear."

Bonas said of Krol's opinion on education concerning prophylactics, "Frankly, Cardinal has not done much about it. He wouldn't go to a college campus and say no [to AIDS education]."

He added that the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, and the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, know of the content of the AIDS education program, which is under the direction of Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president of Student Life. Many Augustinians have come to presentations, he said.

Chris Lysionek, assistant dean of students, who was involved in the program last year, said the program "educated exactly the way the booklet [USCC statement] recites."

Lysionek further said the program "clearly never advises the use of condoms.

"We made a conscious decision against that in light of the religious institution," she added.

According to Lysionek, AIDS is used as a springboard for values issues in the program. Relationships and Church teachings are explored, but the bottom line is they [students] need to be educated," she explained.

Lysionek said, "Villanova University is way ahead in AIDS education. We began AIDS education early and are well ahead of other universities.

"People are impressed that a Catholic institution . . . faces issues we've been talking about and is committed to education when [some] state institutions that have more flexibility don't . . . there are people out there who are not doing anything," said Lysionek.

AIDS kills over 29,000 in U.S.

By KATHLEEN REICHNER
Staff Reporter

The Public Health Service estimates that AIDS has ended the lives of over 29,000 people in the United States.

More than 46,000 cases of AIDS have been reported to the Center for Disease Control since 1981. Nearly 800 of these cases are children.

U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop stated in his report on AIDS, "AIDS no longer is the concern of any one segment of society; it is the concern of us all."

Despite statistics and warnings, there is still much confusion about what AIDS is and how it is transmitted. There is no cure for AIDS and no vaccine to prevent it. Being educated about AIDS, therefore, can be a powerful means of preventing the spread of the disease.

The letters A-I-D-S stand for Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. According to the Surgeon General, a person who has AIDS is in the "final stages of a series of health problems caused by a virus (germ) that can be passed from one person to another chiefly during sexual contact or through sharing of needles."

This virus is generally called the AIDS virus. It attacks a person's immune system and damages his or her ability to fight other diseases. The person is then left vulnerable to infections which may cause life-threatening illnesses.

The AIDS virus invades an individual's blood stream. It then begins to attack certain white blood cells. In response to the virus, antibodies are produced and can usually be detected by blood test, two weeks to three months after infection. Even before these antibodies show up in a blood test, however, the virus can be passed to others.

Some people exposed will remain well, but can still transmit the virus to others.

Some people will develop AIDS Related Complex (ARC). They will test positive for the AIDS infection, but will have symptoms often less severe than those with classic AIDS.

Some people will develop AIDS. According to the Surgeon General "AIDS is the result of a natural progress of infection by the AIDS virus." Since the AIDS virus destroys the body's immune system, it leaves a person vulnerable to otherwise controllable infections, which cause additional diseases. These diseases have been labeled "opportunistic diseases" because they use the opportunity of lowered resistence to infect and destroy, and may eventually cause death. Opportunistic diseases include pneumonia, tuberculosis, meningitis and cancer.

Symptoms of AIDS and opportunistic diseases may take up to nine years to show up. According to the Surgeon General, 20 to 30 percent of those infected with the AIDS virus will develop an AIDS associated illness within five years.

The majority of people who test positive for the AIDS virus show no disease symptoms and may not come down with the disease for many years, if ever, stated Koop. These people can transmit the disease to others, however.

According to Koop, "A person acquires the virus during sexual contact with an infected person's blood, semen and possibly vaginal secretions. The virus then enters a person's blood stream through their rectum, vagina or penis."

He continued, "Small [unseen by the naked eye] tears in the surface lining of the vagina or rectum . . . [open] an avenue for entrance of the virus directly into the blood stream."

It is also possible to contact AIDS through intravenous drug use. The AIDS virus is carried in contaminated blood left in needles, syringes and other drug related implements. If a person then uses one of these dirty needles, he or she has been injected with the virus. Even a small amount of contaminated blood can contain the AIDS virus.

A small amount of people with AIDS contracted it through contaminated blood transfusions. These cases occurred before much was known about AIDS. Currently, all blood banks screen blood, and less than 1 out of 100,000 donations are estimated to be possibly unsafe.

It is also possible for mothers to infect their unborn children. Approximately one-third of babies born to AIDS infected mothers will also develop AIDS.

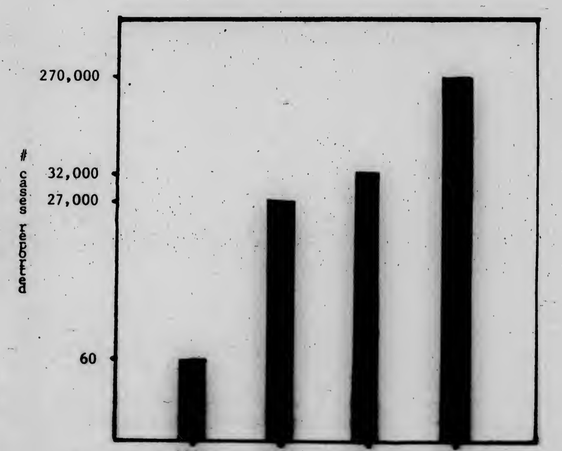
AIDS is not transmitted through casual social contact. Shaking hands, hugging, social kissing, crying, coughing or sneezing is reported, by Koop, not to transmit AIDS.

There are no reported cases of people contracting AIDS in swimming pools, hot tubs or restaurants.

There are no reported cases of getting AIDS through the sharing of bed linens, towels, cups, straws, dishes or eating utensils.

No one has reported catching AIDS from doorknobs, toilet seats or furniture.

A person cannot catch AIDS from giving blood.



There are no known cases of contracting AIDS from insects, cats or dogs.

There are no reported cases of contracting AIDS from another person's tears or saliva.

In order to curb the spread of AIDS, the Surgeon General and the Public Health service are advising people to avoid promiscuous sexual practices and to avoid sexual contact with prostitutes. Unless there is absolute certainty that a sexual partner does not have AIDS, the use of a condom is recommended, according to the Surgeon General.

The Public Health Service is stressing the importance of mutually faithful monogamous relationships. No one should inject illicit drugs, but if someone does, he or she should use a clean, unused needle or syringe.

People with questions about AIDS can call the Public Health Service AIDS hotline (800-342-AIDS).

AIDS prevention at Villanova:

Remains consistent with Church views

By NOEL E. FALCO
News Editor

According to a College Press Service [CPS] report, "While Catholic colleges across the country opened the new term with the theological problems of even talking about condoms, the nation's secular campuses kept signing up to sell prophylactics at a rapid pace."

A Dec. 3 statement of the American Catholic bishops on school-based clinics stated, "We object to the campaign to provide contraceptive services through school-based clinics on both moral and practical grounds.

"The distribution of condoms to prevent pregnancy and the sexual transmission of AIDS [Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome] deserves similar skepticism [as the distribution of sterile intravenous needles]," the statement reported.

Gary Bonas, assistant director of student activities, said on Jan. 29, that lack of condom distribution at Villanova is not a disservice to students. Catholic students are not at a disadvantage compared to other secular university students.

"We ought to represent the values of the Church. The value is sexual abstinence. Realistically, it is not going to happen. Students need to be mature and make their own decision and remember that anybody is affected," Bonas said.

According to another CPS report, "[M]ost Catholic campus health officials have embraced the December statement by the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, which disagreed with official Vatican dogma and said congregants should know condoms may help them avoid the disease but "unlike scores of other colleges, the Catholic campuses are not dispensing condoms."

Statement issued on AIDS by Church

By SUSAN E. CORCORAN
Features Editor

Until recently the Catholic Church has stood strong on its view on AIDS educational policies. The issue has been strongly debated among Catholic hierarchy since the administrative board of the United States Catholic Conference released and qualified a statement that included information about condoms in public education programs. The policy was passed in December of 1987.

The statement is the work of a four-bishop task force headed by Bishop William Hughes of Covington, Ky. It was released because of the urgent nature of its subject after the approval by the 48-member administrative board of the United States Catholic Conference.

This is the first time the nation's bishops have given any sanction to a sexual practice that departs from the Church's ban on artificial birth control. Studies show that the ban is ignored by the vast majority of Catholics.

The 7,700-word policy statement, nine months in drafting, calls for extensive public education to slow the spread of AIDS.

"Because we live in a pluralistic society," the bishops said in explaining their unprecedented concession, such programs "will reflect the fact that some people will not act as they can and should; they will not refrain from the type of sexual or drug abuse behavior which can transmit AIDS."

This is the first time the nation's bishops have given any sanction to a sexual practice that departs from the Church's ban on artificial birth control.

Programs that include condom information, the statement said, "should indicate that abstinence outside of marriage and fidelity within marriage as well as the avoidance of intravenous drug abuse are the only morally correct and medically sure ways to prevent the spread of AIDS."

The declaration calls for AIDS education programs "at every appropriate level" in Catholic schools and colleges beginning in the fifth and sixth grades.

Throughout the document, the bishops, "as participants in the public life of the nation," repeatedly affirmed their eagerness to collaborate "in the development of an informed and enlightened public policy for the prevention of AIDS."

The statement was filled with compassion for the victims of AIDS. The bishops also addressed a variety of AIDS-related controversies, opposing both "widespread mandatory testing" for AIDS and "indiscriminate quarantining" of people with AIDS.

The bishops also discussed their strong condenmation of the "negative attitudes as well as acts of violence directed against gay and lesbian people."

A concern over the health care professionals who refuse medical or dental care to AIDS patients was also a topic addressed by the bishops at the conference. "We call upon all in the health care and support professions to be mindful of their general moral obligation" to care for afflicted people, while taking the necessary precautions.

Hospitals, "especially Catholic-affiliated institutions," the bishops said, "have the responsibility and obligation to ensure that people with AIDS and their families are cared for compassionately."

The bishops also went on to say Catholic institutions and "the whole Church have roles to play in ensuring dignity, acceptance, care and justice for people with the HIV human immunodeficiency virus infection and their families." They also want to see people with AIDS to be "encouraged to lead productive lives in their community and place of work."

The Catholic Church has decided to accept its responsibility to set a good example in seeing that any AIDS victims on its payroll to "be employed as long as it is appropriate."

The document passed by the collected bishops also went on to address the problem of living arrangements for those afflicted with AIDS. The statement said, "Landlords are not justified in denying decent housing to AIDS victims merely because of their illness."

It also calls for funeral directors not to refuse their services to those who have died of the disease.

The Church also believes that those infected with AIDS "in and of itself" should not exclude a student from Catholic elementary or secondary schools or religious education programs.

The bishops also called for increased federal funding for research into the disease and for the care of AIDS victims who lack adequate health insurance or private resources.

The Church's conditional acceptance of condoms is expected to create a stir among conservatives even though the bishops make a strong case for the traditional Catholic view that human sexuality "is to be genitally expressed only in a monogamous, heterosexual relationship of lasting fidelity in marriage."

AIDS issue challenges the media

By CINDY BOSNIAN
Staff Reporter

The death of Rock Hudson marked a dramatic turning point in the history of AIDS media coverage, which tripled practically overnight.

With this increase would also emerge a "new journalism" defined by more explicit language and concern for the issues of confidentiality and privacy. So-called "family newspapers" would become more informative — often graphic — because they felt it was their duty to use all available knowledge to educate the public about the danger of AIDS.

Continous debate persists concerning the degree of information which should be revealed in obituaries about AIDS victims. In the past, newspapers were hesitant to discuss that which might invade the privacy of the deceased or his or her family and friends.

Today, they are realizing that withholding information can be detrimental to those already afflicted and the public at large. It can lead to an underestimation of the extent of the virus and delay progress in its prevention and control.

People with the condition [AIDS is not a disease, it allows other disease to kill] or at high risk, such as homosexuals or IV-drug users, are especially supportive of the increased coverage, to the extend that it is accurate.

Although the press has a responsibility to help educate, most journalists insist that their responsibility is to report the news. Because the United States lacks a national AIDS policy, the press has become the primary source of education.

The press has tried to repute this contention by citing, among other things, an October 1987 Gallup poll in which 29 percent of the respondents still believed that someone could catch AIDS by donating blood. Doctors and the press have reported this as virtually impossible.

Jumping from underreporting to an overabundance of information has no doubt been advantageous, but has also brought claims concerning the transmission of AIDS which are medically unfounded, for example, transmission through insects.

Furthermore, disagreement exists as to the threat of AIDS to the general heterosexual population. Newspapers may seem to be exaggerating this threat but in actuality, AIDS experts cannot even agree on it.

Common sense would dictate that the all-out coverage can at least serve as a warning signal to those who might dismiss AIDS as a condition which only strikes others.

The United States' lack of a national policy has crippled efforts in fighting this epidemic. America is the most afflicted western country, yet nationally has done the least to combat it. Controversy has torn apart the Reagan administration and Congress from the start.

While Surgeon General C. Everett Koop advocates a more liberal policy — widespread sex education and voluntary testing, conservatives assert that explicit education will only promote the issues of drug use and homosexualty, and that mandatory testing is needed. The administration has seemed to want to rid itself of the responsibility by passing it along to the individual states.

And the debate rages on. President Ronald Reagan's commission is finally coming together after a period of internal turmoil which has resulted in a firing and two resignations since September.

Obviously the public favors education — a Gallup poll of 1,000 adults taken in October 1987 revealed that 81 percent supported AIDS research, and increase of over 10 percentage points from the 1986 poll. Also, AIDS dominated the chart (at 68 percent) as "the most urgent health problem facing this country at the present time," followed by cancer (at 14 percent).

Whereas public response is in favor of education, certain groups within society, such as politicians, TV and radio stations and businesses often seem more concerned with protecting their image or getting the vote.

For example, many stations refuse to run federal government AIDS ads because of the ads' controversial and often graphic content.

But with the evolution of "new journalism," the public will be better informed that AIDS is not just a condition which affects certain groups, but can affect us all.

In our own backyard, Philadelphia sets a good example of a city determined to educate its citizens. The city spent $90,000 on a TV radio and poster campaign that was aimed at the city's youth. The ads which began running Oct. 1, 1987, linked together forceful images of sex and death, using the slogan, "Stop a killer, use a condom." The campaign is only part of the city's $1.8 million AIDS prevention, testing and counseling program.

Crossing over to the other side of the country, Berkeley, California, is another city which has taken responsibility to inform. The city maintains the distinction of being the first city in the nation to mail AIDS pamphlets to each of its 55,000 households. Costing $50,000, the campaign has also been kept to a factual tone, lacking any graphic material.

Last year, Koop issued a 36-page brochure on AIDS to parents and teachers, which is in high demand. However, the federal government, despite adequate funding and a congressional directive, has failed to distribute any brochure nationwide.

The present state of AIDS education in the United States clearly has a long way to go. But with the evolution of "new journalism," the public will be better informed that AIDS is not just a condition which affects certain groups, but can affect us all. To lessen confusion and heighten public awareness, a strong national policy is badly needed, and soon. Philadelphia and Berkeley have demonstrated that cooperation and open minds are the keys in fighting the spread of this deadly epidemic together.

V.U. responds to the AIDS crisis

By KATHLEEN REICHNER
Staff Reporter

There have been several programs at Villanova in response to the AIDS crisis, according to Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities.

Two years ago, stated Bonas, Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, created an AIDS task force, consisting of Bonas, the Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president for Student Life and Christine A. Lysionek, assistant to dean of students.

The task force had two goals, said Bonas. 1. To recommend a policy in case a member of the Villanova community contracts AIDS, and 2. to investigate how to prevent the spread of AIDS throughout Villanova.

Education was thought to be the best prevention against AIDS. In the fall 1986 students were selected as peer educators and were trained about the disease. In the spring of 1987, the peer educators conducted various informational programs in residence halls.

Last semester, Lip-it, sponsored by the Resident Student Association [RSA], raised $1,150 for child victims of AIDS, at Children's Hospital of Philadelphia.

Also taking place last semester was the Awareness Lecture Series. This was a three-day program in residence halls. Peer educators answered questions about AIDS and showed a film on AIDS which was sponsored by the national offices of Kappa Alpha Theta.

The most recent AIDS program was sponsored by the biology department and the Sigma Xi scientific research society. On Feb. 13, Caroline L. MacLeod, M.D., director of the Institute of Tropical Medicine, spoke on the causes and spread of AIDS.

Church stresses need for policy

By NOEL E. FALCO
News Editor

The United States Catholic Conference's statement on acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) recommended that "dioceses draw up, as soon as possible, their own policy on the responsibility of the Church as pastoral minister, employer, educator, and social service provider and clarify the application of state and local public policy to the diocesan guidelines."

According to the statement's policy recommendation, people infected with AIDS "are entitled to the same treatment with regard to employment as other persons." Health and other benefits available to other employees should be provided to those unable to continue working.

Employment education programs should be offered by church agencies in order to dispel fears of contracting AIDS through casual contact in the workplace, the statement said.

As to education, the statement said infection with AIDS should not be a reason to exclude students, but that alternative educational and cathetical arrangements may be made for infected children "whose behavior has been shown to be a danger to others." This includes children who cannot control, due to neurological damage, their bodily functions or those inclined to bite others.

Catholic social services and health agencies should ensure the availability of medical care and support services to those infected. "No client, patient or applicant for services from a Catholic agency or facility should be denied assistance, and employees should be held accountable for compliance with this policy," the statement said.

Also, the confidentiality of records, files and other information about the human immunodeficiency virus [HIV] status of people should be protected.

The Surgeon General's report on AIDS also stated "... [C]urrent public health practice is to protect the privacy of the individual infected with the AIDS virus and to maintain the strictest confidentiality concerning his/her public records."

The reason behind this, according to the report, is that public reporting of those infected often causes victims to "go underground out of the mainstream of health care and education."

The Surgeon General also recommended the implementation of AIDS task forces in his report. These AIDS task forces would combine public health officials and others "who can speak broadly to issues of access to care, provision of care and the availability of community and psychiatric support services."

Also, the confidentiality of records, files and other information about the human immunodeficiency virus status of people should be protected.

Task forces would be used in the community "to develop plans and policies, to speak, and to act for the good of the public health at every level." They would provide informational and educational programs to answer the concerns of those not infected, but "as AIDS impacts more strongly on society, they should be charged with making recommendations to provide for the needs of those afflicted with AIDS."

The report also recommended sex education including information on heterosexual and homosexual relationships with "a heavy emphasis on prevention of AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases." This education must start at the lowest grade possible as part of a health and hygiene program.

Schools should further take into consideration the needs of children affected with AIDS and AIDS related complex [ARC]. Higher authorities will have to provide guidelines for these needs on a case-by-case basis.

"Offices, factories and other work sites should have a plan in operation for education of the work force and accommodation of AIDS or ARC patients before the first such case appears at the work site," the report stated. Further, unions should issue preventive health messages to employees.

The report said, "Employees with AIDS or ARC should be dealt with as are any workers with a chronic illness."

AIDS patient interviewed

at this for a long time long before I had this disease, and enjoy life, to be happy. And it's less stressful and I think that's helping me get through this, both mentally and physically.

"I'm on the AZT now. I'm on the lowest dose of anyone in the country. Some people will argue with you that it's not doing me any good. All I can say to them is look at me. So who's to say? It's the drug, it's my attitude, it's God above? I have a strong belief at this point. I've been looking for that all my life. This just helped me find it quicker.

Anybody can get this, and that's the bottom line.

"I try to get across two or three messages. One of which is how this thing is transmitted. The next is to get people to understand they don't have to be afraid of somebody with the disease. There's virtually nothing to worry about from that person. And the last is to show compassion for somebody who has this disease.

"It's torture, literal torture when you're sick. Twice a day for a month straight my temperature went up to 104 degrees. And that's because of the drugs you're on. There's so many things you go through, physically. I was to the point where I was sick so much, that I forgot what it was like to feel normal.

"And now I'm to the point where I've worked so hard at getting myself back. I'm doing everything I ever wanted to do. The bottom line is I have all my beliefs and I'm doing good. Until I get hit with something else I'm going to keep doing good. And even then I'm going to come back strong, maybe even stronger. At which case, I'm not worried about dying.

"The thing that scares me is suffering. You suffer so much with this disease. The physical and emotional pain are about equal.

"I don't care if you're gay or not, you're a human being. We are human beings and we all deserve to be treated with some kind of dignity and respect. It's so traumatic, when it's terminal. You know you're going to die. And just imagine losing everyone, your family, your friends. What reason do you have to go on? It's real easy to be discouraged.

"My friends don't understand it, 'How do you do this, how do you go through with a cheerful attitude day after day.' I work at finding things I enjoy, rather than dwelling on negative things.

"I've had to become stronger. I've had to become more understanding toward people who don't understand what I'm going through. The thing I'm scared the most of is giving this to somebody else.

"You get tremendously lonely,

I often say that it's the person you know has it you have to worry about least. It's the person you don't know who has it, because they probably don't know they have it, that's the one that's going around infecting whoever they're with.

and I know that desire is real great. And I know there are people out there who have the disease who go out and do their thing, and just don't say anything to anybody. The bottom line is that I am responsible, but I can't make anyone else responsible.

"I value every day. When it's a rainy day, I can look up in the sky and say, 'this isn't so bad.' I've learned to appreciate all kinds of things. There are so many things out there that are good. I make sure I take the time to appreciate things. There's so much to appreciate.

"We tend to blow everything off in our normal lives. Life is too short; life is definitely too short to just blow it off like that. If you want to be happy you have to learn to appreciate little things. And that's what I do. I have two dogs at home; they're probably my best companions. They're a great source of joy to me.

"I don't hope for a cure. I hope for a miracle. Even though I believe the cure will come, but I don't believe it will be in my lifetime. So I'd rather pray for a miracle than hope for a cure. If a cure comes along, I'll be the first person to jump up and down, bang my head against the wall and get in line, but I just don't see that happening. I try to keep an even keel. I keep my sense of humor and it keeps me going.

"I don't try to scare people. I'm not trying to make anyone panic. I'm just trying to tell them it's out there. It can happen to anybody, believe me. That's why I say until there's a vaccine, until there's a cure, protect yourself.

"I hated wearing a condom, but knowing what I know now, I wouldn't have it any other way. Unless I was absolutely sure about the person I was with, and you can never be absolutely sure.

"There's going to be a cure. There's going to be a vaccine eventually, a couple years, three years maybe. It's a small price to pay to keep alive. I'm not trying to scare anybody, just prevent them from going through what I went through.

Terry is currently working and lecturing at area schools. He is aided, no doubt, by his incredible optimism and humor. He shows how very real and very deadly AIDS is. He also shows how powerful the human spirit is. He has refused to let the disease get the best of him. And his dedication to AIDS education made him so truly compassionate.

Villanova youngsters invade campus

By MEGAN WHITE

Well, the panic is over and everyone can relax again. Sibling Weekend has come and gone, and your civic duty for your family is over. No more worrying about what to do with a nine year old and how to keep your friends under control in front of that nine year old.

But let us be honest, Sibling Weekend turned out to be a blast. It brought us closer to the little people in our family, and it gave us a chance to relax and have some clean fun.

A lot of work went into putting Sibling Weekend together. A committee of 10 people, including the two chairpersons, Dave Court and Jon Mooney, have been working diligently on the project since September. They tried to find events that would entertain both the siblings and the students. The Resident Student Association, the Association of Commuting Students and Campus Ministry all helped out to make the weekend a success.

A wide variety of activities were planned for the weekend. Friday night there were two showings of "Goonies" and a carnival which was held in the Belle Air Terrace. On Saturday there was a trip to the Franklin Institute for those people who wanted to venture outside of the campus. Or if you were not interested in that, the pool and gym were open at the du Pont Pavilion.

A pep rally was scheduled in the afternoon to get everyone psyched for the Villanova vs. Pittsburgh basketball game. Dinner was available in the Connelly Center, which was a definite welcome after breakfast in the Pit.

The basketball game, which was the most popular event this weekend, was followed by a dance to keep everyone rocking into the morning hours.

Two Villanova siblings get a spoonful of college life during Sibling Weekend.

On Sunday, Sibling Weekend was brought to an end with a special mass.

The best thing about the weekend is the way it brought the students of Villanova together as a family. It showed a different side of students than you usually see at a party or a night out.

Dave Court commented on how great it was to see people who were willing to take an entire weekend to spend with their younger brothers and sisters. "It's a wonderful way to share the Villanova experience with the family," said Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities.

Now that it is over and we are all closer to our little brothers and sisters let us not forget what we are here for — a major load of homework followed by a ton of responsibilities, and maybe, just maybe a few good parties on the weekends.

'Therese' captivates Cultural Film viewers

By ROSEMARY GAMBURG
Staff Reporter

"Therese," the third film to be shown in the Cultural Film Series "Cinematic Images of Women," generated an unexpected, yet inspiring response.

For the first time in several years, according to Dr. Joan Lynch, director of the Cultural Film Series, all showings were sold out. Such attendance, at a film which depicts the life of a saint, in times of complex and convoluted storylines, graphic portrayal of violent acts on the screen, and space age special effects, is a phenomenon. Students and members of the community flocked to experience "Therese" for themselves. Comments of many viewers in the theater indicated that they had returned for a second, third and even fourth viewing.

What has created this overwhelming interest in a saint who is best known for her "little way?" What are the reasons for such a phenomenon?

This film which produced such an impressive box office draw was not a big budget Hollywood film, but a masterfully simple, French film directed by Alain Cavalier. It is the fourth, and most recent film about St. Therese of Lisieux.

Released in 1986, "Therese" was the winner of the Jury Prize at the Cannes Film Festival that same year. The austere yet beautiful filming of "Therese" reflects the intensity of Therese's life of contemplation, and also depicts the pure love and joy which she gave to those around her. The cinematic style is stark, minimal and direct.

In Lynch's introduction to the film she stated, "It is a perfect amalgam of form and content. There are no sharp camera angles. The sets have no doors, walls or windows.

"Cavalier uses minimal color and no music. The viewer experiences aurally, as well as visually, the silence and solitude of the cloistered Carmelites. Editing is done with a fade in and fade out to black, simulating the veils worn by the nuns, reflecting the elusiveness and mystery of spirituality."

"Therese" tells the story of Therese Martin, born in 1873. Her family was extremely religious, in a time of rising secularism in France. Therese entered the Carmelite Order at the delicate age of 14, and died of tuberculosis in 1897 at the age of 27. While Therese was in the convent, the mother superior encouraged her to keep a diary, later titled The Story of a Soul. This work has subsequently been published worldwide.

Because of the flood of miracles attributed to the intercession of the "Little Flower," the church dispensed with the period of 50 years which is the time required before the cause of canonization is begun. Therese was beatified in 1923 by Pope Pius XI and canonized a saint in 1925, only 28 years after her death.

Therese's practical approach to sanctity, called "the little way," was based on a simple trust and love of God, the Father. Therese performed no miracles in her lifetime, nor was she a martyr, yet she is one of the most impressive and significant phenomena in contemporary times.

The discussion was co-led by Lynch, associate professor of communication arts at Villanova University, Barbara Agnew, associate professor of religious studies at Villanova University and Joanne Cann, associate professor of religious studies and pastoral counseling at Neuman College.

According to Lynch, St. Therese is popular because she represents millions of people who live quiet lives of sanctity. These people follow the little way by performing daily duties with total love. Agnew felt St. Therese lived a life of love, which can be imitated by contemporary christians.

Therese's message was that of a loving God, against a background which preached the need for corporeal suffering and justice. She saw holiness as unconditional love, permeating everything. Cann stated that in the last 18 months of her life, Therese identified with those without faith. She was a sister of those who did not believe, wondering herself about the existence of heaven, yet she had a deep insight into the suffering she withstood. She showered love on all whom she met — this is her legacy to us.

This "phenomenon" which we have witnessed may originate from a search for spirituality in our complex, overstimulated world. Although contemplation is not familiar to many of us, heightened interest in it hints at our desire to expand our inner selves, possibly discovering on our journey, that we too can make God our "personal reality," as Therese has taught by her example.

In late March, the Cultural Film Series will present a documentary on a living saint, Mother Teresa, who practices love through action. For those seeking a path toward spirituality, "Mother Teresa" will also hold an inspirational message.

Summer interns "dig" Jerusalem

During the 1988 Jerusalem Summer Study Program, Villanova students will have the opportunity to do these things, and much more while studying at the Tantur Ecumenical Institute. The program is being sponsored by our office of international studies, in conjunction with similar departments at Notre Dame, Georgetown and Fordham Universities.

According to Dr. Thomas M. Ricks, director of the program, "There is no other American university program that sponsors this type of educational opportunity. We are unique in offering this academically and culturally excellent experience to our students."

The archaeological dig, extensive touring, visiting lecturers from all over Israel and volunteer job experience are just some of the exciting activities that our students will be taking part in while at Tantur. Also, they will receive six weeks of intensive conversational arabic, three weeks of modern middle east history (taught by Ricks), and another three weeks in biblical archaeology. Trips include visits to the Jordan Valley, Tel Aviv/Jaffa, the West Bank and Hebron, Haifa/Akka and Eilat.

"To introduce and submerge the students into a different culture is the goal of this program," said Ricks. "They will be doing extensive fieldwork in the country during their stay. They will spend several days outside

Sigma Pi assists handicapped

By DOUG SCANCARELLA
Sports Editor

MBF is a non-profit computer school directed at the needs of handicapped and disabled students. Its goal is future employment in a variety of fields for its students. The school provides a multi-leveled program for handicapped students, who may enter the school from the age of 11 through adulthood. These students are allowed to progress at their own pace.

The organization was founded about a year ago by Maryanne Flannagan. Flannagan's daughter, Megan, whom the company is named after, suffers from cerebral palsy. Megan, who is presently a junior at Archbishop Carroll High School, showed a great interest in computers when she attended the Variety Club's summer camp. Maryanne thought that computers would be a good field for her daughter to fall back on. Unfortunately, a computers school for high school handicapped students did not exist, and that prompted Maryanne, to form the MBF computer center.

It all started in November of 1986 when a dinner was held for potential MBF supporters. It was there they met Dr. Rocco Martino and Dick Bannister, who both became valuable assets to MBF. Martino now serves as chief executive officer while Bannister is the author of the curriculum. This curriculum consists of computer literacy, computer organization, data management, word processing and analysis.

This program seeks to make its graduates an integral part of the outside work force. In addition, they will grow in pride and in self-esteem.

As of now, the computer center has 14 students. Most of these students are transported by their parents, but there are a few that do not have any form of transportation. For these people, volunteer drivers are needed.

These volunteers are the brothers of Sigma Pi fraternity at Villanova. The brothers drive the students back and forth three times a week and are at the disposal of MBF if any other emergencies arise.

With transportation being a major concern of the computer center, definite solutions must be sought to solve the problem. Government assistance in transportation is an extremely lengthy process, and MBF was informed they could possibly receive aid in the year 1990. So with Sigma Pi's help, the MBF center is able to move ahead and fulfill their primary needs.

Sigma Pi's organizer of MBF transportation, Rich DePiano, stated, "When we first announced this proposal to the brotherhood I was surprised by the positive response we received. Even with busy schedules the brothers still take the time to help with this valuable service and will continue to do so in the future."

As the organization's enrollment increases, more drivers will be needed. The center will be looking for as many Villanova students as possible. A proprosal to use the Greek system as a whole is being considered. The more positive Greek involvement in projects such as this will reflect well on the Greek community at Villanova.

If anybody has any services to offer the computer center they can contact Tish Magen at 265-8301 or Rich DePiano at 527-9244.

Last year, five Villanova students joined — two students from Georgetown and two from Fordham and according to Ricks, they had a marvelous time. This year Ricks expects a total of 15 to 20 students total from the four-school consortium, five from Villanova.

The trip begins on June 11, and runs until Aug. 7. The cost is $2,250 plus airfare, to include room and board for eight weeks, tuition, six excursions and a program fee. Application deadline is Feb. 22, and the requirements for application are available in the office of international studies, 208 Tolentine Hall.

who knows, who cares

Good morning Villanova ... it's lottery time, brought to you by the Office of Residence Strife ... time for daddy to buy a Radnor House Condo ... condo ... National Condoms Week has come and gone ... and we still can't say condom ... maybe the new dorms will solve the housing problems ... by 2035 ... we bet they won't even be coed ... but that's okay ... we still have our annual coed slumber keg party in Stanford anyway ... if Insecurity doesn't break it up ... we know the R.A.s won't ... they'll be partying with us ... there's no need to worry about who'll be on duty in the dorms anymore ... we're all going to be good little students ... on our honor ... honor ... maybe the administration will honor our requests for a unified graduation — outside, but we doubt it ... we can't have anyone getting rained on at Villanova, the Official Rain Forest of America ... but who knows and who cares.

Campus Ministry: Volunteer during spring break

By REV. RAY JACKSON, O.S.A.

If you get a break from school work and the tedium of late winter, why not go south? The warm waters of the Carribean beckon. The surf and sand of Florida offer relaxation. Mayan ruins and exotic tropical drinks will intrigue and numb the mind. On the other hand, a week spent at St. Francis Inn, a house of hospitality for the homeless, destitute and improverished people of Philadelphia can also invigorate the heart and expand the mind.

"Wait a minute, are you crazy? Are you telling me that I can have more fun and excitement in Philadelphia working with the poor than I can have bar hopping in downtown vacationland?" No, I do not want to compare the relative merits of where people spend their free time; all I want to do is offer one alternative.

It may very well be that going home and relaxing without books for a week could be the best kind of love you can give yourself. We all need free time and time alone in order to regain the strength necessary to pursue the academic demands placed on us during the school year. Sometimes, however, we gain energy when we reach out and serve others.

That is what the spring break volunteer project at St. Francis Inn is about. It involves, among other things, working on home repairs for the elderly, visiting people who are shut-ins or ill, feeding the children, the unwed mothers and an assortment of street people.

In addition to helping these people, there is the huge bonus of sharing the experience with other students. In past years, new friendships were formed and old ones deepened.

Most of the days are spent working on projects together in the neighborhood of St. Francis Inn, while the evenings are generally reserved for discussions on the day's events and some free time. The vast majority of kids who decided to spend spring break in Philadelphia during the past several years have claimed it is the best-ever category of vacation time.

If you have not made plans for the break, why not join us for a volunteer week? The next two meetings are on Feb. 23 and March 1 at 6:30 p.m. in the Center for Peace and Justice, Sullivan Hall. We may not be able to guarantee you a tan, but we certainly can guarantee a worthwhile, memorable and well-spent experience.

Professor conquers the fear of math

By KAREN IOVINO
Staff Reporter

As an English major, I have always hated math. I avoid numbers at all costs (no pun intended). I dread the day that I have to fill out my own income tax forms, and I even hate using the MAC machine in Connelly Center. If you are like me, you might be interested in a course called "math anxiety workshop" taught by Dr. Michael Levitan, associate professor of mathematical sciences at Villanova.

The phrase "math anxiety" came into being in the late 1970s when author Sheila Tobias published her book Overcoming Math Anxiety.

Levitan, in Australia on sabbatical at the time, found the concept intriguing. He had noticed many bright students with an inability to do math and often wondered about the reasons.

"I used to feel the frustration from both sides, my frustration at not being able to get through to a student, and the frustration of the student who wanted to learn but was not able to," Levitan said.

Upon returning to Villanova in 1979, he created the math anxiety workshop.

Math anxiety can do more than just affect academic performance. Levitan remembers people who would not go into nursing because they knew that a course in statistics was a requirement for a nursing major. This kind of anxiety can deter people from careers that would otherwise be fulfilling, and can also lower one's self esteem.

For these reasons Levitan believes that math anxiety is psychological, not mathematical, in nature. It is simply an avoidance of anything to do with math. It can stem from something as simple as an incompetent teacher in grade school, or an illness that prevented a student from learning a new math concept along with the rest of the class.

Levitan asserts that the students must recognize their role in overcoming the problem. "Math is a tricky subject in that it continually builds on previous knowledge. It's hard to build on a shaky foundation," Levitan states.

More women than men suffer from math anxiety, and this may stem from societal expectations. Society preaches that men, not women, should be the ones to excel at math. It has always been a so-called masculine subject. Levitan estimates that the ratio of women to men in his class has been about three to one.

Levitan's class is an innovative one. Because of his belief that math anxiety is worsened by a classroom situation, the students sit in a circle rather than in rows. Participants work on developing assertiveness, and on building their self esteem. Levitan trains them to have faith in their abilities.

He states, "Many people describe the only math problems they can solve as 'easy' ones. They think, 'If I solved it, it must be easy.'" This is exactly the type of thinking that Levitan hopes to overcome through his workshop.

So if you have always avoided long division, bank statements and all numbers in general, maybe the math anxiety workshop is for you. As Levitan concludes, "It's the atmosphere of support, the interaction and sharing among the participants, that makes the workshops successful."

'The In Crowd' disappoints

By ELANA ROSE STARR
Staff Reporter

"The In Crowd" directed by Mark Rosenberg
Orion Pictures

A number of motion pictures have been shot in the Philadelphia area over the past few years. "Taps," "Trading Places," "Birdy," "Blow Out" and "Mannequin" are just a few of the films that were made on location here. You can now add "The In Crowd" to the list. The work of West Oak Lane native Mark Rosenthal, "The In Crowd," set in Philadelphia, had its world premiere two weeks ago at the AMC Palace Theatre in Center City.

"The In Crowd" is a passably diverting period piece, circa 1965. It is about an afterschool television dance show, which is the ostensible replacement for "American Bandstand" after Dick Clark has moved the show to warmer climes. Joe Pantoliano, late of "La Bamba," "Risky Business," and "Empire of the Sun" (he played sleazy thugs in the last two), is the smiling but manipulative host, Perry, a shark in a sharkskin jacket. Perry acquires quite a following, with most of the area teens, from city toughs to middle-class kids in the suburbs, tuning in to "Dance Party" religiously.

Del Green is one of the latter. An "A" student in his senior year at Cheltenham High School, Del was "brought into this world to go to medical school." But when we first meet him, instead of studying for his college boards, "Dance Party" is blaring on his family's black-and-white television, and he is doing a reasonable Tom Cruise imitation in the living room to the Contours' classic "Do You Love Me?" Del has a crush on the show's featured dancer, a blonde airhead named Vicky. A few days later, Del crashes "Dance Party," and he not only gets to appear on television, but he is also paired off with Vicky, whose tough boyfriend has been banished from the show.

Del becomes a "Dance Party" regular, thanks to all the fan mail that pours in, and predictably, the film follows him as he learns just how far apart his two worlds — the "Dance Party" studio on the one hand, home and school on the other — are.

Del's home life is safe and staid; the biggest brouhaha in his neighborhood is when a neighbor shows off his new Cadillac. Most, if not all, of Del's classmates are college bound, following in their parents' footsteps. (Del's father is a Temple University alumnus, according to his sweatshirt.)

The "Dance Party" regulars, though, are from working-class areas. Vicky, for example, lives in a grimy Germantown rowhouse, and her dad is a cop, a true Rizzo stalwart. Vicky dismisses college as unnecessary: "I'm a girl, silly!" She sees higher education as strictly the province of wealthy young males. And while the local guys enjoy their stints on the show, they are all toughs right out of "West Side Story." As one of them explains, "Dancin', fightin', what's the difference?"

The young actors, all relative unknowns, are very good in their roles. Donovan Leitch (son of the '60s pop singer) is affable as Del, and Jennifer Runyon, who looks like a cross between Darryl Hannah and Mariel Hemingway, is fine as the nubile Vicky. But the real stars of the movie are the local sights and the music.

Rosenberg includes plenty of familiar scenery: shots of the Tower Theatre and 69th Street (home to the real "American Bandstand" when it originated from Philadelphia); Temple's Tomlinson Theatre; the Allens Lane SEPTA train station; Independence Square and Wildwood are all featured. It is certainly fun to pick out all the recognizable locales. Cameos by such long-time area fixtures as Sally Starr and Hy Lit also add to the ambience.

The soundtrack, both the background music and the dance tunes, feature an assortment of rock 'n roll hits from the era, including "Last Night I Had a Wonderful Dream;" Dylan's "Highway 61 Revisited" and, of course, Dobie Gray's rendition of "The In Crowd." It is a nostalgic and affectionate recollection, but the attitude toward music is somewhat anachronistic. By early 1965, the Beatles were firmly entrenched as a rock phenomenon, yet Perry never plays any of their songs. In fact, when a "mop top" British group wants to appear on the show, Perry turns them down, condescendingly claiming that he can not tell if they are male or female. No wonder his show is being canned to make way for the "Psychedelic Shack"; Perry just can not keep up with the changing times.

Joe Pantoliano in the center of his Dance Party dancers in the 'In Crowd.'

The dance sequences should have been a highlight of the film, as they were choreographed by Jeff Hornaday, who designed the dance numbers for "Flashdance." Five years ago, the routines in "The In Crowd" would have been considered imaginative; after the rousing "Footloose," and last summer's "Dirty Dancing," however, they seem merely derivative. Still, it was amusing to see line dancing once again.

Earlier this year, Mayor Goode's office announced that a special task force had been formed to lure filmmakers to Philadelphia. No other American city is courting on-location shooting so openly, and many more films will surely be made here during the coming years. Let us hope that they are more original than "The In Crowd."

The Source provides off-beat insights

By DIANE DRAGONETTE
Staff Reporter

Philadelphia's newest music magazine, The Source: The Progressive Entertainment Magazine for Young Adults, arrived on Villanova's campus last week. If you happened to run into the two enthusiastic distributors in front of Connelly Center, then you probably received a complimentary copy. The publisher, Matthew Pinto, recently discussed exactly what The Source has in store for music lovers everywhere.

The Source contains new music, humor, satire, fashion, art, books and movies as well as social and political issues. Pinto explained, "We are addressing new music listeners who are politically and socially conscious. The magazine is going to have an underground flavor not like the pop played by major stations, more like the new music played by college stations. I want a quality magazine, and I'm putting heavy emphasis on this."

The Source established connections with Villanova while forming The Alternative Music Alliance. The Alternative Music Alliance includes college radio stations that focus on alternative music. Among the stations are our own WKVU, Drexel's WKDU, Widener's WDNR, Swarthmore's WSRN, Cabrini's WCAB and West Chester's WCUR. Describing the Alliance, Pinto said, "I felt that alternative music was not being recognized on a large scale in this city, and if we unified the media that plays this type of music, we would have a stronger voice."

Although The Source deals primarily with music, social and political issues are also significant. Pinto added, "I wanted to publish a magazine that would not only entertain, but also stimulate the reader with important pertinent articles of substance. We want to increase the awareness of our readers about important issues that are going on and may affect them."

The premiere issue of The Source lives up to the standards that Pinto has set. The cover article deals with radio in Philadelphia, and the damage that yuppies have caused in radio programming. Other highlights include interviews with Suzanne Vega and local favorites, Sky Grits. Current issues such as Amnesty International and censorship are also covered in The Source's first issue.

Another exciting factor about The Source is that the magazine not only caters to a college audience, but it is also staffed by talented young adults. Pinto commented, "What made this whole project achieve the level it has reached is the excitement and vast talent of at least 10 people. In many cases, this magazine is a forum in which they can freely exercise the skills they learned in school."

The Source has made an effort to give young music listeners a place to enjoy a good time. The Source is sponsoring a monthly all-ages dance party at the Grapevine in Swarthmore. The first dance took place Feb. 13.

Beginning in March, The Source will be available for $1 in Main Line locations such as Mads, Plastic Fantastic and Repo Records. If South Street is your scene, then pick up a copy at Skinz or Tower Records. Yearly subscriptions are available for $9 by writing to P.O. Box 23, Upper Darby, Pa. 19082.

The Source explores a variety of areas, but the main topic is music. If you enjoy new music and local bands, then The Source is your kind of magazine. For more information and details call 622-1634.

Since this constitutes the first appearance of this column in The Villanovan, we feel that it is necessary to explain its content and purpose. Hopefully, it will be more than a simple music article expressing critiques of recent albums. Rather, it will be a sort of "testing ground" for observations on music — encompassing album review, opinions of trends, and general information regarding popular music. A main objective of this involves eliciting a reaction from you, the readers. We hope to offer opinions that you may find interesting or even controversial; and your ideas are quite welcome, and in fact necessary, to maintain this column's vitality. Thanks for listening, now read on . . .

Those who endured the opening set by Leather Nun were treated to an excellent show by Echo & The Bunnymen last Thursday night at the Tower Theatre, in Philadelphia.

Echo and the Bunnymen, having concluded their summer tour with New Order and Gene Loves Jezebel, took some brief time off and are now on the road again for 45 to 50 American dates — this time sharing the spotlight with no one. And they do not need to.

In a show that closely mirrored their summer performances, Echo prove that their almost 10-year history has really started to pay off. Once a cult band dismissed as murky, New Wave yet psychedelic Doors imitators, Echo, with their new album, appropriately titled Echo & The Bunnymen, have found a new accessibility, while not forsaking their devoted college fans.

Playing to a packed house — an interesting mix of punky fashion plates and teenage girls (sometimes one and the same) — Ian McCulloch, Echo's arty, yet soulful lead vocalist, skillfully led his band through a

Wes Craven horrifies with new film

By RUSS CECCOLA
Senior Reporter

"The Serpent and the Rainbow" directed by Wes Craven Universal Pictures

Wes Craven has long been regarded as a director capable of making the most sturdy of mind break upon seeing the images he conjures up on a movie screen. With hits such as "The Hills Have eyes" and "A Nightmare on Elm Street," Craven has introduced horror movie fans to memorable characters, especially in the form of Freddy Krueger, the dream killer with the burnt face and knife-decorated glove. Craven has performed both of these functions in his latest work of the macabre, "The Serpent and the Rainbow," a movie based on the true experiences of Harvard anthropologist Wade Davis.

Davis journeyed to Haiti to find a drug capable of simulating death, a symptom popularly known as "zombification." Used exclusively by voodoo priests in Haiti, Davis investigated the culture of the Haitian people and secret voodoo societies. The results of his travels were condensed into a book entitled The Serpent and the Rainbow.

The movie of the same name puts "Spaceballs" star Bill Pullman in the role of dennis Alan, an explorer sent to Haiti to research the zombification drug for a pharmaceutical company planning to market it as an anaesthetic. Alan's mission parallels Davis' quest in the events that happen in Haiti, yet differs in reason for the trip.

Alan encounters much resistance to his work, with researcher/doctor Marielle Celine (Cathy Tyson) and her father Lucien Celine (Paul Winfield) as his only allies in the country. His research drags him deeper and deeper into the voodoo subculture of Haiti, eventually pitting him against Dargent Peytraud (Zakes Mokae), an evil voodoo priest who doubles as the leader of the tontons macoutes, police force of Haiti. In his search for the drug, Alan pays the owner of a local seedy nightclub to show him how to make it and winds up buried alive by Peytraud.

Because of my lack of knowledge of actual voodoo practices, I really cannot say whether Craven has accurately portrayed this religion of Haiti. Nevertheless, the images he shoves in your face and events that occur in the film disturb the mind, causing disbelief. Davis was very happy with Craven's presentation of voodoo and his search for the drug, although he never did see a zombie brought to life or was buried alive.

Craven relies on his mastery of the dream world to present most of the unsettling images. Alan is constantly plaqued by the reappearance of a woman's corpse in a bridal gown and also has recurring deja vu about his premature burial, hence the misleading phrase on the movie poster that attempts to draw moviegoers "Don't bury me . . . I'm not dead!" The film hardly revolves around Alan's burial; the bulk of it deals with voodoo.

Special effects were brought off realistically in "The Serpent and the rainbow." From the scorpion that emerges from Lucien Celine's mouth after his death, to the torture of Peytraud by Alan, to the consumption of glass by voodoo dancers, the scenes make the uneasy turn away from the screen. Probably the most terrifying situation in the film that would make me think twice about going to Haiti is the burial of Alan. Although "zombified," he can see hear and feel everything, without any movement. Alan sees Peytraud throw the dirt into his grave and drop a tarantula into his coffin to "keep him company," yet is immobile — not the kind of night you want to have.

The two strongest facets of "The Serpent and the Rainbow" are the terror and imagery associated with the voodoo rituals and the acting of the individuals that participated in the film. All of the characters are portrayed with a realism not seen in most pictures, evoking empathy from any thoughtful audience. Pullman and Tyson's relationship works well on the big screen and Mokae does a good job as an evil and threatening person.

"The Serpent and the Rainbow" will reside in your mind for a while, causing you to question the existence of such practices and the brutality of natives against foreigners in a modern world such as our own. Davis claims that the drug's existence is a reality, but that it probably cannot be separated from the culture in which it is made and used. Regardless of the implications of the voodoo aspect of the film, "The Serpent and the Rainbow" gives a good jolt of uncomfortable terror to the moviegoer looking to escape reality for a while.

E.F.C. Celebrates 20–Year Anniversary

By JOE McGOWAN

Electric Factory Concerts celebrated its 20th anniversary last Sunday with, not surprisingly, an eight-hour concert. The Electric Factory once was a Philadelphia concert hall, hosting the likes of Jimi Hendrix, Pink Floyd and The Who. Now strictly a concert promotion agency, Electric Factory has grown immensely — as have concert ticket prices.

The bill for the anniversary concert was a mixed one. There was a preponderance of '60s music acts from the days of The Electric Factory as well as Philadelphia acts young and old. While acts such as the openers, the Spencer Davis Group, and the Chambers Brothers and Iron Butterfly represented the psychedelic era, Bricklin and Tommy Conwell & The Young Rumblers represented the continuation of the Philadelphia rock tradition.

Ed Schiaky, Pierre Robert and other Philadelphia disc jockeys hosted the event, putting aside for the day station rivalries. Each act was allotted approximately 35 to 45 minutes excepting the "Philadelphia All-Stars," which consisted in a series of covers ("Stand By Me" and so forth) by Philadelphia-area rock "stars" — from early groups such as Todd Rundgren's The Nazz to contemporary outfits such as Separate Checks and Pretty Poison. The cover versions were, overall, fairly dreadful but the musicians at least seemed to be having fun.

The emphasis of the show was on the psychedelic. A "spectacular psychedelic light show" was put on (it was for most of the show barely visible) and between acts MTV "Closest Classics" videos were aired on the Spectrum's "Arenavision." In fact, it was the videos of Jimi Hendrix ("Wild Thing" and "Voodoo Chile") and Free ("All Right Now") that received the most applause from the audience.

The audience was somewhat less than receptive to the newer acts, especially Tommy conwell, whose musical roots are really from the '50s rather than the '60s. But Conwell seemed to flourish in adversity and put on a fast and loud set that followed the evening's best act.

Spirit stole the show. Dave Mason took to the stage amid hearty applause but even his Traffic fame could not prevent his sedate acoustic set from being instantly forgotten. The revamped and streamlined Spirit, however, played a loud but precise set that stuck to their past hits.

After an opening instrumental, Spirit (now a trio) launched into "Nature's Way" (from their fourth album The Twelve Dreams of Dr. Sardonicus), "Fresh Garbage" (from their first LP), "Animal Zoo," "Dark Eyed Woman," "Nothin' to Hide," "All the Same" and, perhaps their best song, "I Got A Line On You" (from their second release The Family That Plays Together).

Spirit got its start in the mid-60s and after five solid albums began to falter. The band eventually devolved into solo projects, of which that of guitarist/vocalist Randy California achieved the most success. He

GEOFILE  BERKELEY SOFTWORKS C 64, C128

Most filing/database programs have millions of options that only the most serious database user will ever need. Others provide simple means of organizing information. One program of the latter type is geo-File. It is a newcomer to the GEOS system for Commodore computers and offers all that someone with a lot of data could ever desire.

First of all, the manual packaged with geo-File is almost like a complete tutorial. Every chapter focuses on another aspect of the GEOS application and a continuing example is used throughout all of the chapters. All menus and options are explained in the appendices, as well as how to integrate geo-File with other GEOS applications.

The application lets you create custom forms with all the data that you need, update data fields, perform conditional searches, merge data into GEOS applications and insert graphics into forms.

The construction set is easy to use and allows you to create your own dungeon or set of dungeons. There are over 200 options, truly a complete system.

OUTRAGEOUS PAGES  ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128

Outrageous Pages is definitely the best creative page designer ever released for the Commodore 64. Versions for other systems are on the way — so look for them. As an indication of the power of the program, the following items are what Outrageous Pages can easily create, with your assistance: newsletters, calendars, certificates, invitations, signs, flyers, letterheads, stickers, cards, labels, menus, message paads, name tags and coupons.

The options are limitless if you take advantage of the graphics editor. You can import graphics from Print Shop or Newsroom. The program contains 50 fonts, but allows you to design your own. Every option is selected via menus, and the simplicity of operation of the entire system is astounding.

TOMAHAWK ½ DATA-SOFT C 64/128, AT

Tomahawk is yet another helicopter simulation, which turns out to be pretty good. The graphics are three-dimensional color views of what you would see from the cockpit if you were actually in the helicopter. There are a variety of missions that you can choose from, with both day and night missions possible.

The designers of the simulation/game decided to make their helicopter easy to control, yet tough to master. That is the approach that you have to take with Tomahawk; do not expect a very hard mision if you know how to make the helicopter respond at will.

Tomahawk also includes a detailed brochure on the history, design and development of the Apache helicopter. Read this before playing the game to understand the beauty in helicopter flight. Practice is all that will help, but the effort to learn how to fly a helicopter is worthwhile.

PROJECT: SPACE STATION  ACCOLADE C64/128, AP, IBM

Project: Space Station is a very interesting program that lets you design, build and run an orbiting space station. Doing this is not an easy task; but, once completed, an operating space station is sign of a mission well performed. The graphics are sufficiently detailed for the simulation/game and it is easy to work the design-and-build system.

There are five parts to any mission in Project: Space Station. The first involves planning the station and coordinating all elements such as the number of modules, crew members, and cost of equipment. Then, all of the station parts are loaded onto a space shuttle and launched into orbit.

Modules must then be linked in outer space to form the station. The shuttle must be landed successfully. Finally, research and development experiments must be completed on the station. If all is done well, the mission is successful.

STREET SPORTS BASKETBALL  EPYX C64/128, AP, IBM

Epyx never fails in their games and Street Sports Basketball is a perfect example of that. This sports game is an easy-to-play basketball game that takes place not on the familiar court, but in one of four outdoor settings: schoolyard, alley, suburban backyard or inner-city parking lot.

There are also 10 possible team members on the disk. With such names as butch, Radar, Vic and "Magic," you know that this is no NCAA playoff game. Each team has three members and you can play against the computer or another player. Regardless of player choice, you will find that Street Sports Basketball one of the best sports programs of the year.

DEMON STALKERS * ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128

*Demon Stalkers*1 is a combination game/construction set that resembles the arcade game Gauntlet in its three-dimensional overhead view of dungeons, but differs in its varied options and approach. The object of Demon Stalkers is to survive each dungeon level and make it to the exit, ultimately reaching the 100th level and defeating the demon of the title.

In the dungeons, two players can search for treasures, magic items, food, keys and scrolls that tell of the demon while avoiding monsters like rats and ghosts. The dungeons are interesting, but they are overpopulated with monsters. Reaching the 100th level is hard, but you can save the game as you go along.

Fun With Woody: The Complete Woody Allen Quiz Book
by Graham Flashner
Owl Books

If anyone has ever said to you, "I'm not afraid to die, I just don't want to be there when it happens," or some other line belonging to Woody Allen and you wanted to find out exactly where it came from, then Graham Flashner's Fun with Woody is the first place you should look.

Graham Flashner, a screenwriter and fanatical Woody-phile, has created the definitive quiz book on the life and works of Allen Stewart Konigsberg, better known as Woody Allen.

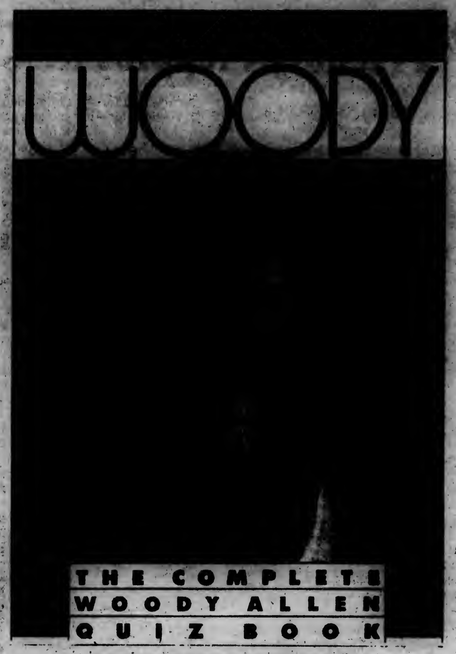
After covering Allen's childhood (Woody was "all schoolyard. They threw him a football once, and he tried to dribble it.") and his early nightclub and gag-writing years, Flashner moves into the heart of the comic's work — his movies.

Each of the 20 films Allen has worked on as either an actor, writer, director or a combination of the three is given an entire chapter of coverage. From "What's New, Pussycat?" in 1965 to "Radio Days" in 1987, Allen's career in film is covered not only through the questions, but also through pictures from the movies and pertinent quotes taken from the many interviews of Allen and books written about his films.

Chapters are also devoted to his plays, "Don't Drink the Water," "Play It Again, Sam," and "The Floating Light Bulb," and his books, Getting Even, Without Feathers and Side Effects.

But even if you have not seen all the movies or the plays or read the books, this book is worth the price just to read the great lines Allen has turned out over the years. Allen's big three of sex, death and God that permeates his work is given ample attention in the questions Flashner asks.

Flashner repeats Allen's memorable sex joke, "Everybody is obsessed with sex, except for some men who do not think about sex at all. They become lawyers." Another great line on the subject from "A Midsummer Night's Sex Comedy" is "Sex alleviates tension. Love causes it."



"There are worse things than death," Woody said in "Love and Death." "Anyone who has spent an evening with an insurance salesman knows exactly what I mean."

On the subject of deities you will find, "Not only is there no God, but try getting a plumber on weekends." Flashner also recounts Woody's story of being an atheist and wanting to marry an agnostic. They never got married because they could not decide which religion not to bring the children up in.

To see the world through the unique perspective of Allen is a hilariously wonderful ride that Graham Flashner takes the reader on through his excellent choice of questions and quips. The obvious depth of the author's knowledge of Allen's work in this book makes it as much a tribute to the writer's devotion to the artist as to the artist himself.

This book, like all quiz books, will come in handy when you feel like stumping friends or using one of the lines as a snappy comeback. However, the book's comprehensiveness and the way it reflects the subject so truly, separates it from the run of the mill celebrity trivia book.

For anyone who has ever enjoyed an Allen film, this book is for you. Flashner has gotten at the heart of what makes the little red-haired guy with the funny glasses so entertaining and so very lovable. No where else will you get such a complete, enjoyably funny glimpse of the painfully regular guy with the very hilariously irregular view of the world.

Concert

gained a following among the '60s rock and heavy metal audiences largely because of his guitar playing, which is reminiscent of that of the late Jimi Hendrix.

California and drummer Ed Cassidy got together again a few years ago on a reunion tour with other veteran psychedelic acts such as Iron Butterfly and Vanilla Fudge, playing smaller venues such as the Chestnut Cabaret.

Spirit had not played the Spectrum since 1971, but one would never know this last Sunday as they brought to the stage fresh, fast versions of their old standards. Rather than trying for a new sound, as many reformed 60s acts are doing, Spirit instilled new life in old hits and put on an energetic performance in an Electric Factory show that was not quite electrifying.

sometimes moody, often upbeat 90-minute set.

Ian McCulloch, not to undermine the strength of each member, is gifted with the kind of voice that can carry a band. He shifted effortlessly between soulful ballads like "The Killing Moon" and "Lips Like Sugar" and faster, more rocking songs like "Rescue" and "The Cutter." His voice, heavily layered with echo, had all the raspiness and power of his studio work.

McCulloch is known as an arrogant mystic, but he is an immensely interesting, heart-rendering performer. He sang with a subdued passion and was the picture of coolness wearing a loosely fitting leather jacket and caressing his mike, cigarette always in hand. He seemed lost in the power of his songs; his eyes were either closed or staring wistfully at his guitar. About the only words he uttered were a shy "Thank you" after each song.

The band played a generous sampling of all five of their studio albums. In fact, the concentration seemed to be on the older tunes. The crowd was decidedly more responsive to songs off the new album and Songs To Learn & Sing, their greatest hits compilation, proving further that Echo is just starting to become fashionable.

Some of the show's highlights included a raucous rendition of "The Back Of Love," which originally brought the crowd alive, and the familiar cover of The Doors' "Soul Kitchen."

The band encored with a great version of "Do It Clean" which featured a medley (including "Blue Moon" of all things!) of McCulloch improvisations. The song was interrupted innumerable time by girls who rushed the stage, smothering McCulloch with kisses. McCulloch did not miss a step though and broke into some slithery, frenzied dancing that just spawned more attacks. McCulloch introduced the second encore saying softly, "Sing along with me." The band then broke into an irresistably fun version of "Twist & Shout."

Have Echo & The Bunnymen finally found a strong American audience? Let us hope so. Maybe they will even get played on American radio some day.

WHAT'S NEW

R.E.M., the band that does no wrong, is set to release its third single from Document, titled "Finest Worksong," which tentatively includes both a live version and (believe it or not) a more upbeat remix. Even stranger, R.E.M. is also contemplating the release of their version of Prince's "Raspberry Beret" on a B-side which they recorded with Warren Zevon in 1986.

Speaking of R.E.M., it is interesting to note their effect on the popular music scene. R.E.M.'s album, which is quite good, is currently sandwiched in the charts between Madonna's dance track LP and Aerosmith's latest effort, which are both quite bad. Obviously, the fact that people are buying both good and bad music in equal units constitutes a lack of discretion, and they should be punished.

Next week: A review of Robyn Hitchcock's latest, general commentary, information, and other unfounded opinions.

Entertainment tidbits

By STEPHEN POWERS
Staff Reporter

How often does television do some real good? Many telethons are held throughout the year and raise money for worthy causes and sometimes, a network produces a movie like "Adam," which makes people aware of the danger children are in, and also helps locate many missing children by telecasting their pictures. But most programs are on the air for one reason: to make money. However, in the past month, two of these programs have also managed to benefit society by aiding in the capture of criminals.

One of those programs is NBC's "Unsolved Mysteries." The show is a "designated hitter," meaning it airs once a month in various timeslots instead of a rerun of another series. The fifth episode of the series, which aired two weeks ago, led to the arrest of two suspected killers. As the result of other episodes, "Mysteries" has also helped solve three other criminal cases, and located the heir to a small fortune.

Granted, "Unsolved Mysteries" is not exactly what you would call a quality program. It is not a documentary and does not use actual news footage; instead, the show consists mostly of re-enactments of crimes. The whole thing often plays like a TV version of The National Enquirer. But, if this series can actually solve a mystery once in a while, then it is worthy of a place on NBC's schedule.

Granted, 'Unsolved Mysteries' is not exactly what you would call a quality program.

Fox Broadcasting is trying out a similar program on its seven owned-and-operated stations, with the hopes of syndicating the program nationwide. "America's Most Wanted" features re-enacted crimes and asks viewers to phone in tips on criminals' whereabouts. The program is hosted by John Walsh, the father of Adam Walsh, whose disappearance and subsequent death was the subject of the "Adam" television movie.

Although "Most Wanted" has not yet caught any criminals, the viewer response to the show has been great; the studio where the program is taped received 700 calls after the first episode was broadcast. The show had a one-time outing on Channel 29 last week, because the lead story was about a fugitive believed to be near Philadelphia, but it can be regularly seen Sunday at 6:30 p.m. on WNYW, New York's Channel 5.

On the music scene, several veteran performers are making comebacks on the Billboard charts. Eric Carmen, who has not had a top 10 hit since "All By Myself" in 1976, returns to the charts this week at No. 5 with "Hungry Eyes," from the "Dirty Dancing" soundtrack. Carmen was fired from Geffen Records three years ago, and moved back to Cleveland. But one hit from a hit LP has managed to revive his career. Carmen is being flooded with offers from various labels, and Arista, his old label, is releasing "The Best of Eric Carmen" this week.

Ex-Beatle George Harrison is also staging a comeback, and his latest single, "When We Were Fab," is climbing the charts quickly. The single is from the "CLoud 9" album, Harrison's first LP to go gold since 1979.

Short Takes: The Hollywood western will soon be revived once again. Emilio Estevez, Charlie Sheen, Kiefer Sutherland and Lou Diamond Phillips ("La Bamba") are currently in New Mexico, shooting "Young Guns" with Estevez as a young Billy the Kid ...

Tom Hanks, who is co-starring with Sally Field in the upcoming film "Punchline," hosts NBC's "Saturday Night Live" tomorrow. Hanks hosted the show once before, in Dec., 1985 ...

It looks like Casey Kasem will not be hosting radio's "American Top 40" after this year. Negotiations have broken down between ABC Radio and Kasem, who has hosted the show since 1970. A replacement will be named within the month ...

And finally, Priscilla Presley, who has played Jenna Wade on "Dallas" for the past five years, will leave the CBS soap at the end of the season. The departure of the former Mrs. Elvis Presley is no surprise, and comes at a time when "Dallas" is planning major creative changes, including paring down its large cast. Rumor has it that Presley is jumping from the "Dallas" ship before she is pushed.

A single called "The Axe is Gonna Swing" is the first release from a new band called Mystery Girls. The band is a hard rock/heavy metal foursome that consists of Debbie Valenti (lead vocals and guitars), Larry Mitchell (guitars), Steve Missal (drums and backing vocals) and Chris Larsen (bass). The name Mystery Girls was adopted because of the use of three love dolls known as Natasha, Eva and Hanna on the single's sleeve and in publicity shots, as well as on stage. The dolls are the "mystery girls."

You may ask why mention is made of a band that only has a single out, without any album or prior exposure to back them up. The reason for the bother is that lead singer Valenti is head basketball coach Rollie Massimino's niece. Her mother's maiden name was Massimino. If the two songs on the single are any indication of other material, Mystery Girls should get some good exposure. Further success will probably be gotten from her relationship with Rollie. Perhaps she wears Windsor shirts too.

The Villanova hockey team finished the '87-'88 campaign with a pair of losses to powerful Notre Dame.

Fighting Irish maul Ice Cats

By JOHN E. SWIFT
Statistician

On the final weekend of the regular season, the Villanova Ice Hockey team traveled a great distance to play a pair of games against a well-respected Notre Dame squad.

In the opener on Feb. 12, the Cats were thoroughly whipped by the score of 14-0. The heavily favored Irish dominated every facet of the contest. The only bright spot for the Cats was the 36 saves that junior goalie Mitch Doren made.

With a 14-0 loss still a vivid memory, the Ice Cats came out bubbling with intensity for the final game of the season.

Freshman George Schneider opened the contest with a goal to give the Cats a 1-0 lead early in the first period. Notre Dame scored the next four goals before sophomore Kevin Stadtler made it 4-2 after one period.

Bob Ward, 'Nova's leading scorer, made it 4-3 early in the second period before the Irish scored six straight goals to put the game out of reach. Notre Dame coasted the rest of the way to hand Villanova a disappointing 15-5 defeat.

"We came out fired-up and ready to play in that second game," said Wildcat head coach Skip Probst. "We had two short lapses that cost us, but other than that, we played pretty well."

Despite dropping the final four games of the season, the Ice Cats finished with a 9-18-1 overall record and a 4-10-1 mark in the ECAC South Conference.

Coming off a season like this, one in which the team was to gain the experience necessary to be competitive in the future, next year will not be easy. Though much will be expected of this team next year, there is little doubt that next season will be much better than this one.

Club sports thrive

By PATTY GAVIN
Staff Reporter

Along with intercollegiate sports, Villanova has a variety of club sports available for students to participate in. Club sports are ideal for students who enjoy being an active participant on a team, yet do not have the extra time which is demanded by the varsity teams.

The spring club sports include bowling, boxing, crew, karate, powerlifting, rugby, sailing, men's volleyball and women's lacrosse. Because of the lack of coverage, little is known about these clubs. However, talking with some of the coaches and captains of some of the clubs gives a bit of insight on how the clubs are coming and going.

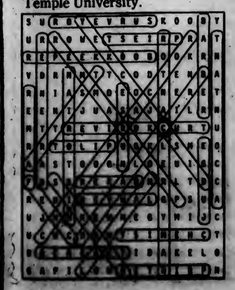
Boxing coach Chad Atkinson, who has been coaching for five years, mentions the slow gain of support from the University. "The team does not practice on campus but in my own gym located in Wayne. We have no on-campus facilities, yet we are slowly working on it," Atkinson says.

However, the lack of support does not discourage his team. "We have a real strong team of about 15 to 20 people," she added.

Practice has been held since break and bouts will begin next week against West Chester.

Men's and women's crew coach G. Tully Vaughn speaks very strongly of his club's independence from the school. In fact, this club, despite their large numbers of 95 to 120 members, would rather remain a club than have intercollegiate status. The crew supports themselves and has no recruits or scholarships.

At present, the crew is in its "winter stage" also known, because of the cold water, as "land training," which is the building of the body.



Women practice at 5 a.m. and the men at 3 p.m.

Powerlifting coach Joe Slabinski speaks highly of his "small but good quality lifting." Powerlifting is year-round training with three competitions a year. The long breaks require more time to get ready for competition. National championships are coming up in March, which will be held at Temple University.

Powerlifting is for men and women. Mostly men join, however women are welcome. In fact, returning this year they have a woman ranked sixth in the nation. And a top male competitor, Mike Lucci who won a national championship last year, "should do well again this year," according to Slabinski.

Sailing captain Robert deGroot explains some of the preseason activities of his club. "The season begins in March, yet we are busy holding fundraisers, chalk-talks and physical conditioning," said deGroot.

Anyone interested can contact Andy McGovern, intramural director, at 645-4114.

win and not shoot well," said Perreta, "but you can't play like that on the road and win. That's what worries me."

For the Cats, continued strong road play will be essential for a strong finish. They currently sport an 8-4 record away from home (not including the Feb. 16 contest at St. John's), but two of their final three games are away.

"We just have to take it one game at a time," said Angelotti. "Every game is important. We have to get as many wins as possible to be considered for a possible NCAA at-large berth."

Pawprints ...

Freshman guard Sandy Litkenhaus has been quietly assuming increased minutes in the 'Nova backcourt. "Before, she wasn't shooting enough and now she's not passing up the shots. Helen (Koskinen) and she can now play at the same time because Sandy is more of a threat to score. All our players have to be able to score to play," said Perreta ... Tomorrow's game against Seton Hall will be the last home game for seniors Lisa Angelotti, Teresa Pasik and Kristen Banfield.

Relay-team finishes second

By TERRY KELLY
Staff Reporter

Last weekend the men's winter track team competed in two meets and came away with mixed results. The Cats competed in the Olympic Invitational at the New Jersey Meadowlands and Miller Lite Meet at George Mason University.

At the Olympic Invitational the team finished, once again, second behind Georgetown. The last time the two teams met in the two-mile relay, the Hoyas came away with a 1.24 second victory. This time the Cats cut the margin of defeat to one-tenth of a second.

The team of Aidan O'Regan, Mark Sullivan, Howard Jackson and Bruce Harris combined their splits of 1:52.9, 1:52.6, 1:50.6 and 1:51.1, respectively, for a combined time of 7:27.14 to Georgetown's 7:27.04.

At the Miller Lite Meet the squad of Grant Davis, Mark Rainey, O'Regan and Edwin Modibedi took third place in the mile relay. Their splits of 48.4, 49.6, 49.7 and 47.4 gave them a combined time of 3:15.06. For the second time of the weekend the team was less than a second behind Georgetown (3:14.48). The only difference this time was that the Atlantic Coast Track Club (3:11.19) beat both Big East teams.

The only bad news of the weekend came in the only individual performance of the two meets. At the Olympic Invitational Marc Jones injured his knee in the 500-meter race. The injury occurred when Jones fell in the last turn of the race.

Hopefully, Jones will be able to compete in the last few races of the season, but it is likely that he will be sidelined at least until the outdoor season.

For now, the rest of the team is preparing for the Big East Championship meet this weekend at Syracuse University.

Mat Cats tackle Moravian, 35-14, Fall to Millersville in finale

By MONICA BYRNE
Staff Reporter

Last Friday, the Villanova wrestling team split matches in their final home dual meet of the season. The Cats decisively beat Moravian 35-14, but lost to a very powerful Millersville team, 29-11. The lower weights wrestled well in both matches.

According to Assistant Coach Andre Metzger, the team fought hard but were much less experienced than Millersville. An indication of the team's youth is the fact that 'Nova starts eight freshmen and only one junior. Metzger feels that the squad is "two years away from being a top 10 team."

In his opinion, "It's' going to take a lot of hard work, but all the coaches plan on putting in the time and effort needed."

He added that he would like to help the Wildcats become a national championship team.

Leading the Wildcats for the night were freshmen Greg Alfonsi and Lyndon Campbell winning both of their matches. Metzger, feeling very confident about the performances of these two freshmen, said, "They should place first or second in the conference at their respective weights."

Campbell holds a very impressive 20-1-2 record, including six pins at 134 pounds and Alfonsi stands strong at 15-5, with two pins at 118/126 pounds.

Coach Metzger said that the wrestlers are "working hard and won't lay down for anyone." 'Nova wrapped up its regular season yesterday in a dual meet against Syracuse and Army. The NCAA Eastern Regionals will be held March 5 and 6 at Edinboro State University. Then, on March 17-19, the NCAA championships will be held at Iowa State University to conclude the 1987-88 collegiate wrestling season.

Junior runners star

By MICHAEL E. JONES
Staff Reporter

Two weeks ago Vicky Huber got her first real taste of international competition in the Panasonic Mile at the Millrose games and had spectators in awe.

Last week fellow juniors Kathy Franey, Celeste Halliday and Michelle DiMuro went up against the "big boys" at the star-studded Miller Lite Meet in Fairfax, Va. and experienced similar success.

Halliday and DiMuro finished fifth and sixth, respectively, in the 800-meters, while Franey finished fourth in the mile in what Head Coach Marty Stern called "the best race I've ever seen her run."

Halliday and DiMuro finished within an eyelash of each other in 2:07.10 and 2:07.11, and for DiMuro it was a personal indoor best. Halliday ran her second fastest indoor time ever, and was the first collegiate runner to finish. Stern visualizes both running even faster with more international experience under their belts.

When Franey stepped to the line for the start of the mile, she knew she would have her hands full with the likes of Romanian Doina Melinte, who had broken the indoor world record in the mile the night before at the Olympic Invitational in New Jersey. Early in the race, Franey controlled the pace. She led for the first six laps on the 200-meter track, and hung tough before succumbing to Melinte's overpowering kick. Franey's time of 4:45.07 was far from her personal best, but she proved to herself that she could run with the best. Stern added, "She's run faster, and won many, but this was the strongest competition she's been involved with. She's already an all-American, now she's taken the first step towards being world class."

The remaining Wildcats were idle, and are well-rested for the upcoming Big East Indoor Championships in Syracuse this weekend. The Cats will be looking to make it five in a row, having won the indoor title every year since Big East competition began in 1983.

Athlete of the Week

LAUREL FOURNIER

This week's athlete of the week is Laurel Fournier.

Fournier, a sophomore on the women's swim team, helped lead the Cats to second place in the Big East tournament last weekend. In so doing, she collected five first-place finishes, three individual and two relay races. In addition she set a school record in the 50-meter freestyle. As a result she was awarded MVP of the tournament.

Fournier, who graduated from Newport High School in Washington, D.C., is a sophomore business major.

Coaches' feud brews

By DOUG SCANCARELLA
Sports Editor

Men's basketball Head Coach Roland V. Massimino engaged in a verbal war with Pitt. Head Coach Paul Evans after last Saturday's loss to Pittsburgh University. The occurrence added to an already intense rivalry, unfortunately this rivalry is off the court rather than on.

It all started four years ago with the recruitment of Charles Smith. Smith, Pitt's starting center, opted to play for the Panthers after narrowing his choices down to V.U. and Pitt. That, however, was only the start; the battle really heated up with the recruitment of Doug West.

West, Villanova's starting off-guard, shunned Pitt. to wear Wildcat blue. He seemed destined to attend Pitt., but in late November 1984 he signed with 'Nova after revealing that a Pitt. booster, Dr. Joseph Haller, offered him a $10,000 inducement to play for the Panthers.

The revelation shocked Pittsburgh fans and crushed the team. Roy Chipman, the Panther coach at the time, resigned the following year.

Two years later, Pitt. got 'Nova back. The 'Cats had received a verbal commitment from high school superstar Bobby Martin. A few months later Martin signed with Pittsburgh.

This year, Massimino and Evans have been engaged in verbal sparring more than ever before. After the first V.U.-Pitt. game, a game won by Pitt., the coaches did not shake hands. Both men blame each other for the occurrence.

After the game Evans claimed, "I respect Rollie as a coach — he won a national championship. However, I feel that after he won it all, he fell in love with himself and turned off a lot of good friends."

Massimino did not take the comment well and retorted, "He [Evans] does not even know who my friends are."

Last Saturday, he and Massimino met at mid-court, after Pitt. topped V.U., 87-75, and engaged in a skirmish.

Massimino said it happened like this, "I went to shake Mr. Evans' hand and he dropped it. Then he called me a very serious and dirty name. Luckily I am at my age and walked away." Massimino, who was visibly upset, also added "I don't air my linens. That will be handled accordingly through our league offices."

Evans refused to comment on the matter saying, "I don't care what Rollie says. I don't think it was an important part of the game."

Whatever the reason for the occurrence, the fact remains, the off-the-court rivalry is hurting the teams, the Big East and NCAA basketball in general.

Perhaps Martin summed up the skirmish best by stating, "It's really sad because the players respect each other. We shake hands after the game. It's terrible because basketball is a kid's game and the coaches are ruining it for the kids."

Sharp-shooting senior forward Mark Plansky scorched Pitt for a career-high 27 points in a losing cause.

'Nova has rough week

"It was one of the most aggressive games we've been involved in in a long time," said Massimino. "Of course, every Georgetown-Villanova game is like that."

The Wildcats hung tough the entire game, but the combination of the relentless Hoya defense and the sharp-shooting of guard Charles Smith (22 points) won out in the end as Georgetown (17-6) captured a 56-54 win.

Although the three losses dropped the Cats to 16-9 overall (8-5 in the Big East), one cause for great optimism was the play of forward Barry Bekkedam last week.

Bekkedam, especially in the Georgetown game, showed why he was recruited highly out of high school. The 6'10" sophomore scored a career high 19 points and grabbed nine rebounds.

More importantly, Bekkedam showed an overall aggressiveness which has been absent from his game while at Villanova. If Bekkedam has truly arrived, he, Greis and Taylor would form a front line capable of competing with anybody.

Swimmers coast to second in Big East

Women

By KARLA BECKNER
Staff Reporter

The Villanova women's swimming and diving team handed in their finest performance ever in a Big East Conference Championship meet Feb. 12-14. The team placed second overall to the University of Pittsburgh.

Sophomore Laurel Fournier was named MVP of the meet for her five first place finishes, including three individual events and two relays.

"Laurel did a fabulous job in winning the three most competitive events in a swimming championship," said Head Coach Chuck Horton. "She helped her teammates win two relays as well. The sky's the limit for Laurel in the future."

Fournier captured the 50-, 100- and 200-yard freestyle events while joining teammates Danielle Mackey, Mary Mayfield and Teri Messenger for wins in both the 200-yard medley relay and 400-yard medley relay.

Fournier set a new school record in the 50-yard freestyle with her 24.09 effort and tied her own school record of 52.71 in the 100-yard freestyle. The Mackey, Mayfield, Messenger, Fournier 400-yard medley relay team set a new school record of 4:00.02 as well.

Junior Marv Mayfield and sophomore Danielle Mackey each handed in one individual and two relay wins. Mayfield recorded a first-place finish in the 100-yard breaststroke while Mackey captured top honors in the 200-yard individual medley.

Other outstanding performances came from Mayfield who set a new school record of 2:29.26 en route to her second-place finish in the 200-yard breaststroke and took third in the 50-yard freestyle: Mackey, who placed third in the 400-yard individual medley; and Messenger, who took third in the 100-yard backstroke. The 400-yard freestyle relay team of Mayfield, Meg Fitzgerald, Mackey and Fournier took second place and the 200-yard freestyle relay team of Mayfield, Messenger, Liz Kennedy and Fitzgerald grabbed third.

"The team did a fantastic job," Horton said. "They achieved one of their goals, to place high in the Big East, improving over last year's third place finish. Hopefully next year we can improve on this year."

The team is now looking towards the Eastern Championships Feb. 26-28 in Morgantown, WV.

Both the men's and women's swim teams placed second in the Big East tournament held at Pittsburgh last Saturday.

Men

By AMY C. SPENCER
Staff Reporter

For the fourth year in a row, a superb men's swimming and diving team finished in the runner-up spot at the Big East championships.

Conceding defeat only to the University of Pittsburgh (858 points), finishing first for the sixth straight year, the Cats managed to outdistance the rest of the field by racking up 553.5 points and seven victories. Trailing behind Villanova were Syracuse (513), Boston College (301), Providence (251), St. John's (212.5), Georgetown (208.5) and UConn (135.5).

The diving events proved to be an exciting showdown as Villanova's Dave Echeverria went head-to-head against Chris Blair of Pitt. The one-meter event, held Friday, came down to the very last dive. Echeverria successfully completed his last dive, which merited a 3.0 difficulty rating to snatch the victory by seven points. His score of 512.90 set a new school record.

The three-meter event on Sunday also came down to the wire. This time Echeverria ended up on the down side, missing the victory by eight and one-half points to Blair. His outstanding performance of 528.95 points, however, set another Villanova school record.

Wildcat swimmer Lou Dearstyne set a Big East record in the 200-yard freestyle as he won with a time of 1:38.95. This broke the record set by fellow Wildcat Chris Craft last year (1:39.86).

Junior Craft, the backbone of this year's team, turned in another outstanding performance as he achieved his seventh Big East title in three years. Craft was the victor in the 100-yard butterfly with a time of 49.96. This was an emotional victory, as he upset Jim Emore of Pitt., who would have been this event's title holder for the fourth straight year if he had won. Craft also finished second five times. He was the runner-up in the 200-yard butterfly and the 200-yard individual relay, and as a member of the 400-yard medley, 400-yard freestyle and 800-yard freestyle relay teams.

Other Villanova victors included freshman Steve Petrie in the 100- and 200-yard backstroke. Blaise Matthews won the 50-yard freestyle for the second straight year, and the 400-yard medley team of Petrie, Tim Truax, Craft and Dearstyne, finished second.

Cats win pair, eye NCAA bid

By JIM BOWMAN
Assistant Sports Editor

After averaging 30 points per game in two Lady Wildcat victories two weeks ago, there was not much Lisa Angelotti could do for an encore.

So it seemed.

In two games last week at duPont Pavilion, Angelotti tossed in 51 more points, leading the Cats to victories over the University of Connecticut and Providence College. The wins raised their season record to 18-5 and moved them two steps closer to an NCAA bid.

For Angelotti, who was named Big East Player of the Week for the second straight week, it was all in a day's work.

"I really can't explain it. I feel relaxed and I'm just trying to play the best I can. The team is really playing well right now, and that helps my game," commented Angelotti.

Tenth seat Head Coach Harry Perretta was less modest about his star forward's superb play. "She's playing great and she's our first option on offense. The other players are looking for her because she's scoring," explained Perretta.

In the Connecticut game here Feb. 10, the Cats took control early, as they shot a blistering 64 percent from the field in the first half, while holding the Huskies to 28 first half points. Despite cooling off in the second half, they held on for a decisive 76-57 victory.

Senior forward Teresa Pasik chipped in 13 points and four assists, and junior center Carole Oaten added 12 points and a pair of blocks. Sophomore guard Beth Pasik played an extremely solid overall game, registering six points, six rebounds, five assists and two steals.

On Feb. 13, the Cats avenged an earlier road loss to Providence with a 66-57 victory over the Lady Friars here at the duPont Pavilion. Both teams shot poorly from the field and the foul line, but Villanova outrebounded Providence 49-39. 'Nova rode this rebound advantage to an eight point halftime lead. They then kept the friars at bay throughout the second half, due largely to a herculean effort by Angelotti, who finished with 27 points and 11 boards.

B-Ball drops three

By JOHN G. RICCO

Entering last week's play the Villanova men's basketball team knew what they were in for. The then 16-6 Wildcats were to face the No. 1, 5 and 15-ranked teams in the nation in a span of six days.

The general consensus was that one out of three would be fine, two out of three, excellent — and a sweep, something that could catapult the Cats into top 10. Unfortunately, the Wildcats did none of the above.

The first game of the stretch was one of the best played this season, the final contest, one of the worst, but the outcome was the same for all three. A disappointing loss.

On Feb. 10, the Cats traveled to downtown Philadelphia to face newly-crowned, No. 1-ranked Temple University, and the Owls more than lived up to their ranking. Normally, a 45 percent shooting team, Temple was on fire and finished the night at 56 percent (70 percent from three-point range).

Villanova stayed close, but the Owls broke away late in the second half and soared to a 98-86 victory. "I thought we played well on Wednesday," said senior Mark Plansky, "but Temple just played great."

Freshman sensation Mark Macon, a 42-percent shooter, went 14-20 against the Cats, recording a career-high 31 points, and sophomore Mike Vreeswyk, 5-7 from three-point land, pumped in 19.

It seemed that every time Villanova did something positive, Macon, Vreeswyk or seniors Tim Perry or Howard Evans were there to answer for the Owls. The Wildcats played an exceptional game, but Temple was nearly perfect.

"This was the best basketball in this city for a lot of years — for both teams," commented Villanova Head Coach Rollie Massimino.

Three days later, the Cats journeyed their station on Big Ste- [illegible] Pittsburgh where the Panthers visited duPont Pavilion for a league contest.

Early four trouble, however, combined with Pitt's strong frontline, spelled doom for the Wildcats, who eventually fell, 87-75.

With over six minutes left in the first half, both center Tom Greis (two fouls) and forward Rodney Taylor (three fouls) were on the bench at Massimino's side.

"We got a couple of tough calls early," said Plansky. "They got Tommy [Greis] down low and Rodney [Taylor] down low, and the next thing you know we were playing with a very small lineup.

The Panthers exploited their size advantage, dominating the Wildcats on the boards, and creating numerous second and third shot opportunities.

"We definitely controlled the boards, especially in the first half," said Pittsburgh Head Coach Paul Evans. "I think overall their [Villanova's] starters are very good players. When they got in foul trouble, however, and had to go to the bench, we got a mismatch and had one extra big man out there."

In an otherwise disappointing defeat, Plansky played exceptionally, scoring a career-high 27 points and pulling down a team-high seven boards.

Earlier this season the Wildcats had rebounded from consecutive losses to beat Georgetown, and on Feb. 15 'Nova was hoping for a repeat performance. This contest, unlike the previous one, was in Hoya country, however, and Georgetown was ready.

Fresh off their upset victory over Big East-rival Syracuse two days before, the Hoyas came out with their usual "panic-style" defense, creating havoc for the Wildcats offensively.

While the Cats shot a dismal 18-44 (0-7 in three-point attempts) and committed 17 turnovers, the Hoyas did not fair much better. The two teams combined for 49 fouls and turned what was supposed to be a basketball game into a physical contest the V.U. rugby team would be proud of.

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, delivered his final State of the University address at the University Senate meeting Feb. 19 in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Prior to Driscoll's address, a television camera from the University's Instructional Media Services was set up to videotape his speech. High-intensity lights were used to help illuminate the Senate room. Approximately 25 people were in attendance.

Driscoll was introduced by Dr. Philip A. Maurone, Senate chairperson and physics professor. Maurone said that Driscoll was one of the original architects of the Senate and has been a supporter of it ever since.

Maurone then presented Driscoll with a plaque "in recognition of his years of dedication to the Senate," as the plaque read.

After receiving the plaque, Driscoll began his speech. "I'm very happy to say that this last message for me is far and away the very best I've been privileged to make," Driscoll said. "I think we will regard [1988] as one of the banner years in our maturation as one of the outstanding universities in the United States.

I think we will regard [1988] as one of the banner years in our maturation.
The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president

"Whatever has been accomplished here has been done by all of us," he added.

PEC evaluation

Driscoll said that the Program Evaluation Committee [PEC], after two years of work, has completed its report and is now prepared for its distribution.

The committee reviewed 118 programs, including 82 academic ones and 36 non-academic ones, he said.

"There have been three task forces which have examined and probed the depths of our external opportunities and constraints, our internal strengths and weaknesses and analyzed our personal values as these relate to our institutional mission," he said.

Driscoll said that from March through May the University will be engaged in a study phase, in

Budget figures disclosed

Tuition may increase 10 percent

By JENNIFER REIDY
Assistant News Editor

The preliminary budget for the 1988-89 academic year contains a proposal to increase current tuition rates an average of 10 percent, said Edward V. Murray, assistant to the president and member of the University Senate budget committee, this week.

John B. Lewis, student senator and member of the budget committee, said that he was "shocked and outraged" by the proposal, which would increase tuition 10 percent for the second consecutive year.

The increase in tuition would be accompanied by an eight percent increase in faculty salaries and entitlements, as well as a six percent increase in staff salaries, according to Murray.

Murray advocated that the additional funding to faculty members "not be made across-the-board so as to promote mediocrity. We want to encourage outstanding performance and thus reward those individuals based on merit."

Murray added that an increase of up to 4 percent should be expected in room and board payments.

Although the budget committee has submitted these preliminary figures to the public, it will still continue to examine and redefine its proposals over the next few weeks, he explained. The committee must prepare a finalized budget before the next Senate meeting March 25, Murray said.

Lewis commented, "The administration realizes that the students don't care enough to put up an adequate fight against this increase. If the students don't care to protest this issue, it will be their fault, not ours [Student Government] when the proposal is finalized by Driscoll [the Rev. John M., O.S.A., University President] and the Board of Trustees."

In October, Lewis and Phil Brach, Student Government president, presented a proposal to Murray which recommended a tuition increase of 4 percent and an increase in room and board of 3 percent.

The faculty council submitted a similar proposal to the budget committee, calling for a 13 percent increase in faculty salaries and pensions, according to Dr. John A. Doody, chairperson of the council and chairperson of the philosophy department.

According to Lewis, the budget committee then discussed and modified these proposals, which together amounted a deficit of over $5 million in the preliminary

PEC analyzes Food Services

By SHARON A. WATERS
Assistant News Editor

The Program Evaluation Committee's report on Food Services concluded that "excellent institutional food and service is provided, but there is a need to more frequently examine and access traditional services that no longer serve the University community well," and that more media services should be employed to ensure that students better understand the operations of Food Services.

The staff makes themselves visible in the dining area, which is good . . . [and] they have the ability to accept student criticism.

The evaluation, which was conducted by Robert D. Buchanan, R.D., consultant, from Sept. 13-16, 1987, studied the "critical areas of the quality of staff, need for service [and] extent of satisfaction of need."

The report praised the sanitation, suggesting it could be used as a model for other colleges and the hospitality industry in general. It also commended the quality of service during emergencies and for special catered events, plus the dedication and satisfaction of the staff, as evidenced by their long-term employment in an industry with a rather fast turnover.

However, the report suggested that the cafeteria could be used for more activities besides meals, such as classes or study facilities.

J. Lee Gies, director of Food Services, presented health reasons in opposition to this suggestion, saying that the Board of Health does not like the cafeteria to be used for other activities.

Another problem is that the dining facility may not be sufficiently clean by the next meal. Gies related his own experiences with slow cleanup after activities in the Day Hop in Dougherty Hall.

Gies also said that most special events are held in the Connelly Center, but Buchanan was not aware of this during his evaluation.

The report also felt "a need to make the dining room and service area less institutional, i.e. warm, homey, less noisy (carpet, wall and ceiling materials, division into smaller dining areas), mood and a place to spend some time. A facility with ambience will have greater student food acceptance."

Gies responded that carpeting in the dining halls is not a good idea considering the amount of people it serves. Also creating smaller areas would require partitioning, which Gies pointed out would take away seating capacity, something which the cafeteria could not afford to lose.

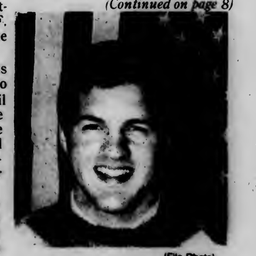
"[T]he Provincial of the Province of St. Thomas of Villanova [the Rev. Donald F. Reilly, O.S.A.] has requested the Board of Trustees to appoint a committee to assist him in the consideration of candidates for a successor to [the Rev. John M.] Driscoll," stated a letter to appointed search committee members from Thomas F. Devine, Esq., chairman of the committee.



The search committee held its first meeting Feb. 18, according to student body representative Phil Brach. The main subject was the composition of a letter from the chairperson to encourage all members of the Villanova community to make nominations for president.

Devine said in an interview Monday that he would respect the confidentiality of nominees and would not reveal names, though he cannot account for what candidates might do.

According to the letter, the search will be limited to members of the Augustinian order. Any nomination should be accompanied by a resume of the candidate and a statement by the nominator that the candidate is willing to serve, if elected.

March 18 is the deadline for submission of names to the committee. All nominations and resumes should be addressed to: Thomas F. Devine, Esq., Chairman, Search Committee, Blank, Rome, Comisky & McCauley, Four Penn Center Plaza, Philadel-

New grading system approved

Implementation remains far in future

By DANTE J. SCALA
News Editor

University President the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., has approved the creation of a grading system that includes "minus" grades, announced Senate Chairperson Dr. Philip A. Maurone at the University Senate meeting Feb. 19.

The system will not be implemented, however, until the computer system which holds student records is converted, said the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for academic affairs Feb. 19. The conversion process will take at least a year, said Gallen.

At the Senate meeting, Administration Senator Dr. Angelo Armenti, dean of the University College, estimated that the process could take two to three years.

When it is implemented, the new grading system will include the marks of A-, B-, C- and D-.

The idea of a new grading system had been debated in Senate committee since 1980, said Dr. Harry R. Strack, chairperson of the academic policy committee and political science professor, at a Senate meeting last March. The Senate approved the system in March 1987 by a vote of 21 to 3.

In addition, a Senate-approved proposal to require professors to provide written grade definitions to their students was also approved by Driscoll, said Maurone at the Feb. 19 Senate meeting.

University issues bonds

By DANTE J. SCALA
News Editor

The University issued over $15 million in bonds Feb. 19 to pay for the construction of two dormitories on south campus and the purchase of St. Mary's Hall, said Gary Fenner, vice president for financial affairs, Tuesday.

Approximately $6.4 million of the $15.4 million gained from the bond issue will be spent on the south campus dormitories' construction, said Fenner. About $6.7 million of the funds will be spent to acquire St. Mary's Hall, he added.

The groundbreaking for the new dorms may occur in late February or early March, said Fenner. The buildings should be ready for occupancy by August 1989, he added.

"It was best to have the financing all complete" before the construction began, said Fenner.

The University wants to purchase St. Mary's Hall in order to have complete control of the facility and to gain all of the rights and privileges of ownership, said Fenner. Currently, the building is owned by the Augustinians, a separate entity from Villanova University, according to Fenner.

The money from the bond issue will be available March 10, and the purchase of the building should take place subsequently, said Fenner.

Approximately $1.5 million of the money gained from the bond issue will be used to fulfill debt service reserve fund requirements, said Fenner.

In addition, $1 million will go toward capitalizing interest during the construction period, said Fenner.

He explained that no money was set aside in the current year's budget to pay interest on the bond issue. Thus, the size of the bond issue was increased in order to pay the interest, he said.

In the 1988-89 budget, there are funds to pay for interest on the part of the bond issue which goes toward the purchase of St. Mary's.

Dick Gregory to lecture

By JOHN M. CHEPEGA
Staff Reporter

Entertainer, author, lecturer and political activist Dick Gregory will lecture Feb. 28 at 8 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

"He is interesting and influential, especially in the black community, where most people know and respect him," said Yvette Sanders, president of the Black Cultural Society.

The society, along with the Villanova Union, is hosting Gregory's visit as the finale to the activities held in recognition of Black History Month.

With the fame he gained as a comedian, Gregory began to use his influence to assist causes such as world peace, hunger, the rights of American Indians and the civil rights movement.

In fact, his efforts for civil rights prompted then-Alabama governor and former avid segregationist George Wallace to refer to Gregory in the 1960s as "the most dangerous man in America," while honoring his well-documented participation in the movement with three citations.

Political activist Dick Gregory will lecture Feb. 28 at 8 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

His other activities have included a 1980 journey to Iran on behalf of American hostages, which provided him with the distinction of being the last Westerner to meet with the Ayatollah Khomeini. Also, he was arrested while protesting alleged CIA involvement in domestic drug-trafficking in April 1987, according to a Washington Post article.

A self-taught authority on nutrition, Gregory has advised several hunger-striking groups on fasting methods over the years and proved the protest method to be effective and not necessarily life-risking.

Gregory also uses his knowledge of diet to aid obese individuals in losing weight with his popular "Bahamian Diet Plan."

Staff member remembers departed worker

By JOSEPH P. BARRETT
Special to the Villanovan

James R. Tierney, Sr., doorchecker at Falvey Memorial Library, died Feb. 18 at his home in Upper Darby. He was 69.

He died just one hour before he was to report for duty at 5 p.m. Tierney, who always arrived for work shortly before he was to go on duty was, for the first time, late.

When he failed to appear, Peter C. Ebbott, the evening supervisor of Falvey Library, telephoned his home only to discover the news of Tierney's death.

Tierney's wife, Claire, said he had been taking a nap before going to work and that he died in his sleep. She had been upstairs in their two-story home when she noticed that he was not bustling around, preparing his sandwiches and cupcakes for lunch. She came downstairs and found him slumped in his chair as though asleep.

A tall, heavy-set man with a thatch of gray hair and glasses, Tierney would sit on the desk portion of the "boat," the term that librarians use to describe the doorcheckers' station. He would then check I.D.s of patrons entering the library, as well as inspect the book bags of those leaving.

Ebbott described Tierney as one of the best doorcheckers the library has ever had.

"He interacted very well with the students," Ebbott said, "and they appreciated his friendliness, tact and diplomacy."

Tierney retired twice in his lifetime. In 1972, he retired as a claims adjuster for the Insurance Company of North America. He then began a second career when he founded the Garrett Glass Co., from which he retired in 1985.

But then he tired of having too much time on his hands, so he came to Falvey Memorial Library to be a doorchecker on Tuesday and Thursday evenings and Sunday afternoon.

He was no stranger to Villanova. After graduating from Roman Catholic High School in 1936, he came to Villanova to study electrical engineering.

It was a far different campus in 1985 than the one he left some 50 years earlier. At that time, it was an all-male college where students wore white shirts, ties and suitcoats to classes and everyone said "hello" to all they met. This was the then-famous "hello" habit which was drilled into every freshman during orientation sessions.

When they took their "best girl" to the prom, the students dressed in white tie and tails, just like Fred Astaire. After all, this was the Main Line.

The small Catholic college was then nestled in the hills along the Pennsylvania Railroad's Main Line Railroad. Sheep grazed on Garrett Hill and a two-lane Lancaster Pike cut through undulating hills, fields and small wooded areas where one now can find such things as Radnor High School, B. Altman & Company, St. David's Inn, Wyeth Laboratories and the Chilton and T.V. Guide buildings.

Tierney had an ideal job for a high school kid in the 1930s. This was the beginning of the big band jazz era and he worked as an usher at the old Earle Theater, which was then at 11th and Market Streets in Philadelphia. It has since been demolished.

Bill Laughlin, part-time member of the circulation staff, often told how this big, kindly man would stand up, take a hitch in his trousers and regale the students with stories about such jazz greats as Jimmie and Tommy Dorsey, Bennie Goodman, Gene Krupa, Woody Herman and singers such as Helen Forrest, Bing Crosby, the Andrew Sisters and Patti Page.

Tierney served in the Coast Guard during World War II. Also, he was active in the Waldron Academy Fathers Association and served as its president.

Survivors are his wife, Claire; sons James, Jr., William, Kevin, Brian and Michael; eight grandchildren and three sisters.

Tierney was buried Monday morning.

Joseph P. Barrett is a member of the class of 1950, a one-time reporter for the defunct Philadelphia Evening and Sunday Bulletin, and a doorchecker at Falvey Memorial Library.

Blood drive reaches goals

The Feb. 9-11 Red Cross blood drive, sponsored by Villanovans For Life, amassed 602 pints and exceeded their goal of 600 pints.

Villanova has the largest drive in the area, and there were 27 more pints collected than last year at the same time. There were 114 first-time donors.

The next blood drive will be held from April 12 through April 14 and will be sponsored by Alpha Phi Omega fraternity.

Jennifer Maiorana of the Main Line branch of the Red Cross commented, "It was a great job and thanks to all the donors, especially the first time donors." The next drive is far enough away that anyone who gave blood this time can donate in April.

Voter registration drive to begin

By BARBARA KRESCH
Staff Reporter

A campus-wide voter registration drive for students will take place in the next month and has been organized by Student Government, according to Patricia Marzulli, secretary of the external affairs department for Student Government.

The committee members will be going door-to-door in all the dorms on campus to register students, said Marzulli.

She reports that for those who do not wish to register in Radnor Township, phone numbers of their State Election Division in their home town will be provided.

She said that if people decide to register in Radnor Township, they will forfeit the opportunity to do so in their home town.

In past years, the College Republicans and College Democrats held periodic registration drives. This year the external affairs department decided to organize a project to "push for students to register here in Radnor Township," said Marzulli.

She continued that she "recognizes the need for residents of Villanova to look at Villanova University students as members of the community." She feels that if enough students are registered it will help with public relations

Student elections officer selected

By KRISTEN FALLAN
Staff Reporter

Junior Mike Delzotti was recently selected to be the new commissioner on student elections by the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, and Judicial Affairs Officer Stephen McWilliams.

As election commissioner, Delzotti will set the election dates and times, decide how much money each candidate may spend on his campaign, establish the rules of the election and impose penalties for rule violations.

Because Delzotti spent last semester studying at Oxford in England, he said he is "objective and detached" from the issues of the Villanova community. Therefore, he is in a position in which he can make unbiased decisions.

Delzotti said he will be working with a committee of representatives from each of the seven major organizations on campus: the Association of Commuting Students, Blue Key Society, Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council, Resident Student Association, Student Union and the Villanovan. With such diverse representation, "the committee will not be partial," said Delzotti.

Although he said "the committee is still in an infantile state," he added that he "will be relying on it a lot."

Delzotti said, "I anticipate problems, but I don't foresee any at this point."

To eliminate any vote fraud on the actual election days, Delzotti plans on linking all polls by radio and using "tamper-proof" voting machines.

One of Delzotti's main goals is to fully inform students of their right to vote. He said he believes "this is a time when students can take a stake ... and decide who will follow their best interests."

Delzotti has planned many voting hours at several locations on campus to "allow as many people as possible to exercise their right of voting."

According to Delzotti, "all candidates must sign a statement that they understand the rules and will submit to any judgment of the committee."

The first of three mandatory meetings for all interested candidates will be held March 1 at 6 p.m. in the Haverford Room of the Connelly Center. All those planning on running for an office must attend.

Democratic candidate Rev. Jesse Jackson

By PAUL FRATAMICO
Staff Reporter

The Rev. Jesse Jackson's showing in Iowa was according to predictions. He finished ahead of Gary Hart and Bruce Babbit and behind Richard Gephardt, Paul Simon and Michael Dukakis, receiving 9 percent of the vote.

Jackson's style of politics has changed since he ran for president in 1984. The responsive shouting so common in 1984 is absent for the most part. The essence of Jackson's rhetoric is old-fashioned "lunch bucket politics," an appeal to the "disposed and dislocated."

Evidence of his growing popularity among whites includes his reception of 9 percent of the vote in Iowa, which is only 1.4 percent black.

Jackson hopes to jump out of the pack of Democratic candidates and into the spotlight after Super Tuesday March 8. The results of the Iowa caucuses and the New Hampshire primary show that not only is he willing to run in nearly all-white states, but he is also able to post respectable showings.

Jackson can now look ahead to possible victories in several of the Southern primaries and to the prospect of leading the delegate count by March 9.

As a candidate in 1984, Jackson was hurt by a lack of money, a poorly organized campaign and the absence of the black political establishment, which was clearly in the camp of long-time civil rights supporter Walter Mondale. Despite these impediments, Jackson received a quarter of the primary vote in North Carolina and Tennessee and 43 percent of the vote in Louisiana.

This time, facing Democrats with no ties to the civil rights era, Jackson is likely to summon an even higher percentage of the black vote to his side.

Moreover, with a more explicitly populist message that won him nearly 10 percent of the vote in Iowa, Jackson should be able to carve out a small but significant share of the white vote in the South.

Jackson could be propelled from his fourth-place ranking in Iowa and New Hampshire into the top tier of the six candidates vying for the Democratic presidential nomination after Super Tuesday.

Although his style has changed, he remains a classic liberal in the tradition of the New Deal and the Great Society, with more than a dash of contemporary center/left social and economic policy.

Of the six presidential candidates, Jackson is the most ardent advocate of increased government spending for social programs, from farm subsidies to housing.

His foreign policy talks are heavily laced with concern for the Third World. In addition, he is the only presidential candidate to support the creation of a Palestinian homeland.

While other Democrats reject the idea of government's direct involvement in American industrial management and investment, Jackson enthusiastically embraces it. He supports the establishment of an American investment bank that would draw on public pension funds to improve roads, bridges and transit systems.

Jackson vigorously attacks multi-national corporations because of the loss of American jobs to foreign competition. Although he stresses that he does not favor protectionism, he argues that the lack of trade unions in the industrialized Third World should be considered unfair trade practices. These and other proposals could lead to tariffs or other penalties that would protect goods manufactured in America.

Republican Congressman Jack Kemp

By G.J. DONNELLY
Staff Reporter

With all the determination of his football days in Buffalo, Republican Congressman Jack Kemp of New York is running for the office of president of the United States. The nine-term representative is using his knowledge of supply-side economics to try to lure minorities and labor into the Republican Party.

When he first arrived on Capitol Hill in 1971, Kemp's ideas of adapting the supply-side theory to the American economic system were scoffed at, but now they form the centerpiece of the Reagan administration's economic policy.

Kemp is a Reagan loyalist on economic policy. He is not willing to raise taxes or impose an import tariff to protect American business from foreign competition.

His plan is to cut government spending and cut taxes, which in turn will benefit business by providing incentives to lower prices, thus allowing prosperity to trickle down to the consumer. American business, in theory, would be more competitive and a trade war with other nations would thus be avoided.

With this plan, Kemp hopes to broaden the Republican base among voters to include Hispanics, blacks and labor.

Kemp finished fourth in both the Iowa caucus and the New Hampshire primary.

The former quarterback is not discouraged, however. As he explained to the Canadian magazine MacLean's, "I'm a quarterback, and quarterbacks don't go into games thinking they are going to lose."

Many of Kemp's views on the issues mirror Reagan's. For instance, he supports funding the Nicaraguan contras, who are rebelling against the Sandinista regime, and is for prompt deployment of the Strategic Defense Initiative [SDI].

He is not in complete agreement with Reagan, however. For instance, Kemp blasted Vice President George Bush during a debate in New Hampshire for supporting the intermediate nuclear forces [INF] treaty with the Soviet Union. He describes his attitude toward Moscow as being one of a "heavily armed dove" and attacked the INF treaty for being "a nuclear Munich."

Despite his competitive spirit, the political truth is that much of Kemp's chances for the nomination depend on his showing in the South Dakota and Minnesota contests. Although the Kemp camp would not acknowledge political doom if its candidate does not win, his campaign manager, Charles Black, concedes, "Kemp needs to win somewhere, sometime ... We can't continue to come in third."

Kemp himself said that if the worst should occur, "I can still be a winner. Most of the theories that all the campaigns are talking about are things I've been talking about since the 1970s."

Sullivan runs for senate

By STEVE D'ANGELO
Staff Reporter

On Feb. 16, Edward Sullivan, director of the Center for Peace and Justice Education, registered as a candidate for Pennsylvania state senator.

Sullivan, a Democrat, will be running in the 17th district, which includes part of West Philadelphia, Haverford Township, Radnor Township, Lower Merion Township, Bridgeport, Plymouth, Springfield and Conshohocken.

This district is heavily Republican, said Sullivan, and he realizes that "we're facing an uphill battle. It's uphill from day one, and it will be every day until Nov. 8."

This is Sullivan's first attempt at gaining political office. Unopposed in the upcoming Democratic primary, he will be facing Richard A. Tilghman in the Nov. 8 general election. Tilghman has held his present position as state senator for the last five terms, a span of 20 years.

Sullivan gave several reasons for his decision to seek the office of state senator. The main reason, he said, is that he believes in giving the people a choice. When Sullivan discovered that the Democrats had not entered a candidate into the senatorial race in his district, he decided that he would provide voters with a candidate who had a different set of views.

Sullivan will be campaigning at Villanova, as well as in the other portions of his district. This campaign will employ what Sullivan calls "old style" politics — visiting constituents at their homes and meeting people in busy public places. With this more personal form of politics, Sullivan said hopes to overcome Tilghman's larger, more broad-based campaign.

Throughout his adult life, he has been determined to dedicate himself to public service, said Sullivan. While he was a student at Villanova, Sullivan participated in many social awareness activities.

When he graduated, Sullivan wanted to continue working on social and political issues, he said. He did so by teaching peace and justice courses at a high school. Then, in 1985, when a position as director of Villanova's Center for Peace and Justice Education became available, Sullivan moved to Lower Merion township and took over the position.

Edward Sullivan, director of the Center for Peace and Justice Education, recently announced his plans to run for state senator.

Sullivan continued his public service activism while at Villanova. In June 1985, Sullivan traveled to Nicaragua, bringing supplies to a war zone there. After his return, Sullivan began educating others about his experiences and lobbying for political action. Sullivan has also worked for housing rehabilitation in Wilmington, Del., and other cities.

The most powerful way to make a difference in public service, according to Sullivan, is through political leadership.

There are other reasons for his campaign, Sullivan added. "I would like to see Villanova students get very much more involved in local politics ... They live here and they deserve a voice here." Although Villanova students are allowed to vote in local elections, few register and even fewer actually vote, noted Sullivan. He said he believes his campaign will be educational and will get the Villanova community more involved in politics.

There are three main issues that Sullivan will be stressing in his drive to become senator: education, the environment and economic development. He declared concerning education, "Teacher's salaries need to be increased. We need to have good people in the schools and be able to keep them there ... I think schools should have the resources they need."

Sullivan also expressed his environmental concerns. "We need to clean up waste dumps, clean up our rivers and streams and try and check the acid rain problems," he said. He added that he will work both locally and statewide to improve the overall environmental situation.

Also, Sullivan said, "economic development in the immediate area is very important ... but in the state as a whole, it is very important ... that Pennsylvania have the kind of broad-based economic development that can be sustained."

Sullivan summed up his platform in the statement, "What we're going to strive for is to find a common good ... to strive for the issues that will be of common good to all the residents of the commonwealth."

Racial conflicts increase

Racial conflicts have escalated since the start of the spring term in many college campuses throughout the country.

Approximately 125 black students at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst sieged a campus building Feb. 12 to demand that police prosecute five white students who allegedly attacked two black students at a dorm party. In response to the incident, Chancellor Joseph Duffy promised to start new anti-racism programs and said he would take no reprisals against the students.

At the University of California at Irvine, the Kappa Sigma fraternity was threatened with "retribution" if it did not cancel an annual contest in which white students wore blackface makeup and lip-synched to black singing groups' songs. Kappa Sigma voted to cancel the contest.

Columbia University has also experienced racial tensions in recent years. Tanaquil Jones of the Concerned Black Students of Columbia said, "If you engage in racist activities, you're gonna have to deal with the justice of the streets."

Gerbil elected president

A gerbil named Ken beat five other candidates to become president of the Student Union at East Anglia University in Norwich, England earlier this month, according to a Feb. 15 article in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

The gerbil received over one-third of the 1,500 votes, beating his nearest competitor by 194 votes. He campaigned on a platform of free beer and soft toilet paper.

Julian Campbell, the pet's owner, entered Ken as a joke and was amazed that the rodent won the job, which pays $94.50 a week.

Ken celebrated his victory with sunflower seeds and a sip of vodka.

More engineers needed

More students need to major in engineering, according to a statement made by the National Science Foundation [NSF] last month.

If young people do not major in engineering, the United States will lose its competitive edge, said NSF director Erich Bloch at a joint meeting of the American Physical Society and American Association of Physics Teachers.

A greater number of young people need to be lured into science because there are fewer young people in the population, according to Bloch.

Should Catholic colleges have coed dorms?

Several Catholic schools with coed dorms answer affirmatively

By MAUREEN STAPLETON
Staff Reporter

The recent Student Government report on coeducational residence halls stated, "Since many Catholic institutions offer coed dorms, this is not a Catholic issue."

A number of Catholic institutions in the United States offer coeducational residence halls. They include the Catholic University of America, the College of the Holy Cross, Boston College, Duquesne University and Georgetown University.

The College of the Holy Cross has had coeducational residence halls since the admission of women in 1972. According to Marylin Boucher, assistant dean of students, coeducational housing "always seemed very natural to us."

At Catholic University, the presence of women in the coeducational halls had a "calming influence" on the men and provided activities which afforded more social interaction between men and women.

Boucher also said that coeducational housing was "the most natural way to integrate women into the community." She said she feels this was the best way for the women to be involved in the campus, without setting them apart from it.

One of the benefits stemming from this system is that it encourages interaction between the sexes and increases involvement at campus activities, said Boucher. She added that through the coeducational system the sexes "learn about each other and depend upon each other."

The current coeducational housing system at Holy Cross has "an occasional problem ... [but] not a lot of them," she said.

Coeducational residence halls have existed at Boston College for 18 years. Robert Capalbo, the director of university housing, said, "the most compelling argument continues to be that coed halls make the most development sense for all the students involved."

Capalbo said that the "vast majority" of students living in coeducational residence halls acted responsibly. He said he feels that the presence of women within the hall instills a "sense of pride" in the men. This causes vandalism to "decrease dramatically" in those halls, he added.

Within these coeducational residence halls, the relationships tend to be "much more brother-sister." Capalbo said that an interesting phenomena within the set-up was that people tend to date people from different halls and not their own.

Capalbo said that coeducational residence halls on a Catholic campus was a "false issue."

The Catholic University of America has five coeducational residence halls. It instituted coeducational housing in 1980. According to Jennifer Campbell, administrative assistant for assignments in housing, the university has "lost a couple of dollars here and there because of it [coeducational housing]."

However, Campbell said she feels that coeducational housing is necessary because "[We] don't live in a world with just men and women." She added that although some female freshmen at first have difficulty living in a coeducational hall, "with age comes maturity in terms of handling it."

Coeducational housing at Catholic University has also altered the social atmosphere of the school, noted Campbell. The presence of women in the coeducational halls had a "calming influence" on the men and provided activities which afforded more social interaction between men and women.

Georgetown University has entirely coeducational residence halls. At the beginning of the 1987 fall semester, the university implemented a cluster system of housing for freshmen. On each floor of the hall, there are three clusters of eight rooms which alternate between male and female residents.

Currently, the students at Georgetown are pushing for residence halls that are coeducational by room and not by hall, which is the present system.

According to Regina Stewart, a resident director, this system creates a family-type atmosphere in the hall. This system also fosters more social interaction between men and women.

Stewart commented, "I don't see any conflict between coed dorms and Catholic traditions and values."

Villanova to begin study of issue

The University Senate recommended that the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, charge the office of Student Life to pursue further study of coeducational residence halls at its meeting Feb. 19.

Phil Brach, Student Government president, asked that Driscoll charge the Office of Student Life to further examine the issue of coed dormitories. The motion was approved by the Senate and Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, accepted the charge.

Before approving the motion, Dr. Joseph E. Thompson, Faculty senator and political science professor, recommended that the Senate know what the motion is about before it "kicks it up to the president." He said he wanted more time to read the report since he had some questions about it.

However, Dr. Angelo Armenti, dean of University College, said that the report did not constrain the Senate.

Brach added that he wanted to "pull the report" through the Senate since the Senate could not vote on the issue in the first place. The motion was then approved.

Robert J. Capone, University senator and director of alumni, asked that Neville keep the Mission Statement of Villanova and the past tradition of the University in mind when he examines the report.

Neville recently said in an interview, "I am in favor of studying the possibility of alternative wing/floor housing to see if it is in the best interest of Villanova tradition and if it would enhance the social life of our undergraduates."

The negative aspects of alternative wing/floor housing includes lack of privacy and security concerns, said Neville. "I think the women want privacy and want the halls to be secure," he said.

According to Neville, there is a significant number of parents, students and alumni that are not in favor of the idea.

"I feel that with our current policy of visitation, there is time to visit back and forth. Many of our men's and women's halls are close as it is, and except for St. Mary's, share a common dining hall," he said.

According to Neville, it is hoped that any change in atmosphere would enhance academic seriousness. "I'm not sure that that is provable," he said.

Political groups profiled

By THOMAS BRUGGER
Staff Reporter

The Political Union, College Democrats, College Republicans, Amnesty International and Villanovans Concerned About Central America [V.C.A.C.A.] are among the politically active groups on campus.

Political Union President Sean Carroll describes his group as "Villanova's political debating society for undergraduate students ... the Union serves a dual purpose: to foster an awareness and understanding of current political topics among the University community and to provide interested students with a forum to express their views and interact with others."

Before the end of the year, Carroll plans to collect the group together once or twice and, on one of those occasions, debate the social, political and economic ramifications of AIDS.

Tracey Burke, a member of the College Democrats, related that the group has been active in sending two representatives to the Iowa caucuses.

Also, a gathering met to discuss the candidates and was referred to as "highly successful" by Burke. This group also brought in political candidate David Landau on Feb. 11 for a speech followed by a discussion.

College Republicans' President Eric Borio said that the group was in the planning stages of a trip to Washington, D.C. on April 8, though the itinerary was not yet conclusive. Borio explained that the group's purpose on campus was to recognize and foster the conservative point of view.

The anti-demonstration relating to Attorney General Edwin Meese's visit earlier this school year was organized by the College Republicans, according to Borio. Presently, they are looking to get presidential candidate Jack Kemp to speak at Villanova.

Amnesty International [A.I.] at Villanova is under the direction of Jim Gunn. He sees the chapter's goal as to "bring more of an awareness of A.I. to the Villanova community."

From the Pelican, a Peace and Justice Center publication, A.I. is described as "a worldwide human rights organization which works for the release of prisoners of conscience ... fair and prompt trials for all political poisoners and end to torture and executions."

V.C.A.C.A. President Vincent Cannistraro stated that this relatively new political organization is organizing the upcoming third annual "Central American Week," which starts March 21. Cannistraro said that V.C.A.C.A. is "not only going to focus on Nicaragua, but also look at the actions in El Salvador and Guatemala."

WKVU renovations continue

By SHARON M. NEUBAUER
Staff Reporter

WKVU, Villanova's radio station, is planning the renovation of its studio in preparation for its approval to go to an FM frequency.

According to Richard Welch, moderator of WKVU, "Plans are coming along for the approved new facility." The studio will still be at its present location in Dougherty Hall, but will undergo extensive renovation.

Welch said "the studio will be much more updated, with two production rooms rather than one, a master control room and other features."

The University will donate the funding for buying and installing new equipment needed for the renovation. "The University has assured us approximately $60,000 so far for the renovation," said Welch.

Besides waiting for the renovations to begin, WKVU is also waiting for final approval from the Federal Communications Commission [FCC] to operate on an FM frequency.

According to Christopher Golub, general manager of WKVU, "At the present time, WKVU operates on a carrier current, in which the station broadcasts through the telephone lines rather than the air, as does a station which operates on an FM frequency."

This method of broadcasting does not enable the station to reach as many listeners as if it were broadcasting on a FM frequency. Students on campus are the only ones able to pick up the signal on 640 AM.

Welch said, "The process [of gaining approach to broadcast on a FM frequency] is very long and can take any amount of time. We applied for the approval almost two and a half years ago and are still waiting for final approval. The FCC investigates the matter very thoroughly and it takes time.

"I understand that students are only here for four years and would like to have an FM radio station, but I want them to realize that we are here in the meantime and are actively involved with the campus. I also want them to realize that you do not have to have a telephone or any special equipment to listen to WKVU. If you have a radio and can tune in around 640 AM, than you can listen to us," Welch said.

WKVU has changed its programming from "album-oriented rock to progressive rock," according to Golub.

"The reason for this change was because the new administration felt that they had a responsibility to play and promote new bands who need support, such as Tommy Conwell," he said.

The station broadcasts seven days a week from 9 a.m. to 1 a.m. and has approximately 30 disk jockeys. The station has not only broadcasted on campus, but also at home basketball games and local bars.

Every Tuesday night, WKVU presents "Villanova Night" at the 23 East Cabaret on Lancaster Avenue in Ardmore. A disk jockey will play progressive music and students can eat, drink and dance.

Next month, WKVU will sponsor a dance-a-thon in the Day Hop, along with the Association of Commuting Students, March 18 and 19, according to Golub.

Also in store for the station is broadcasting outside in the spring. According to Golub, "Once the weather warms up, we can broadcast live from outside near Kennedy [Mall]." Golub also hopes to be able to bring some local bands in to play or promote their records here on campus.

Douglas Aleski, the assistant director of Residence Life, said, "the same problems you have in single-sex housing you encounter in coed."

Aleski said he feels that the violation of the visitation policy is "probably the largest problem."

Driscoll outlines 20-year plan for University which the final PEC report will be examined and resolutions will be made and presented to the Board of Trustees.

According to Driscoll, a decision-making phase will occur from June through July. "This report was never intended to grace a shelf and gather dust. It is an action report, and we intend to see to it that its recommendations are taken very seriously and implemented," he said.

Driscoll added that all members of the Villanova community will be invited to analyze and comment on the report. The vice presidents, deans and Senate will be asked to make their own formal recommendations and comments, according to Driscoll.

He also added that the PEC report leads into the University's preparation for Middle States accreditation, and that the PEC report will be incorporated into the Middle States report.

Future expansion

Driscoll said the University has adopted a planning process which has as its main purpose "the improvement and enhancement of Villanova's academic enterprise."

He added the University has spent a great deal of time demonstrating its concern for physical facilities, citing the construction of dormitories, athletic facilities and renovations in Bartley, Mendel and Tolentine halls.

He said that 1988 is a turning point for Villanova, since the University is moving into the next phase of construction of physical facilities. "It is an entrancing one, an exciting one, and, perhaps, a frightening one," he said.

Driscoll said that the Board of Trustees has given final approval for the construction of two new dormitories on south campus. "This will round out the residential complex that has been in the making for the past five or six years," he said.

West campus plans include housing for perhaps 1,000 students, a facility for food services and the construction of other administrative or recreational facilities.

He said that there is still a need for more residential housing, not for increased enrollment but for housing students who live both on campus and off campus. "Our intent in dormitory construction is to address this particular need," he added.

According to Driscoll, the University plans to proceed with the construction of dormitories on west campus, but it first must obtain a rezoning of that tract of land.

He said the University has been engaged in productive dialogue with township residents and officials and the zoning board in the hope that dormitories will soon be built.

The master plan

He said the University has been working on a master plan, which includes all areas of the campus. West campus plans include housing for perhaps 1,000 students, a facility for food services and the construction of other administrative and recreational facilities.

"When we saw the master plan for the entire campus, it [west campus] was every bit as big as the main campus," he said.

Regarding main campus, the master plan includes construction of an office building, a health care facility, a theatre or auditorium, parking facilities, additional wings to Mendel Hall and extensive renovation to Corr, Mendel, and Alumni halls and the Main Chapel, according to Driscoll.

"This is an ambitious plan for development of the University," he said.

He added that the University is currently negotiating to purchase land along South Lancaster Avenue, and recently purchased a large corner of land along County Line Road which continues to St. Mary's Hall.

Fundraising

Driscoll said the University needs approximately $300 million in funds in order to fulfill its master plan. He said that the University recently obtained a bond issue in the amount of $15 million to provide for the purchase of St. Mary's Hall from the Augustinians and pay for the cost of construction of the new dormitories for south campus.

(Photo by Castano)

Dr. Philip A. Maurone, Senate chairperson and physics professor, presented the Rev. John A. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, with a plaque in recognition of his years of dedication to the Senate.

According to Driscoll, the University must raise the money for its plans. "Our capital campaign will start out by identifying special projects of high priority, and we will solicit prospective donors over the next 20 years to support the construction of these particular projects," he said.

These high-priority projects include the office building to be located on main campus; a health care facility; the renovation of Mendel Hall, including the construction of one or two wings; the chapel renovation; and the development of the University's telecommunications network, according to Driscoll.

He said that before the new dormitories are built on west campus, the University must lay down an infrastructure, at a cost of $10 to $12 million.

He also added that there are plans for a vehicular and pedestrian underpass under Route 320 to be constructed in conjunction with PennDOT's [Pennsylvania Department of Transportation] reconstruction of the bridge which passes over the Paoli Local rail road tracks.

He concluded by saying that during his tenure as president, the deliberations of the senate closely resembled those of the Constitutional Convention some 200 years ago. "I submit to you that the Senate is an outstanding form of University self-governance. I submit ... that the labor that comes from keeping this operation [working] is well worth it," he said.

Food Services studied by PEC evaluator

An expansion of Dougherty Hall out toward Lancaster Avenue was previously considered but found to be so expensive that it was decided to construct a new building altogether on south campus.

The report also observed that "although there appeared to be an understanding of policies, procedures and standards within the food service organization, there did not appear to be anything in written form to be read, analyzed and evaluated."

Gies produced written lists of requirements to be met in purchasing food and rules governing the conduct of employees. Remarking on Buchanan's two day visit, Gies said, "I guess he [Buchanan] didn't have time to see them [written reports]."

Gies added that Food Services phone number is listed in the dents since a main objective of the evaluation was to ascertain their opinion.

Indeed the report acknowledged the limitation that "within a two day period, it is extremely difficult for one evaluator to obtain a completely accurate evaluation ... Many areas were not explored and other areas were not explored in depth."

The report considered the director of food services the "single most important factor in the success of a university food service."

It evaluated Gies as "loyal and dedicated ... very particular and concerned that the system is running in a specified manner," yet said he "did not exhibit self-confidence and enjoyment in his job [and] did not appear to reach out to students."

Gies said, "I am certainly receptive to any idea that makes sense" and claimed he will meet with students "especially if they have a problem."

Gies added that Food Service's phone number is listed in the phone book and on the weekly menu and his office is located in Dougherty. Gies said a student could also always "just stop a white coat or white gown," in reference to the managers located in the facilities.

In fact, the report said, "The staff makes themselves visible in the dining area, which is good ... [and] they have the ability to accept student criticism."

Bulletin boards for suggestions, complaints or comments are also provided in each cafeteria, according to Gies.

According to Gies, Food Services has been in the process of computerizing its menus and bills, another suggestion made by the report.

The report also observed student confusion about certain policies and recommended that students be better informed of operations through a wider use of media services.

For example, according to the report, few students participating in the evaluation were aware of "sack lunches" which are provided for students who miss any meal due to a class conflict resulting from the University's scheduling of one's classes.

Gies said that information about "sack lunches" is being publicized in the Villanovan and in the "morsels and tidbits" section of the weekly menu. He added that the Resident Student Association [RSA] is planning to advertise "sack lunches" too.

The report also observed that students feel they are not getting their money's worth if they miss meals and thus would favor being able to take out more food than the two-item limit.

The report considered the attitude "not well-founded," and referred to the Villanova University Food Service Handbook that states on page three that "the meal plan currently in effect allows the student to participate in 20 meals a week ... The average student eats 13 meals a week. The cost of the meal plan is based on this average."

Gies also mentioned that students are eligible to eat 20 meals a week, yet only pay for 13. Consequently, "the people who eat more than 13 meals are subsidized by the people who eat less than 13 meals."

Both Gies and the report felt that good food was being provided at a fair price.

The report recommended that students be better informed that they are only paying for 13 meals through public relations.

Students were not satisfied with their options in the meal plans, including the restrictions on where they must eat and the hours of service available.

Gies said extending the hours would increase expenses, yet if the extension's worth could be proven, he would do it. "If valid reasons can be found to expand that dinner hour, then we [Food Services] will."

Also the report recommended "effective continuous dialogue" with students, Student Life, faculty and administration.

The Food Services committee, which was originally initiated by Student Government last year, began formal meetings this semester and consists of representatives of students and Food Service who are striving to improve communication between the two groups and address complaints according to Gies and Cory Cohl, president of RSA.

Cohl felt that students would be more content if they knew more about Food Services and its operations. She commented that if students do not voice their concerns, Food Service will not be able to respond to their suggestions.

Cohl considered Food Services "very willing to make a change if "it's feasible" and "always willing to listen to a student who has a legitimate complaint."

The PEC report praised the sanitation of the dining halls and the excellent food and services, suggesting it could be a model for other colleges.

More students take Saferides

Student use of Saferides has increased this year as an alternative to drunk driving situations, according to Saferides President Melissa Esposito.

The organization, begun in 1984, provides free and confidential transportation for Villanova students who wish to avoid driving under the influence of alcohol [D.U.I.] or being driven by one who is under the influence of alcohol.

Saferides currently receives between four to eight calls each night of operation, an increase over previous years, Esposito said.

"The willingness of the Greek community to inform us of upcoming social events also has been a factor in the success of both Saferides and participating fraternities and sororities," she added.

Six-member crews are available to pick up University students anywhere between Sugartown Mews in Devon to 63rd Street in Philadelphia each Friday and Saturday from 11 p.m. to 3 a.m.

Crews normally work one night per semester because the roster numbers 75 volunteers.

Students making use of the service are required to show some form of Villanova identification. Furthermore, all passengers are returned to campus.

"These steps are taken solely for insurance purposes," Esposito said, noting that students should use the service as often as necessary.

She commented, however, that funding for the program is presently almost depleted.

Lucyna J. Gorski, director of Student Activities, said, "The University is prepared to provide Saferides with limited funding, should the need arise."

In the past, funding has been obtained with the aid of Robert Capone, director of Alumni.

Capone received private donations from the Villanova Financial Club, which enabled Saferides to lease two vans and obtain necessary operational equipment, according to Capone's assistant, John Zabinski.

budget. The faculty increment was subsequently lowered to 8 percent and tuition raised to 10 percent, he added.

In the Sept. 11 issue of the Villanovan, Brach predicted that "you won't see a double digit percentage in increase [of tuition]."

Word of the possible tuition increase was first announced at the Senate meeting last Friday by Dr. Alvin A. Clay, chairperson of the budget committee and dean of the College of Commerce and Finance.

Clay cited reasons for the increase as inflation and adjustments in the cost-of-living, which is expected by financial experts to rise 5 percent.

He added that substantial funding is also required to maintain Villanova's academic and social environments.

"The different schools within the University are accredited across the board by professional organizations. That kind of quality isn't something you see at most schools," Clay reasoned.

Clay said that the University is now in a growth stage in regards to the modernization of academic and athletic facilities on campus. "Everyone wanted a new gym [the duPont Pavilion] and people were happy during its planning and building stages, but of course those funds have to come from somewhere.

"The needed increase in revenue for the budget primarily means an increase in student tuition," he said.

"There is little money wasted here. The amount that is spent is appropriate for an institution of such caliber as Villanova," Clay added.

Lewis suggested that certain funds allocated to other areas of the budget could be cut in order to remedy such a substantial increase in tuition. "I enjoy and understand the importance of the football and basketball programs just as much as anyone else, but the current athletic scholarships are too high. In fact, they have been raised 33 percent since last year," he noted.

"There is also an excess in the budget in regards to research programs and 'think-tanks,' which are pet projects of certain faculty members. Such programs at this time are unnecessary in accordance to the University's financial situation," Lewis said.

He added that if the administration was to cut an excess of $3 million from these other areas within its operating budget of $109 million, it could prevent a dramatic increase in tuition and cut the currently proposed figure in half.

Clay commented that such decisions were out of the jurisdiction of the budget committee.

Murray commented that another reason to increase tuition is to allow for greater funding of financial aid programs.

Clay noted that increasing tuition to benefit financial aid programs is like "going to a hospital that charges excessive prices to you in order to reimburse someone else who won't have to pay."

Murray cited a third item involved in the tuition increase. He explained that the University will have increased its debt service over the next several years because of the $15 million in bonds issued in part to pay for the construction of two new dormitories on south campus.

When questioned about what happened to the millions of dollars recently obtained by the University through the Covenant campaigns and alumni gifts, Lewis replied that most of these funds are invested in the capital budget and are not available to the budget committee for consideration.

According to a Student Government report, "For the fiscal year ending May 31, the University had an unbudgeted surplus of about $2 million." Lewis said that he and other members of Student Government had attempted, through the Senate, to allocate $400,000 of this surplus to increase student loan funds, only to be vetoed by the Board of Trustees.

"Such incidents make you wonder about the real power of the Senate," he noted.

During a Jan. 25 interview, Senate Chairperson Dr. Philip A. Maurone described the Senate's attempt at the allocation of funds last spring, which was part of an amendment to the operating budget, as an "empty gesture" which "gave them [the Board of Trustees] carte blanche to do what they wanted" with the University operating budget. He added that the Senate has the power to accept or reject the budget in its entirety and then make recommendations.

Lewis said that Student Government plans to act against this proposed tuition increase, but "it will require student support." However, he refused to reveal the organization's plans at this time.

Protest to be held

By E.H. MC ELDOWNEY

After a minor demonstration Feb. 12, a group of students calling themselves "R.T. Loft" is planning to reschedule the protest for noon March 18.

The group's purpose is to make the public aware of the danger pedestrians and drivers face crossing the intersection at Lancaster and Ithan avenues, according to Bob O'Sullivan, a member of the group.

The group has, according to O'Sullivan, "taken it [the protest] upon themselves." He said that the group has not communicated with the administration or Student Government. He also said the group has done no research into the number of accidents at the intersection.

O'Sullivan did say, however, that "being here for four years as commuters, we know how hazardous it is to make left-hand turns."

Parts for the turn signal have been ordered and received by Radnor Township, said Patricia Marzulli, secretary of the external affairs department for Student Government, in the Feb. 12 issue of the Villanovan.

and that the students will feel more a part of the township.

Also, she hopes that if enough students register, "they may have an effect on the next election."

The campus is divided into three wards, said Marzulli. She hopes that if enough students register, the campus will be redivided into one or two wards, thus increasing the influence of the students. This would prevent students from voting against each other as they are currently doing, she said.

Women's dormitories will be visited on the evening of Feb. 28, 29 and March 1, and men's dormitories on March 14, 15 and 16. Dates and times will be posted in the dormitories, said Marzulli.

For students who are living off campus or who miss the registration at the dormitories, there will be opportunities to register at the end of March.

Protest tuition increase

The proposed tuition increase of 10 percent included in the preliminary budget for the 1988-89 academic year is at best unreasonable. Students must unite and peacefully air their opposing views now in order to reduce this unrealistic figure.

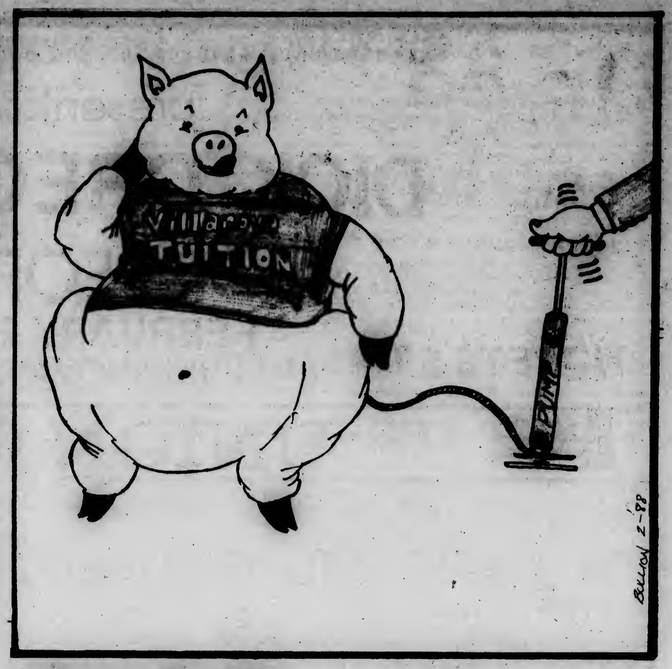
According to Edward V. Murray, assistant to the president and member of the Senate budget committee, the preliminary budget for next year includes an average increase of 10 percent in tuition rates. The increase would be accompanied by an 8 percent increase in faculty salaries and entitlements, as well as a 6 percent increase in staff salaries. John B. Lewis, student senator and a member of the budget committee, said that the administration realizes that the students do not care enough to put up an adequate fight against the increase.

Villanova has expanded in many ways over the past five years. The duPont Pavilion and new south campus dormitories have been constructed and cost money. The proposed purchase of St. Mary's Hall and expansion of west campus will also cost money. But this money cannot come from students' pockets.

Students should pressure Student Government to organize a protest against this unrealistic increase. Protests work in numbers. We must show the administration, Senate, University president and Board of Trustees that we do care about the tuition rates and that many of us cannot afford the increase.

Students must use the rationale that the increase would limit the diversity of Villanova students, hurt the minority enrollment and place financial straps on many current students.

Unless student pressure is felt on this issue, the budget report will probably include an average 10 percent increase. This is the time for action. Students cannot wait until the decision is on the desk of the Board of Trustees. Let's demonstrate our disapproval of this proposal in an organized, peaceful yet strong protest today.



Use judgment during break

Next Friday after exams we will all be able to relax, kick back and enjoy a week away from Villanova.

But we must remember as we board the airplanes with destinations of Cancun, Mexico, the Bahamas and Fort Lauderdale, Fla., that we are representing Villanova. Our actions must show others that we are respectful, mature individuals.

Spring break is not an excuse to create havoc, abandon our morals and drink excessively. We must remain in control of our faculties and demonstrate that we are proud Villanovans with high standards.

Spring break is an opportunity to enjoy time away from campus. Let's not forget who we are and what we represent during our travelling endeavors.

Letters to the Editor

Student defends editorial

To the Editor:

This letter is in support of the recent editorial about the Greek system at Villanova titled, "Greek support must be reconsidered." I am glad someone has voiced opinions I have had since I first came to Villanova.

Many students here seem to think that Villanova and fraternities and sororities are inseparable. Often, by challenging the Greek system, it is assumed that I am in some way blaspheming against Villanova. I am met with the response, "If there were no fraternities or sororities here, there would be no social life." This is as laughable as it is sad.

I congratulate the editor of the Villanovan for voicing an opinion that, while controversial, expressed the unspoken opinions of many at Villanova.

I am told of the many different service projects the Greeks perform both on and off campus. Truthfully, I think very few students join a fraternity or sorority to do service. And the list of parties, T.G.s, tailgates, etc. overshadows the list of service projects these organizations perform.

Granted, mine is an outsider's view. But from that view, fraternities and sororities at Villanova seem like more of an excuse to drink, than to promote "brotherhood, sisterhood, service and community." This, as I mentioned before, is illustrated by the prevalence of parties over the service that is done.

The two-thirds of us that are not interested in Greek life are constantly bombarded with the importance of Greeks at Villanova. I would point out that Boston College, Holy Cross and Georgetown all have survived without Greeks.

I congratulate the editor of the Villanovan for voicing an opinion that, while controversial, expressed the unspoken opinions of many at Villanova.

Kemp for president

Student advocates Kemp for president

By LOUIS MESHON

Throughout his life, Jack Kemp has been a leader of people and ideas. Again and again, he has shown the ability to beat the odds and win — in the American Football League, in the United States Congress, and now, in his campaign for president.

Jack Kemp's strength lies in the family values he has come to honor and trust. His roots are typically middle class.

Sports were a natural outlet for Kemp. He was quarterback at Occidental College and would later go on to join the Buffalo Bills. As a pro football quarterback, Kemp faced stiff competition and tough challenges. Serious hand and leg injuries threatened to end his career, but Kemp not only continued to play, he led the Bills to two league championships. For his determination, Kemp was named the league's most valuable player and elected president of the AFL Players Association. A host of pro football superstars are now backing Kemp.

Kemp channeled this same winning attitude into government service. As a rising young conservative, he became a leader in the "Reagan revolution." He was recruited by then governor of California Ronald Reagan in 1967, and has continued to work with him ever since. Kemp is the only candidate who was with Reagan in the beginning, backed him for the nomination in 1979, and co-authored both the 1980 and 1984 Republican platforms upon which Reagan ran and won.

As a U.S. Representative since 1971, Kemp has led the conservative movement in Congress. As William F. Buckley's National Review noted in an editorial, "For ten years ... Jack Kemp has set the conservative agenda — and the national political agenda as well. Kemp has taken the right positions, often long before anyone else."

It was Kemp who wrote the Kemp-Roth Tax Cut bill that became the centerpiece of the Reagan economic recovery plan that lowered tax rates by 25 percent, prompting Time magazine to conclude, "he sold Reaganomics to Reagan." It was Kemp who authored key provisions of last year's tax reform that increased the personal exemption to $2000 and reduced tax rates for eight of 10 Americans to 15 percent, and it was Kemp who introduced proposals to open foreign trading markets, combat drug abuse and protect the unborn.

In the Congress, Kemp has risen quickly to key positions of budget, foreign policy, defense and family committees and subcommittees. In recognition of his abilities, Kemp's House colleagues elected him to the key Republican leadership post of conference chairman.

Kemp's strength as a leader lies in the deep family values he has come to honor and trust. This same winning spirit prevails in the Kemp family today — a family that is as close to Kemp politically as it is to him personally.

Family values continue to shape Kemp. His concluding remarks at his April 6, 1987 announcement speech are indicative of what kind of president Kemp will be. "As I look at my family ... and think of all our families — all our hopes, our dreams, our future, our freedom and peace — I know that is why I am in this race, and why I want to be president."

Professional quarterback, United States Congressman, family man — Kemp has remained a leader of people and ideas.

Kemp: Only wise choice for Americans

By ERIC E. BORIO

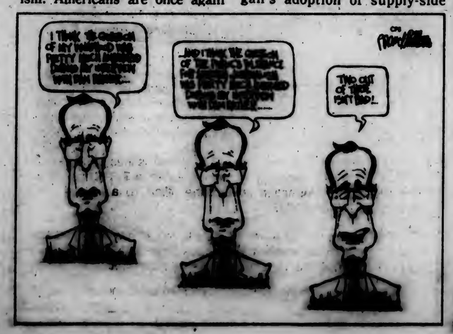
It is much too early to say anything prophetic about the outcome of the 1988 presidential election. However, it is as good a time as any to suggest the qualities which would be desiderata for the next president.

Seven or so years ago, the world was a much different place than it is today. This is largely the result of the successes of the Reagan presidency. For example, stagflation, a combination of unreasonably high inflation and unemployment, has been replaced by one of the longest sustained economic recoveries in United States history.

Undoubtedly, this is attributable to the Reagan administration's unfaltering commitment to overall economic growth, as opposed to the more liberal notion of correcting the economic injustices faced by one socioeconomic group by imposing injustices on another.

But most significant of all over the past seven years has been the reawakening of a traditional value elemental to the American national character — individualism. Americans are once again saying in the spirit of Thomas Jefferson that government should do for the people, only what the people cannot do for themselves.

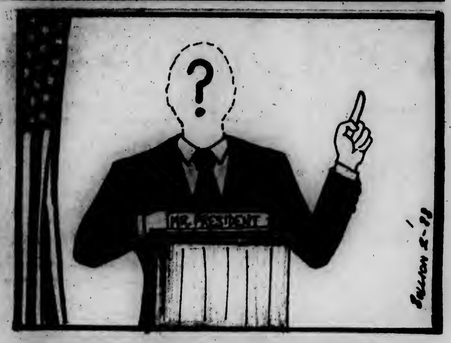
Yet, despite these advances, the world is far from perfect, and much remains to be accomplished, for the ambitious goals of President Ronald Reagan have not all been realized. But let us not judge too harshly, after all, this is the first truly successful presidency since Eisenhower.



With these realities in mind, the next president should be one committed to building on the firm foundation laid by Reagan. Consistency is key, for it is something too often lacking in domestic and foreign policy — perhaps the root of many of this nation's problems.

Having had the opportunity, along with other members of the College Republicans, to meet Jack F. Kemp in person, it is my unequivicable conviction that he is the only man capable of replacing Reagan.

It is certainly not the case, however, that Kemp is a Reagan look alike. Nothing can be further from the truth. Kemp is a leader of the highest order, after all it may surprise many to know that he was the impetus behind Reagan's adoption of supply-side economics — largely responsible for producing the sustained recovery. Such originality is indicative of an intellect unparalleled by any other candidate of either party, and such salesmanship is indicative of a charisma of equal magnanimity.



Furthermore, if there is one prerequisite that the next president should espouse, it should be cunning in foreign affairs. As America continues to reassert her influence after the post-Vietnam period of isolationism, the international situation could erupt unless we approach foreign policy with realism and prudence. By continuing a respectable presence in the Persian Gulf, remaining committed to a credible strategic deterrence by immediate deployment of SDI in the face of injudicious approaches to nuclear arms control, initiating renewed American support for freedom fighters worldwide, and remaining circumspect to Gorbachev's perestroika, Kemp is our nation's only wide choice.

Obligation to street beggars unfounded

By MICHAEL E. JONES

How many times have you excitedly flung open the door, expecting to see your friend who said he would be dropping by, only to find one of the sorriest looking born again Christians you have ever seen, convinced that you are the best candidate since Moses to join their "elite" little group.

"Yes, I'm very flattered, but ..."

"Please — let me take just a minute of your time to explain all of the great things our organization has to offer."

"I'd love to, but ..."

"Surely you can spare a minute. My family has not eaten for over a week, and this is the only means I have to feed them." (This may not be the exact line used, but the guilt is inflicted in some similar fashion).

It is futile. You are trapped. So, considering this to be your penance for not attending church over the past month, you reluctantly agree to listen to this broken record ramble on about how great it would be to lick world hunger, end war and hatred among mankind, and other juicy tidbits.

This past summer I naively opened the .front door without checking, and was greeted by the dreaded "Hi, we're Jehovah's Witnesses, and we'd like to ..."

By the time they had finished, I'd grown a beard. Well, not exactly, but you get the picture. I started to look for excuses to get away, which they weren't too keen at noticing. So in one last desperate effort to get rid of them, I asked, "How about a donation?"

It was as if I had a pyromaniac for a son and had asked him, "Want to help me start the fire, son?"

"Oh, bless you, young man!"

"I'll bet my grandson would love to meet you. Do you want to see some pictures?"

"No! I mean, no thanks. Now why don't you all run along and get outta my hair!! I mean, have a nice day ...

I can recall another time I was in an airport and some greasy, sick-looking guy was shuffling around handing out what looked like small index cards. "Probably another Jehovah's Witness," I mused.

I was standing in line minding my own business when he meandered by. He stopped in front of me and held out a card. Pretending I did not notice him, I reached down to tie my shoe (yes — I had loafers on).

He must have been extremely hard up, extremely patient, or both, because he stood directly in front of me, waiting for me to complete my evasive task. I slowly rose to my feet, and he literally stuck the card in my face. So I took the card, examined it, and was overjoyed to discover that I was the owner of an alphabet in sign language.

Fantastic — now when I am riding my bicycle and some clown cuts me off, I can express my appreciation in a more complete manner. I turned the card over, which read:

I AM DEAF
YOU CAN PAY WHATEVER
YOU'D LIKE FOR THIS CARD.

Nice hustle, chief, but I do not think so. I shook my head and handed the card back to him. He would not take it, and he would not leave either. Swell. I considered asking him about group rates, but instead dropped two quarters into his little can to get him out of my face. Besides, he smelled like he should get better acquainted with a bar of Ivory, and I was not exactly in the mood to sport the funds for a gas mask.

Well, I had had it up to here with beggars and these so-called non-profit organizations. When I got home for fall break, the minute I stepped through the door the phone rang.

"Hello?"

"This is the American Red Cross calling and you have not donated for quite a while. We have a drive next week — are you going to give?"

Marvelous. My money and time aren't enough? Now you want to milk some juice from me?

"Uh, I don't think so?"

"Why not?"

Why not? What is this, 20 questions? Why don't you invade my privacy a little more? Why don't you drop by my house in the middle of the night while I am sleeping and tap a pint or two out of me. Leave me alone!

You might be wondering why I am writing all of this. In a world full of pain, suffering, drugs, crime and other unpleasant things, I find it necessary to stick up for the little guy caught in the middle of this. I will guarantee that many of you have undergone similar ordeals such as the ones mentioned here. So the next time somebody knocks on your door, rings you on the telephone or approaches you on the street asking for money, blood, organs, souls or the like, take my advice and just say, "No." Chances are you will preserve your sanity, unless, of course, you have already lost it like I have.

Coed dorms supported

To the Editor:

In regard to the article on coed dorms in last week's issue, "Coed dorm report issued," we feel that the University's administration has not taken into account the true feelings of those people who constitute the actual Villanova community: the students.

The report presented to the Office for Student Life showed that over 90 percent of the students are in favor of coed residence halls. The latest survey, conducted in October of 1987, showed that over 50 percent of the parents would not have any objections to the construction of coed dorms.

To top it all off, over two-thirds of the alumni publicly stated that the introduction of coed dorms to Villanova would not influence their outlook on the University.

What will it take for Villanova to come out of the "dark ages" and approve coed dorms? Do all of the parents and alumni have to agree before something is done about the situation? All we ask is that our opinion be given the same respect that the alumni and our parents receive. It is really a sad state of affairs when the students are given little or no say in what happens to them.

This issue of coed dorms has been up in the air long enough. Now that new dorms are going to be built on south campus, we must unite and make our presence felt on this campus.

This probably will be the last opportunity for Villanova students to have coed dorms in the near future. Everyone must make people like Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, realize that we are the University. Without the students, there is nothing! The administration better wake up and acknowledge the fact that our opinions should be a major factor in their decision-making process.

Villanovan praised

To the Editor:

Congratulations on your excellent AIDS supplement! It was well written by an informed staff, who obviously "did some homework."

AIDS is a very difficult topic to discuss in an open manner, especially on a campus with a strong religious affiliation (such as Villanova). It was "gutsy" of you to undertake such an issue.

More importantly however, is that your work focuses all of our attentions on a serious health crisis that could effect any of us. Hopefully, the Villanova University community will have read your supplement and taken its message to heart.

Thank you!

Professor offers correction

To the Editor:

In last week's Villanovan Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities, made the extraordinary and false claim that the effectiveness of condoms in the prevention of pregnancy (and therefore, prevention of AIDS) was only 80 percent.

In fact, all authoritative scientific sources agree that the effectiveness rate of condoms is 90 percent or more; greater than 97 percent when used conscientiously.

These figures can be found in the latest edition of Hatcher et al., Contraceptive Technology, 13th edition, 1986 and in the textbook for Biology 1101 (Curtis and Barnes, Invitation to Biology).

One of the primary tools in the fight against AIDS is education. In our role as educators we must be certain that what we teach is true.

Yearbook protested

To the Editor:

It has come to our attention that, once again, in an attempt to express their creativity, the staff of the Belle Aire yearbook is contemplating changing the color of our yearbook from the traditional "Villanova blue."

As proud students, we feel that the Belle Aire is Villanova's book, not solely that of the undergraduate yearbook staff. Although we recognize that certain freedoms accrue to any editorial staff, we feel that this staff has a certain responsibility, not only to its creativity, but to the people who came before them, the Class of 1988, and to the proud Villanova tradition.

Although last year's book was of excellent quality, many feel that this excellence was marred by a cover which deviated from the blue color which has been a source of pride to us over the past four years. This pride does not end with graduation.

Twenty years from now, we do not want a foolish editorial decision, based more on "editorial freedom" or principle, to blemish the memory of our college days. Villanova is, always has been, and will continue to be the "blue and white." Why should the yearbook, which is supposed to represent a compilation of our achievements, belittle these achievements by its very appearance?

It is our sense that one of the purposes of a yearbook is to celebrate the unity of our campus community. Why, then, does the editorial staff of the Belle Aire seek to undermine that community by placing artistic considerations above the traditions which unite us all?

With all the recent commentary concerning apathetic and disunified students, this situation seems to present a golden opportunity for the Villanova community to demonstrate its unity and intense pride. We call upon all members of the University to make their feelings about this matter known to the editorial staff of the Belle Aire yearbook.

This letter to the editor was signed by 365 members of Villanova University's student body.

Parking policy

To the Editor:

Electrical engineering graduates often spend 10 or 12 hours a day on the fourth floor of Tolentine Hall trying to use three precious graphics terminals. One day I went out to my car to drive to Radio Shack to get some cable for the lab (sort of doing Villanova a favor), and I see that my car is gone.

I asked the guard, in his Spring Mill guardhouse, what had happened to my car. He said that it was towed because it was parked illegally, since I got there at 7:30 a.m. and the "ED" permit is not valid until 4:30 p.m. I asked why I was not given a warning. He explained that Security did not have to give warnings and we proceeded to argue.

I pointed out that Security made me buy a $25 parking permit, and he said that I should have read the booklet that came with it (fine print, last paragraph, page five).

He remembered that he had given me a ticket for "failing to properly display a parking permit" two weeks ago because my "ED" permit was on the dashboard instead of hanging on the mirror. This, however, is not listed in the booklet, although "Student Using Parents/Relatives Car to Drive on Campus with Inner Campus or Spring Mill/West Campus Stickers Affixed to Automobile" does appear in the booklet. Apparently, the booklet seems to predate plastic tags.

I informed the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, of my situation. He called someone and discovered that I was a previous offender. I was given a ticket for the same thing two weeks ago. I said that this was false and he said to simmer down or I could end up in jail. He then advised me to talk with Chief Rowan P. Kelly, director of Security.

Kelly said that he did not tow my car and that he wanted to be reasonable. He told me that faculty members have to pay $80 to park. I told him that I did not care about the past, but what about the future? I do not feel that I was properly warned before towing — why not warn people or fine them first? Student fines are collectible. Why enrich Radnor Garage when V.U. is begging for bucks?

Radnor Garage is really nice. Don "you don't have to know my last name" said, "sixty dollars cash." I told him that the signs in the area said $50, and he said that those are not their signs, and they have not charged $50 for six months.

Later a departmental secretary tells me that her car was towed, and they wanted to write a letter to someone about the situation. Of course employees are paid to be here, but students are customers.

For the good of the rest of the community, I think that the rules of Security and the promulgation and enforcement thereof should be changed at once.

V.U. has community

To the Editor:

Why do Villanova students tend to get a bum rap? It is not really justified nor is it constructive to the students. Such articles as last week's op-ed written by Dante Scala entitled "Students lack community" appear consistently and prove less progressive each time because the complaint is just not justified.

Villanova's community bond is so strong that it welcomes people, gathers them in and supports them. Special Olympics, Balloon Day, Hunger Awareness Week and the Philadelphia Committee for The Homeless are just a few examples. Villanova helped build a much needed school in Haiti.

They feel such an awareness for national issues that a Center for Peace and Justice has been instituted here as a driving model for other universities. These require the spirit of a concerned community, not just the spirit of a few individuals.

Building community is an entirely subjective concept. In response to this task Scala left to our administration, I must respond that there is a community at Villanova.

Because of our unique off-campus situation, students will generally become interested in many individual things other than college life. They are concerned with their jobs and their activities, their homes and their lives. This is why the students' concerns are implemented through governors willing and able to get results. This is representative government.

Representing the student body at Georgetown University's national student government workshop, I met with student officers from hundreds of universities across the country, all different sizes and calibers of student population.

There I compared our systems of administration, and I found no other university with a Senate comprised of faculty, administrators and students that determines the policy of the University. I found no other University where students actually sit as members of the Board of Trustees subcommittees.

At Villanova there are no shadowy and ambiguous figures of power to any person who opens their eyes. They are readily accessible and Villanova administration is a model for other Universities to follow.

This April the students will again choose and support the candidate who will sincerely and willingly continue the work. Candidates that go to the students during elections do so as an effort of the entire government to be true representatives, to have a focus of the whole of the students. This is how the government begins to build community and to work with the system.

The Student Government is issue oriented; the students know to come to us with their concerns. None of our issues will die the slow death that Scala fears. The intermediary he refers to as "a go between . . . small enough to listen to the individuals problems, and large enough to gain the attention of the system," exists.

The bureaucracy cannot deny two years of research finally complete on three major issues of coed residence halls, Security, and used books and now the lobbying begins, within the system, actively and professionally. Attacking the issues from within the system as a concerned community is our task.

Everyone cares. I always want more people to get involved and work with us on the issues, I truly believe in the educational experience involved. Just because some students' lives do not allow that time necessary or the talent required does not mean that they do not care or are less a part of the community, it just means that they are different. It is imperative that their leaders and their representatives respect this.

Villanova Greek system defended

The Villanovan makes every effort to print as many letters to the editor as possible. The Villanovan regrets that all letters could not be printed because of space limitations.

To the Editor:

As a member of Villanova's Greek community, I was disgusted to read your Feb. 19 editorial, "Greek support must be reconsidered." This editorial proves that closed-minded individuals with the power to shape public opinion often tend to speak critically regarding subjects of which they have little knowledge.

After reading the piece, it is obvious to me that its author holds a highly misinformed view of the Greek system.

Admittedly, the death of James Callahan is nothing less than an atrocity. However, the Greek world should not be held accountable for the actions of one or two irresponsible and immature individuals any more than Villanova University, for example, should be held accountable for the actions of Gary McLain.

Since becoming a Greek three years ago, I can honestly say that my fraternity experience has been nothing but positive. Through my fraternity, many doors have been opened to me that would have otherwise been forever closed; doors in a social sense, doors in the business world, but, most importantly, doors within myself. I have also witnessed all of the good that the Greek system has done for so many.

As a member of the Interfraternity Council Executive board, I have seen the countless service projects which fraternities and sororities organize and successfully execute each semester. In addition, the entire Greek community presents, each year, the Greek Halloween party and Easter egg hunt, which provide the parents of the community with a safe avenue of entertainment for their families, as well as positive public relations for the University.

As a pledgemaster for one of Villanova's largest fraternities, I have seen how positive an effect Greek life has had on so many students' lives. People coming together to help one another, and to truly befriend on another; that is fraternity. It is not the parties, not the "Animal House" stereotype, but people, in the pursuit of high ideals and mutual benefit, working together.

Yes, it is true that fraternities and sororities do have closed parties and T.G.s. However, it is also very true that we Greeks are painfully aware of the potential liabilities. All key officers of Greek organizations are required to attend various liability seminars, and most, if not all, assign brothers to a "sober patrol," and take the car keys of those who have driven. This hardly sounds like the work of an organization with the "goal of alcohol consumption."

Finally, let us not forget that the unfortunate death of Callahan is an isolated incident, and is in no way indicative of the fraternity activity at Villanova. The author of the editorial speaks as a person having great familiarity with the fraternity pledging process. Why then have I never experienced a "hell week," or "hell night," either as a pledge or a pledge educator? Why, in over three years of fraternity membership, have I never been forced to drink, nor have I ever forced another to consume alcohol?

The Greek system, like all others, is not perfect. However, unlike most, it invites its members to strive for perfection. Villanova University reaps the rewards of one of the finest and most respected Greek systems in the country, and talk of its dissolution is ludicrous.

If the author had checked the facts before committing the Villanovan to an apparently anti-Greek stand, she would have been aware that the Villanova Greek Study Commission's report acknowledges the positive benefits of Greek life at Villanova.

There is absolutely no place for this type of journalism. It is not only bitter and reactionary, but unfounded as well. The Greek community represents nearly one-third of Villanova University. We are proud of our rich tradition, and sick of uniformed critics.

To the Editor:

I am writing in reference to a cartoon that appeared in the Feb. 19 issue of the Villanovan. The drawing featured a dead body being taken away on a stretcher. I found the cartoon not only to be offensive and morbid, but totally in bad taste as well.

It seems that whenever an unfortunate incident occurs involving a fraternity or a sorority every one comes out of their shell to bad mouth the Greek system.

As a member of Lambda Chi Alpha, I find it to be particularly frustrating especially when all of the good work done by the Greek community goes unheralded. It is a shame that certain individuals can only find fault in our society today.

The hearts of the members' of Lambda Chi Alpha at Villanova go out to the family of James Callahan and to our fellow brothers at Rutgers for this senseless loss.

May I suggest a review of your editorial policy pertaining to artwork.

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to the Villanovan's most recent attack on the Villanova Greek system. The accusation that fraternities and sororities do not balance their service functions with "their secondary goals of alcohol consumption" are unfounded. Although there are examples of underage drinking in the Greek system, there are many more examples of underage drinking in the rest of the undergraduate population here at Villanova. This in itself does not make it right, but because the Greek system is organized, it is easier to criticize it rather than the whole student population.

Nearly one-third of the undergraduate population here is a part of the Villanova Greek system, a system that many outsiders consider to be one of the best in the country. What other systems do, are not reflections of our own Greek system. Nor are our fraternities and sororities to be stereotyped like those on television or in the movies. Our system is conscious of the responsibilities we have to ourselves and the community.

In the same issue of the Villanovan in which the editorial called for the extinction of the Greek system, an article appeared reporting about Sigma Pi fraternity helping the handicapped. Also, in the AIDS supplement issue, the Villanovan reported that Kappa Alpha Theta sponsored a portion of an AIDS awareness lecture series held last semester. Sigma Nu held a canned food drive last semester that aided the Philadelphia homeless. Special Olympics is perhaps the greatest example of Greek involvement.

The death of James Callahan is most certainly a tragic and heartbreaking event. Our hearts go out to his family and friends. This situation should have never occurred, but it has. Now the entire Greek system at Rutgers University is facing extinction because of the actions of a few misguided people that put Callahan in such a lethal position.

Here at Villanova, the Greeks did not wait for such an event to occur before they took preventative measures. Many fraternities and sororities have implemented plans to reduce alcohol related problems.

Sigma Phi Epsilon instituted a liability committee that performs this function. This committee is made up of brothers and pledges who, during fraternity parties, abstain from drinking, maintain the guest list, collect car keys, and drive people who have had too much to drink home safely. This has proven to be an effective method for alleviating problems.

The Greek system here has many functions. Among them are community service, social activities, leadership development, promotion of brotherhood and sisterhood and housing assistance. All these functions are necessary to Villanova and the community. Without the Greek system, who would do all these? Greeks are a helping hand for the University. We are involved in almost every facet of student life here, from Student Government, to Special Olympics, to the newspaper.

To the Editor:

The editorial entitled "Greek support must be reconsidered," in the Feb. 19 issue of the Villanovan, shows how unfounded fears and ignorance can creep into our everyday thinking. The writer made mention of the recent and tragic death of James Callahan, a Rutgers University freshman and pledge member of the Lambdi Chi Alpha Fraternity.

An accompanying cartoon illustration showing a body on a stretcher with a sheet drawn over it, and fraternity brothers standing over it holding beer mugs, was in very poor taste.

The needless death was indeed unfortunate, and those responsible should not be excused, but the attitude which blames the incident on the programs of all fraternities and sororities and calls for Villanova to "seriously consider discontinuing fraternities and sororities" is absurd.

The writer apparently feels that all Greek organizations encourage excessive drinking in many of their functions and that they hold a "hell night," which always "involves pledges drinking to excess." The writer even goes as far as to name alcohol consumption, not social interaction or brotherhood or sisterhood, as one of the two goals of Greek organizations.

This assumption not only causes undue harm to these organizations in its implications, but it also ignores the fact that Greeks at Villanova are actively engaged in service and community functions.

For example, Sigma Nu fraternity raised over 500 cases of food and more than $950 in donations for the homeless in its canned food drive this past semester.

Also, and quite ironically, an article appeared in the very same issue as the aforementioned editorial, which gave credit to brothers of Sigma Pi Fraternity, who volunteer their services for MBF, a computer school for the handicapped.

The writer of the editorial failed to mention this aspect of Greek life. This generalization was unfair. So, before we start calling for the dissolution of the entire Greek system at Villanova, we should make sure that we see the whole picture.

To the Editors:

We are quite distraught upon hearing the news of the Rutgers fraternity incident last week. This is something that can certainly hurt our fine Greek system if not handled properly. The following is a response to the editorial, "Greek support must be reconsidered," printed in last week's Villanovan.

However, before even responding to the editorial itself, one must take an objective look at the accompanying sketch of Rutgers' fraternity members holding mugs and standing over the deceased pledge.

This drawing was in extremely poor taste, disrespectful to those involved in the incident and especially degrading to the deceased. This is especially shocking coming from a community priding itself on high morals and Christian ideals. A sketch of this sort totally contradicts that philosophy.

Furthermore, the editorial hastily speculated and generalized the situation to include the entire Greek system and also pinpointed the Villanova Greek system as a sight of major conflict of goals.

We feel it was unethical to speculate that our primary goals were for lip service only, and are heavily outweighted by our secondary goal of "excessive uncontrolled drinking." This statement is totally unfounded and inexcuseable. In no section of any of our constitutions, by-laws or stated goals is alcohol consumption promoted.

While it will not be denied that fraternities and sororities hold "T.G.s and closed theme parties" where alcohol is present, these Greek organizations also put in many hours and sometimes weekends, to learn about liabilities and how to be responsible when alcohol is involved.

This is clearly seen as Greeks make use of alternate means of transportation, such as Saferides and designated sober drivers. Keys are also taken in order to obtain admittance to a social event to ensure a safe ride home.

In most cases, "Hell Week" or "Hell Night" is not a time for alcohol, but a time for preparing oneself for the rite of initiation where ritual and tradition is meant to be understood and therefore alcohol is deemphasized.

If an individual feels that attacking over 30 percent of the student body, by discontinuing the Greek system based simply on the assumption that something drastic will happen, then we feel that he should at least be informed before making such a decision. It seems from this editorial, that the Greek system may be entirely misunderstood.

We are taking advantage of a number of opportunities to correct possible areas of conflict. The Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council as Greek governing bodies, are charged with the responsibility of addressing such areas. Therefore, we would accept any opportunity to inform a person or group on the purpose of the IFC and Panhel about the Greek system in general.

V.U. Greeks speak out

To the Editor:

Upon reading your article entitled "Greek support must be reconsidered," and observing the accompanying cartoon, I have to question the judgement, responsibility and taste of the Villanovan.

I am an avid supporter of First Amendment rights. The opinion which you expressed in your editorial is your own, and you have every right to express your views. This right stops, however, when statements are made which are false and can be taken as a deliberate misrepresentation of character.

I have been a dedicated member of the Greek Community at Villanova for three years. I have observed and worked on many of the beneficial projects in which Greeks participate. They work on large scale projects such as Balloon Day, Special Olympics, Halloween parties and Easter egg hunts for neighboring children. There are also smaller projects such as charity work for St. Francis Soup Kitchen, the Cancer Society, Big Brother/Little Brother and Toys for Tots.

All of these activities allow students to experience the joy of helping those less fortunate than themselves. All of these activities enhance the public's image of Villanova, and support its role as a Catholic institution. More importantly, these activities allow students to interact and enjoy themselves while working for a common cause.

I have attended almost every social function my fraternity has had in the past three years. When you speak of "excessive alcohol-related activities," I wonder if I have missed something.

All I see at the door of our functions, and patrolling the rest of the house, are brothers checking for car keys and monitoring the behavior of our guests and other brothers.

There is always a sober committee and a Saferides committee. Buses are always used as the mandatory form of transportation at all of our formal functions. Cash bars are present, and all guests are checked for proper identification.

I have also attended the functions of other fraternities and sororities and have found their precautions to be similar to ours.

It all boils down to the fact that Greeks at Villanova look out for their guests and themselves at all social functions. When was the last time anyone went to Smokes or Kelly's and had round trip, door to door transportation and someone he respected looking out for him and correcting him if his behavior became inappropriate? Which system is safer?

My chapter was deeply upset as we mourned the death of James Callahan. I was appalled to find a cartoon depicting his death in your paper. I feel that this was in very poor taste and was extremely disrespectful treatment of the deceased. I am sure his parents would feel the same way.

In 1972, Lambda Chi Alpha International became the first fraternity to officially remove the term "pledge" from its bylaws. This was replaced with the concept of associate membership. This education system abhors hazing and does not employ alcohol in any of its teachings. Instead, associate members are treated like brothers and are taught the ideals of a Christian.

The Villanova Chapter of Lambda Chi Alpha follows this system and its brotherhood supports it tremendously. I also feel that the administration, and Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities, in particular, is doing an incredible job in monitoring our Greek system. This is something that other schools, such as Rutgers and Princeton University, based on their past records, do not have.

Our administration is always looking out for its best interests. I can assure that if a Greek organization is not fit to exist as Villanova, the administration will remove it. At this point in time, there are over 20 Greek organizations at Villanova that contribute more to the University than most other organizations on this campus.

The incident at Rutgers was indeed a tragedy that should have been avoided. It was, however, an isolated incident. The Greek system at Villanova has no ties with the Greek system at Rutgers. The two systems are organized and run in different manners. In the future, I would request that you not stereotype the Greek system here at Villanova or my fraternity.

To the Editor:

"Perhaps in the best interest of all Villanova students," Villanovan editorials should look at the big picture of a problem and not place blame upon one-third of Villanova's major organizations. This letter is in response to the Feb. 19 editorial "Greek support must be reconsidered."

Alcohol consumption and related problems are not strictly limited to Greek organizations. To place the blame upon one segment of the student population demonstrates a naive and ill-informed perspective of Villanova's social environment.

Greeks accomplish more for alcohol awareness than any other campus organization. They sponsor lectures, fraternity education programs and designated drivers for these "T.G." parties where soda and food are made readily available. From the start of Greek affiliation, responsible alcohol programs are initiated and this education continues throughout membership.

To drink or not to drink is a personal decision. It does not require membership in a Greek organization to consume alcohol. The truth is that with or without Greek systems, college campuses would still have alcohol-related problems.

Furthermore, the "brotherhood and sisterhood, service and community" aspects that this editorial so eloquently discredited demonstrate a grave lack of understanding of true Greek life.

All fraternities and sororities are dedicated to the service of the community and others. Each chapter supports individual philanthropies including: the Arthritis Foundation, the Institute of Logopedics, sight conservation and aid to the blind, the American Society for Care of Animals, the American Red Cross, Archdiocese of Philadelphia food drives, Muscular Dystrophy, the Heart Fund, Ronald McDonald House and many more.

Greeks also help in campus-wide service projects such as Balloon Day and Special Olympics. On top of this, the Greek community also sponsors community projects such as the Easter egg hunt and the Halloween party for local children, as well as, raising money during Greek Week for local charities.

The bonds of sisterhood and brotherhood go beyond these "T.G." parties. Fraternities and sororities provide a base for caring, understanding and support to many students for whom home is very far away.

Group interaction, leadership development and scholastic achievement are also part of being in a Greek organization. This combination has most definitely lived up to its potential. This can be seen in the overwhelming Greek involvement on Villanova's campus.

All of these listed items are Greek goals. How can this editorial dare to present alcohol consumption as a "secondary goal" or as any goal of a Greek organization? To come to this conclusion simply suggests a lack of understanding of the Greek community.

Perhaps it is true that Pandora, as a Greek, let out all the sorrows and evils of the world and in so doing, has set a stereotype of Greeks. However, it is time to stop using Greeks as the scapegoats for University problems and realize that many of these would still exist even if the Greeks did not.

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to a recent editorial entitled "Greek support must be reconsidered" found in last week's edition of the Villanovan. This article should not be construed as a personal attack on the Villanova editorial staff; we, just as they, are subscribing to the University policy of "responsible freedom of expression for students."

Is it fair to capitalize upon a recent unfortunate situation at Rutgers to generalize and make a blanket statement about all fraternities and sororities? The answer is no.

We feel very deeply for the recent situation; however, we do not believe that the solutions presented in the editorial are valid. Disbanding the fraternities and sororities is a step away from, rather than a step towards, the solution.

On the other hand, for fairness sake, it is our belief that the sororities and fraternities at Villanova would not shun a 'reconsideration' of the Greek system. We, at Sigma Phi Epsilon, would welcome a reconsideration if serious doubts are present about the Greek system at Villanova, and if this reconsideration is done in a fair and impartial manner. The reason being? We have nothing to hide. Closer scrutiny will only help to strengthen the Greek system at Villanova.

We are not denying that sororities and fraternities participate in events where alcohol is served, that is a fact. The thing to remember here is responsible drinking and responsible hosts.

Fraternities are dealing with the problem of alcohol consumption — not shying away from it. Fraternities are taking measures to prevent any alcohol related incidents from occurring.

We at Sig Ep, do not have 'open' parties, we collect car keys at the door, we serve alternate beverages and food, we have a guest list and most important of all, we have three to five Brothers remain stone sober to work the door and return keys. They are responsible for returning the collected car keys; if they have a doubt as to whether someone is capable of driving home, they will drive them wherever they have to go.

Villanova itself is dealing with the problem of alcoholism and not avoiding it. Organizations such as the Tailgate Management Team, Saferides and the recently established Drug & Alcohol Center are effective measures of control.

Villanova has even had Michael Green, the President of the Collegiate Consultants on Drugs and Alcohol, on three different occasions, speak about alcoholism and responsible drinking.

As for Villanova 'promoting' alcoholism by allowing fraternities and sororities to exist — that is completely out of bounds and amazing that someone would even draw that kind of inference. Villanova supports the Greek system, a system set up to promote brotherhood and sisterhood, service and community, not alcoholism.

As for "Hell Night" and "Hell Week" — fraternities and sororities are not "Animal Houses" as some people would like to think and promote. The hazing laws in the state of Pennsylvania are some of the strictest in the nation — fraternities and sororities alike are smart enough to realize this and not take this risk of even promoting an event that even remotely could be likened as hazing.

As for Sig Ep — we do not haze our pledges, it is that simple. Our main reason being, how could you haze someone one day and then call them your brother the next? You cannot. As for drinking — our pledges are in no way forced to drink alcohol, it is purely their decision; we make that very clear to them at the beginning of our brotherhood development program. Case in point, in the past two semesters, we had two pledges (now brothers) who do not drink alcohol. They did not drink at all during pledging, nor were they forced to.

Since Villanova is in no way a residential campus, fraternities and sororities serve as organizations to allow all ages of students, from freshmen to seniors, to meet and socialize on some common and bonding ground. The social impact that the Greeks have on this campus is enormous.

In addition to this, the Greeks do provide many benefits to the school and community through service projects and the like. Look how many Greeks are involved in the Orientation Program, Special Olympics, Balloon Day and other activities.

In conclusion, it is our concerted belief that the University is better off dealing with the problem of alcoholism in an arena, such as a school organization, that can be governed. Disbanding the sororities and fraternities on campus will not solve the problems of alcoholism and excessive drinking. These problems plague both Greeks and non-Greeks alike.

All of the service projects in the world will not bring back James Callahan, but the image painted to the public by the recent editorial and through many other differing sources is simply not substantiated.

Ignorance is blind ... the question is no longer whether students, Greek or not, will drink. It has become a matter of responsible drinking. Perhaps, it is in the best interest of the Villanova students that the University scrutinize fraternities or sororities. Sig Ep and the other Greeks on campus can deal with this scrutiny. Discontinuing them, however, would effectively destroy a medium through which change could, can and does take place.

To the Editor:

It greatly dismays me to see that the Villanovan has taken an anti-Greek stand. Your Feb. 19 editorial suggests discontinuing fraternities and sororities because of the tragic death of a pledge at another school.

The difference between our Greek system and Rutgers' is that we have taken serious measures to prevent this kind of incident. Last semester, Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities, and the Rev. Robert J. Martin, assistant to the vice president for Student Life, held a seminar on alcohol liability and legal implications for all fraternities and sororities. Every Greek organization had at least two representatives at the seminar.

The bottom line brought out at that meeting for every chapter was that they are liable for injury or death because of overconsumption of alcohol, and the penalties under the law are severe.

Greek groups now have sober committees, they often take keys at parties and use buses as transportation for events involving alcohol. They have begun alcohol awareness programs. They bring in speakers like Mike Green to talk about the dangers of abusing alcohol.

The irreasponsible actions of one chapter on a different campus does not mean that Villanova Greeks are dangerous to students. Thirty percent of the student body is Greek. It is not in the best interests of all students to discontinue Greek organizations. They provide services, scholarship, and leadership — things that are needed on this campus. And, we are responsible for our members and their well-being.

Bookstore policy is examined

To the Editor:

Each year, I place an order with the University Shop for textbooks through the usual channels. The numbers I request represent my best estimate of the enrollment in my classes.

For many of the courses, the number is accurate to within a few books. In all cases, it is impossible to provide a more accurate figure at the time the orders are due in your office.

This semester, the department of mechanical engineering ordered 85 copies of Shigley and Mitchell for ME 362-3200. There are 74 students enrolled in three sections of the course (six students failed a prerequisite, and two withdrew at mid-semester). However, in my section alone, five students were unable to purchase a text because there were not enough.

My students asked that the book be ordered, but were told that an order would not be placed without a request from me. I did not send such a request, but ordered them directly from the publisher myself. There were several reasons:

1. There were sufficient books requested by me to begin with.

2. A student's word that he needs the book should be sufficient (for you as well as me) to order the book. What is the difference between a student telling you he needs the book and a note telling you that the student said he needs the book?

3. It is an inefficient use of student and faculty time to generate a reorder request. Surely, your shop can keep a list of students requesting the book so that a total number can be determined.

4. A requirement for a faculty reorder request only adds to the time it takes for a student to obtain his text.

5. Three to six weeks are required for books to be restocked by the shop. I can get them shipped to me in a period of seven days, and at a considerable savings.

It is my belief that the primary function of University Shop book ordering is to provide a service to the students who, through their business and tuition, pay both of our salaries. Your job, as mine, is to provide the best service possible within constraints of practicality.

Maintaining an adequate supply of texts and devising a timely reorder scheme should be possible and appropriate for an organization which charges top dollar for its merchandise.

Recycling beneficial

To the Editor:

I am pleased to see increasing concern among those who write letters to the editor about our environment, particularly the recent letters about styrofoam use and littering on campus. Both these letters have one thing in common — trash.

More and more the issue of our waste and where we are going to dump it is commanding attention in the media. Unfortunately, most Americans, not only Villanova students, only think of garbage when it needs to be added to or taken out.

I propose that we at Villanova take a positive approach about the mountains of trash we generate. According to the Pennsylvania department of environmental resources, this alternative will only take five minutes a day. As you may have guessed by now, I am talking about recycling.

Why bother recycling? First, we are running out of places to dispose of our trash. The average Pennsylvanian throws out approximately 3.5 pounds of trash each day. There are fewer than 90 landfills left in Pennsylvania, and more than half of these are expected to reach their limit in the next five years.

Energy supplies are diminishing and their costs are rising. Recycling one ton of aluminum yields a 92 percent energy savings over obtaining the same amount of aluminum from bauxite ore.

Trash disposal costs keep rising. One half of what we throw away is recyclable. Less solid waste means fewer trips to the landfill, and possibly reduced disposal costs.

Natural resources are being depleted. Using recycled materials reduces the drain on virgin materials and decreases our dependence on foreign imports.

Recycling reduces air and water pollution and litter.

Recyclables can be sold for cash.

Although all of these reasons sound good, you still may have your doubts. Let me quell your fears.

Recycling is not hard to do. All it requires is some rinsing of bottles and cans and sorting your trash. Recycling is not time consuming. Recycling does not require special tools. It is not dirty nor does it attract insects. Bottles and cans rinsed and stored for recycling are cleaner to store than trash. It only requires slightly more space than unsorted trash. It does not increase unemployment. Recycling increases jobs and enables those already employed in collecting trash to continue working.

What can you do about recycling? For those of you that can take your glass, aluminum cans and paper to recycling centers, there are two nearby: 301 Iven Ave. (off Lancaster Avenue across from the St. David's Inn) next to the Radnor police station, and 2325 Darby Road next to the Haverford police station. For those of you who live on campus, newsprint items are required to be separated from trash (by local law) and picked up for recycling by housekeeping.

Since Villanova University produces quite a bit of solid waste, I propose that the students organize a recycling center on campus, and save some of the tuition money that we needlessly throw out.

Anyone who is interested in forming a recycling center on campus, please contact me by leaving a message in the biology club mailbox in 115 Mendel Hall. Everyone should begin recycling if you already do not do so.

Many communities across the United States are following this trend as they realize that they cannot just dump trash wherever they please and have it be forgotten about.

Recycling is a good habit to adopt now, for I am sure that in the future, it will become mandatory by law.

This week the Villanovan asked, "Do you think the extensive coverage of the presidential primaries by television is conducive or detrimental to a fair election?"

Television coverage is biased, misleading, and unfair ... unless Jack Kemp wins.

Tim Foley
junior
mechanical engineering

It's conducive to a fair election. The candidates must go it alone ... without prepared statements.

Ken Vorhees graduate student

It's conducive because T.V. is a major part of our lives and it's a great way of receiving info, but it can't all be fair.

Nancy Kwon
junior

I feel that it is detrimental because television can influence the public.

Regina Finn

It is detrimental because the media basically elects the president by portraying false attributes of the presidential candidates.

I believe it can be very detrimental. Many candidates use television as a way solely to downgrade their competitor's reputations.

Sororities give girls a rush

By KAREN IOVINO
Staff Reporter

My friends and I returned from Christmas break with new clothes, New Year's resolutions and great anticipation towards an event that would change our lives here at Villanova. As sophomores, we had decided to go through formal sorority rush.

After spending freshman and half of sophomore year as non-Greeks, we were able to take comfort in the knowledge that, if things did not work out for us, there is a social life here without being a member of a fraternity or sorority. However, the lure of T.G.'s, tailgates, formals and new friendships was strong enough to convince us to take the plunge into sorority life.

Rush began on a Saturday night in January. Each of the 500 girls who were rushing was placed into a group of 15-20 girls, led by a Panhellenic rush counselor, or PRC, (a sorority member who, in order to keep things impartial, was forbidden to reveal which sorority she was in). Each group visited four sororities on the first night and the remaining three on Sunday.

Needless to say, the first night, labeled as "casual dress" by the PRC's, led to outfit after outfit being tried on, and numerous trips into friends' closets until we were ready to proceed to our first round of parties. My friends and I split up into our respective PRC groups, and I, not knowing what to expect, nervously entered by first rush party.

What I found at that first party (as well as all the others) was, thankfully, not at all what I had feared rush would be like. I had fears of being judged on how I looked, what I wore and what I said.

What I discovered instead was a group of girls who were enthusiastic about their sorority, and as eager to get to know the rushees as we were to get to know them. Each party had a different theme, expressed by skits, songs and decorations. To my surprise, the first-round parties actually turned out to be fun, just getting to know the girls and getting a feel for the seven sororities and what they had to offer.

The next day we were to meet our PRC's to find out which sororities had invited us back to the second-round parties on Wednesday. A maximum of five parties could be attended Wednesday. Waiting until 1:30 p.m. when I was supposed to meet my PRC seemed to take forever, but it finally arrived. Happy with the outcome, I waited for Wednesday night and the second round of parties to arrive.

As the week went on, the parties got progressively longer, and waiting to get your invitations back became progressively harder. Emotions of the girls going through rush ranged from incredible happiness to deep despair. Rush was fun, but behind that fun was one common fear: "Will I get a bid from the sorority I like best?"

I had been told by friends who were already Greek that "you'll find the sorority and the girls that you fit in best with. You'll be able to tell where you'll be happiest." At the start of rush, I was very skeptical of that idea. I did not think there was much difference between the seven sororities. But the more parties I attended, the more I realized that each sorority has its own distinct personality, and the interests and unity of the sisters lead you to the group where you will be happiest.

The following Sunday night was the last night of rush, Preference Night. Girls could go to a maximum of two parties. This night took on a much more serious note than the others, focusing more on the tradition and sisterhood of the sororities rather than on the themes of the parties. Preference night parties lasted one hour, provoking fear in me that there would be nothing to talk about for that long. I did not find that to be the case at either party I went to.

At some point in both parties, the sisters spoke personally about their sorority and the friends they had made as a result of it. By the end, I was really touched, and many girls left with tears in their eyes, overwhelmed by the sisterhood that was so obviously apparent.

After the parties that last night, each girl was required to meet with her PRC to put in writing which sorority of the ones she had been to that night was her first choice, and which was her second.

For me, the decision was both easy and difficult at the same time. Though I loved all the girls I met in both sororities, it took a lot of thinking to decide where I would be most happy. In the end I chose the first sorority I had visited on the first night of rush, the one I had a gut feeling about all through the week.

But even with that decision made, my fears were far from over. The following day was bid day, and there was no guarantee that I would get a bid from my first choice (if I got a bid at all!).

The next day I met my PRC with much trepidation, and as it turned out, I did receive a bid from my top choice. I am now pledging a great sorority with 52 other girls and having a great time. With so many people to meet and so much fun to have, how could I go wrong? The experience of formal sorority rush led me to a lifetime sisterhood and the best time here at Villanova.

Jackson Hole gives a run for your money

By MEGAN WHITE
Staff Reporter

Look out Fort Lauderdale — Jackson Hole, Wyo. is about to give you a run for your money. Busch beer, along with the Jackson Hole Ski Corporation, is sponsoring what could be "the most comprehensive spring break package offered for ski buffs."

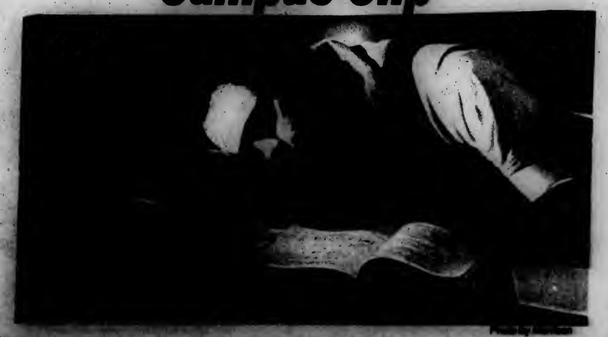
The Busch Spring Rendezvous at Jackson Hole is scheduled for March 14 through 26 in the Teton Mountains. The package includes tons of activities, such as lift tickets, cross country skiing, races for both the beginner and the advanced and a night life to remember.

The Busch Bar & Grill, a heated 5,000 square foot tent, is the place to be if you are not interested in skiing or just taking a mid-day break from the slopes. Barbecues and the other non-ski activities, such as suntanning, volleyball, treasure hunts and live music are available at the bar & grill.

At night, the place lights up with music trivia, air guitar, bands and dance contests.

The Busch Ski Club, a heated tent complete with a sound system, is located on a mountain and will be the headquarters for the ski activities.

Jackson, Wyo., which has an estimated population of 5,000, will be hosting thousands of students during spring break in addition to its regular March ski crowd. "We can handle the extra volume created by the Busch Spring Rendezvous. In all, commented Kris Gullikson, a marketing assistant for the Jackson Hole area Chamber of Commerce, "We're thrilled to get an organized spring break here."



People making the trip to Jackson Hole will enjoy cross country and down hill skiing on 2,500 acres of terrain. Vacationers have a chance at winning CB sports skiwear, Salomon boots and bindings, Pre skis and Carrera glasses and goggles.

Welcome kits, which include complimentary ski-related items and messages urging vacationers to drink responsibly while on their trip, will be given to all. It is part of the T.I.P.S. program that Anheuser-Busch, Inc. brought to Jackson Hole in January. "Training for Intervention Procedures by Servers of Alcohol" teaches waitresses, waiters and bartenders how to respond to potential problem situations.

Special rates will be in service during spring break. A double occupancy room which includes lift tickets, costs $39 a night. A room can be rented without the lift tickets for about $19 a night. The price range depends on the number of occupants in the room and can get as low as $32.50.

For more information, call 215-688-0760, or Harry Baxter at the Jackson Hole Ski Resort, 307-733-2292.

Volunteer night raises consciousness

By IRENE V. LANGRAN
Staff Reporter

On Feb. 18, Villanova Alumnus David Nieskens, returned to Villanova to share with students what can only be described as a very unique experience. He and his wife Amy, represented VESS [Volunteers for Education and Social Service] at the University's annual volunteer night.

The other groups represented that evening in St. Rita's Chapel were Mercy Corps, JVC [Jesuit Volunteer Corps] and JIV [Jesuit International Volunteers].

The evening was organized by Barbara Haenn of Campus Ministry, who spent two years with a volunteer organization in the Appalachian region of the United States.

The purpose of the evening was to show interested students the many opportunities and benefits available in spending a year or more doing some type of volunteer work. Haenn stressed that the organizations present were carefully chosen. She stated that the organizations are concerned with much more than just finding bodies to do the work, what is just as important to these organizations is that the experience is, as Haenn said, "a two-way street ... they're interested in whether this is the right position for you.

One rarely hears of the Villanova students who have dedicated their time and effort in this most complete sense of volunteer work. Yet this path was indeed the one chosen by David Nieskens, a 1981 education major. Nieskens, who has received the State of Pennsylvania's highest award for quality student teaching, spent two years with VESS in San Antonio, Texas.

There he had to learn to live a simple lifestyle, one in which he said he spent "serving someone other than myself." But he, like all the other volunteers of the evening, felt he got more out of Homeward bound for break?

By SUSAN E. CORCORAN
Features Editor

It is that time of the year again. You see a friend or aquaintance in the quad and the typical greeting is heard.

"Hi! How are you? Where are you going for spring break?"

This question always seems to push me off the deep end. "I am going nowhere! I am going home! Is that alright with you?"

This angry, hostile rebuttle usually sends the inquisitor off with a look of confusion.

I am sorry. I can't help it. Why does everyone have to go somewhere for break? I, like many other starving college students, spent too much money at the tavern and King of Prussia to book a flight to a tropical locale for my week off in March. So, instead I will head back to the old homestead.

When I first came to the realization that I would not return in March with a savage tan and my two best friends were going to fry their skins on the Pacific coast, I was extremely bitter, and of course, jealous.

I, too, need some lazy, hazy days in the sun, far from my blue Villanova notebooks and the food at the Pit. Why couldn't I go away and drink Mai-Tais on the beach and turn myself into an undisputed beach bum?

Then I realized it was no one's fault but my own. I didn't save any money, and now I would have to pay the price. I told myself, "Look, you're the idiot who didn't put aside any money. Go home and make the best of it."

So I thought about it. New York, which is where I live, is not such a horrible place to spend a week's vacation. There are a million things to do in the Big Apple: Broadway, the Village, South Street, 5th Avenue. I could have a blast!

My mind is racing now as I think of all the places I have not been in a long time, and all the places I would like to visit. I invited some of my other unfortunate, "vacationless" friends to spend some time at my house so we could all enjoy the wild delights the city has to offer.

So, while my two buddies are tired and cranky from a day in the sun, worrying about prime tanning hours and when the tide will come up, I will be relaxing at a Broadwey play, or perhaps dancing the night away at the Palladium.

So for all of you who will be hitting the highway back home, think about it. It will not be that bad. When all the island-hoppers come back to school in March, we can hold our heads up high and say we, too, had awesome breaks. We may not be tan, but we still had fun! It is not always "better in the Bahamas."

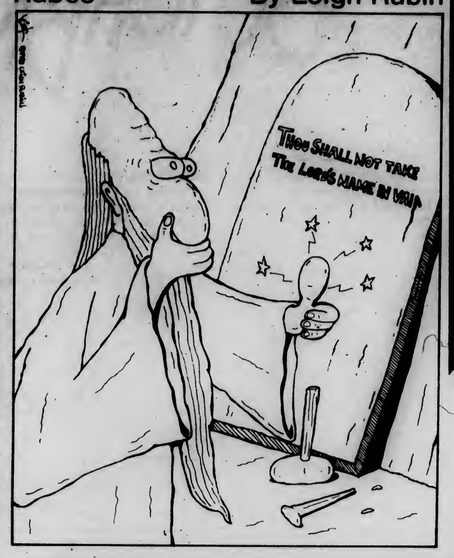
the experience than he put into it.

The most recent Villanova graduate doing such volunteer work is 1987 communication arts major Katherine Dean. Today Dean is working with JVC in San Antonio, TX. She works with children who suffer from domestic violence. Of this work, Haenn said, "If she wasn't doing it, they couldn't fund the position."



JVC was represented at Villanova by Dick Hulseman. Hulseman graduated from Holy Gross in 1981, with a feeling he expressed as a "deep desire to do something to make a difference ... to put a human face on the people who try to survive every day." Hulseman worked in North Philadelphia, but noted JVC does not usually stay in one area because one of their goals is helping people and communities get back on their feet.

Although Villanovans have served in many of these organizations, no Villanovan thus far has volunteered in another country. Bill Rueger, a Saint Joseph's University graduate, spent a year with JIV.

JIV is an organization which promotes a simple lifestyle, social justice, community and spirituality. Rueger developed a sports program, among other things, during his year in the small Central American country of Belize. He is currently teaching at Archbishop Ryan High School, but is anxious to return to such volunteer work. Of the experience he says he gained "a better understanding of myself and other people ... I feel like I gave nothing and gained everything in return."

Hulseman admitted the "lifestyle is no bed of roses, it's hard but it does make a difference." Every representative who came to volunteer night had to agree with Hulseman when he stated, "It is crazy to be committed to the world rather than just be in the world." But it is also an incredibly unique way of growing and it can be "more liberating than limiting."

Advice from BUTCH BAXTER

Once upon a time, in the little seedy city of Slimesville, a baby boy was born into the Baxter fold. His name was Butch — the first and only male child in the family.

Butch grew up in the Slimesville slums, and soon turned to a life of crime, as did most of the other boys in his neighborhood. Yet, Butch was different from the typical delinquent teen. He was much meaner and more ruthless than most.

His parents eventually gave up trying to mold young Butch when he ran over the family cat with his Big Wheel. Butch went from juvenile prison to the state penitentiary as his crimes increased with his age.

One day Butch was sitting in his jail cell, working off a three-year sentence for robbing a nun, when his life took a 180-degree turn. Butch was watching an old Brady Bunch episode when this miraculous transformation took place. It was the episode where Greg Brady pretended he knew how to smoke to impress his friends, only to be embarrassed when they made him take a puff to prove himself.

It was now clear to Butch why his life was so wrong. He had turned to a life of crime only because he felt compelled to in order to fit in with his peers. But now Butch wanted to make a decision without any peer pressure. He decided that, from now on, he would walk a straight line.

Butch also vowed to repay society when he got out of the "big house" by assisting others with his newly acquired insight and keen advice. He recently moved to the Main Line and contacted us here at the Villanova. We decided that Butch had payed his debts to society and deserved a chance to help his fellow man.

So it is our pleasure to introduce a weekly column by this ex-con turned counselor. Introducing Advice from Butch Baxter . . .

Dear Butch,

I purchased a new Onkyo DX-130 three-beam compact disc player with a digital filter and double-over sampling last week, and I am having a bit of trouble with it. It seems the soft loading mechanism takes longer than the required 1.8 seconds to eject the multiple disc tray. What are your thoughts?

Signed,
A Confounded Consumer

Hey Confounded,

Kick it hard with your left foot.

Dear Butch,

I am one very unhappy camper. I wanted desperately to get a bid from a particular sorority, but was turned down. I feel like an outcast of society. Help!

Signed,
Too Big a Geek to be Greek

Hey Geek,

Believe it or not, I know exactly what my poor little camper is going through. Once I was actually fired for having a few too many felonious assault convictions! I, too, felt like an outcast. Just as I was ready to throw in the towel, I received a call that said I got a job with a college security department. So just hang in there, things will get better. By the way, I heard they will be casting for "Revenge of the Nerds, Part III" next month.

Dear Butch,

I am a student who is really low on funds, and trying endlessly to get a part-time job to help me through the semester. There just does not seem to be any jobs on the Main Line for a person with my qualifications. Any ideas?

Signed,
Broke and Bummed

Hey Broke,

Before you give up hope, I may have just the opportunity your looking for. You may not know this, but each spring about 200 men and women are hired to work on project BEMER. Many of the workers are bused in from Philadelphia, and some are actually local college students. Project BEMER is a program, privately funded by the Main Line Car Ornament Beautification League (M.L.C.O.B.L.), which pays less wealthy folks to travel around the Main Line area to service the hood ornaments on BMWs, Mercedes, Porches and the like that are in dire need of dusting or polishing. The pay is not that great, but the personal satisfaction gained by doing this valuable service for underprivileged wealthy snobs in your area is reward enough. To get more information, contact the project's chairman, Biff Witherspoon at 555-YUPI.

Advice from Butch Baxter is a new weekly addition to the Features section of the Villanovan. It is intended for entertainment purposes only. The characters and letters are purely fictitious, and any resemblance to persons living or dead is purely coincidental.

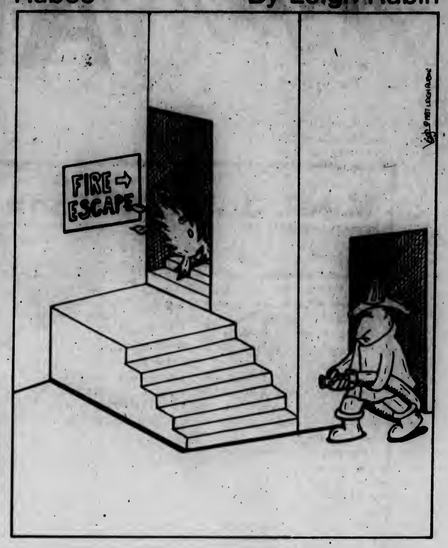
Junior year in college is a time when many students decide to spend a semester or two abroad to take advantage of a unique experience. However, many young adults participating in the communication, fine arts and political science disciplines are choosing not-so-foreign exchanges in New York City.

For its fifth year, Hunter College of the City University of New York system, is offering a valuable learning experience to college juniors from all across the country. While earning credits toward their undergraduate degrees, the students are able to explore the wealth of cultural, ethnic and professional resources that a city like New York can offer. This is called the Cultural Events Program.

A sample syllabus from a typical humanities course resembles an issue of the New York Times arts and leisure section. Regular attendance to theatre, music, film and dance events have become the nucleus of the students' introduction to the artistic and scholarly perspectives surrounding a variety of art forms.

Before attending a performance, a Hunter professor, who is knowledgeable in the field, extensively prepares the students for the particular art form or production that they are about to experience. Following the event is a collective discussion in class.

In addition to the wide range of cultural aspects, the Hunter Junior Year in New York (JYNY) Program complements a junior's usual academics by establishing internships in areas of their individual interests and needs. Each student takes 15 credits per semester (including credits for the internship), for a total of 30 credits for the academic year.



There are literally hundreds of internship possibilities available. Once accepted in the JYNY, a prospective host organization will interview the student to confirm his placement in a program. Some of these opportunities include film assisting in the archives of the International Center of Photography, or other New York-based film companies.

Among the theatre assignments, talent agents, stage managers and designers are included. For those following a communications curriculum, there are assignments to newspapers, magazines and promotion directors in such organizations as Warner Amex, MTV and the Cable News Network.

If any of these experiences interest you cultural fiends, then the JYNY Program is right up your alley. For more information, write to JYNY at Hunter College, New York City, N.Y. The application deadline is in March. The phone number is (212) 772-5004.

For your health . . .

By CINDY LAUER, R.D.
Nutritionist

People of the '80s are more concerned than ever with what they eat and how it will affect their bodies and overall health. We are beginning to recognize the importance that food plays on our minds as well as our bodies.

We eat 1,000 meals a year, spend 1,000 hours eating and spend thousands of dollars on food, which is why we need to be aware of what we are spending these "thousands" on.

National Nutrition Month (NNM) is now celebrated across the country by millions of people. Nineteen eighty-eight marks the 16th annual celebration with, "Choose Good Nutrition — For Today and Tomorrow," as this year's theme. This means that today, you need to be eating healthy, so tomorrow (and 15 years from now) you will still be healthy.

Being overweight is a problem, and heart disease threatens the lives of middle-age America all too often. Undernourished mothers appear to have more problems at childbirth and their offspring are more susceptible to disease than the children of well-nourished mothers. Better nutrition will not cure all these problems, but it is a basic step toward prevention.

As the old saying goes, being bad today, will eventually catch up with the person tomorrow. Eating poorly now will eventually catch up with you in the future.

During the month of March, for NNM, healthy eating will be promoted in Villanova's dining halls. Look for special events and free nutrition information available to you.

The food service department is also offering a free computerized nutritional analysis of your daily food intake.

The analysis will provide students with the numbers of needed calories for frame sizes and recommended daily allowance of all vitamins and minerals. Any deficiencies in diet will be shown, and tips on how to improve the diet will be printed.

Just record an honest 24-hour food intake and drop it off at a box in the dining halls or mail to Cindy Lauer, R.D., Food Service, Dougherty Hall.

If you have any questions regarding nutrition or would like individual counseling pertaining to your diet, please call 645-4194 or 645-4170.

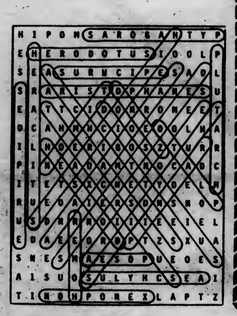
Next year, Wildcat football will face a new and difficult challenge in rising up to compete in Division 1AA, known as the Yankee Conference. Competing against rival teams such as Wake Forest College, our school's football team is likely to need as much support from the student body as is possible.

This raises an interesting question — how do the students of Villanova show support for their team? Think about it. Was dragging a keg to the tailgates the only effort you made to support the team this year?

Of course, maybe you bought tickets for some of this past season's games, but after chugging your tailgate toasts to the team, did you remember to attend the game?



If this brings back memories, the Wildcat Football Club has found a way for you to show school spirit and your support for the team in bringing back none other than football pep rallies.

After 17 years of absence the Villanova football pep rally will stage a rousing comback this year. Modeled after pep rallies staged at major football universities such as Notre Dame, the reintroduction of pep rallies at Villanova for the football team promises to be the most fun students have had while cheering for the team.

With the support of fraternity Sigma Phi Epsilon the villanova Football Club will stage a pep rally the night before every game next season. These rallies will be held inside the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse with a guest speaker and reception afterwards.

This idea has the full support of both alumni and faculty, who will be invited to attend these events. The main goal of Tom Kurke, who has coordinated the effort to bring back pep rallies, is to provide a way for students to show school spirit in supporting the team, as well as offering an opportunity for both the students and the team to get psyched for the games.

The first rally is scheduled for Sept. 2, before the game against Wake Forest, the toughest rival the Wildcats have in the Yankee Conference.

Comic book industry grows up

By ROBERT DUGGAN
Staff Reporter

Saga of the Swamp Thing
by Alan Moore, Stephen Bissette and John Totleben
Warner Books

Through the masterful efforts of writer Alan Moore and artists Stephen Bissette and John Totleben, the comic book has finally come of age in their recently published graphic novel, Saga of the Swamp Thing.

D.C. Comics, the comic company best known for such characters as Superman and Batman, has begun a movement in the mainstream comic industry toward a new level of artistry in their often belittled medium. Where capes and cowls were once the mainstay, a new maturity in writing and visuals has arisen.

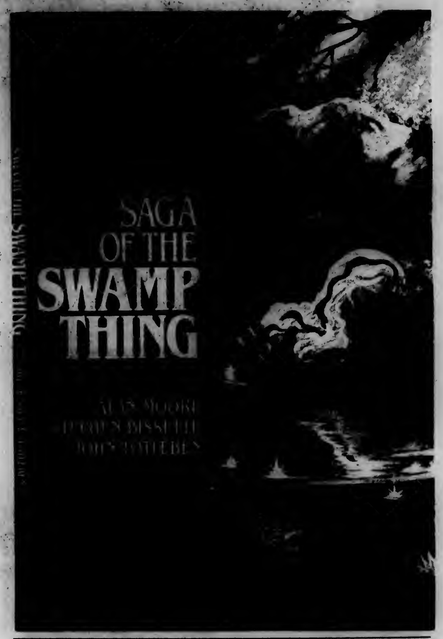
Alan Moore was first asked to revive the struggling Swamp Thing character in 1983. The first seven issues he wrote eventually became this graphic novel. Twice a winner of the British Eagle Award for Best Comics Writer (in 1982 and 1983), Moore has increasingly gained prominence in the comic and horror fields. A recent issue of Rolling Stone categorized him and Clive Barker as the new masters of horror.

The Swamp Thing was first created in 1972 by Len Wein and Berni Wrightson. Their monster was a scientist named Alec Holland, whose lab exploded while he was experimenting with a new bio-restorative formula. The combination of the formula and the botanical life of a nearby swamp transformed Holland into something half-man and half-plant. His quest then became to fully regain his humanity.

Moore picks up the story here. Instead of falling into the conventional scientist-searching-for-a-cure scenario, he has Holland learn that he can never go back, that his humanity died long ago in the explosion. Even though he retains a human-like consciousness, he is only vegetative life.

Moore's vision of terror arises from the savage beauty he sees in nature.

This discovery leads to a deep soul-searching by the creature. Moore probes into the psychology of belonging and identity through the creature as it searches for a substitute for its lost humanity. These yearning passages are almost as beautiful in their tender portrayal of loss as the passages where the creature finds peace in a oneness with nature, a vegetative nirvana. The poetry of these visions of Moore shows just how far the comic medium has come.



The Swamp Thing's bliss is disturbed when another scientist-turned-plant-life named Jason Woodrue tunes into the vegetative consciousness through the Swamp Thing and uses it against mankind. When the creature makes Woodrue realize that nature depends on man just as man depends on nature, Woodrue is cast also into aloneness, not only from man but, now, also from nature. It is a great commentary on the alienation of the 20th century in relation to the modern cult of power.

This major story is followed by a shorter tale of the occult, featuring an embodiment of fear in the shape of a white monkey. Moore once again shows great psychological insight in this examination of fear, particularly the fear of children.

Moore's vision of terror arises from the savage beauty he sees in nature. The swamp itself comes alive and "dreams while tiny predators stage a nightmare ballet in the sharp black grass." He mixes both worldly and otherworldly beauty and horror into a world that is somehow both nightmarish and reassuring at the same time.

Even without Moore's prose, the visuals of Bissette and Totleben would convey just as much this balance of harmony and dissonance. The intricate lines in the nature scenes show the mastery of these artists. The drama Moore creates through his prose is matched perfectly through their visuals, perhaps better than even film is capable of.

"I used to think I knew from fear ... I didn't," said one of Moore's characters. "All I knew were the suburbs of fear and now here I am, in the big city." Moore, Bissette and Totleben have not only come to the big city of horror, but have also brought the comic book industry along with them. For everyone who grew up reading comics and then forgot them, Saga of the Swamp Thing is the perfect reunion now that the medium itself has finally grown up.

'She's Having a Baby' fails to deliver

By DINA INNELLA
Staff Reporter

"She's Having a Baby" directed by John Hughes
Paramount Pictures
½

When a young couple gets married, they tend to grow up a little. They also learn more about each other and more about life. This theme is the basic premise of "She's Having a Baby." As the marriage of Jake Briggs (Kevin Bacon) and Kristy Briggs (Elizabeth McGovern) progresses, we see their trials and tribulations. They both learn from each other as they go through their first five years of marriage.

Bacon plays the yuppie husband Jake Briggs, and through his eyes, the movie develops. All of Briggs' thoughts, fears and paranoia are seen. Whenever he has a thought or a dream, it is acted out as if it were real. This is very creative, but often confusing as to what is real and what is imaginary. After a few of these antics, the movie frequently becomes tiresome and slow moving.

Bacon is enjoyable and very believable in his part. He plays the typical young husband, eager to please his wife in every way. Bacon grows with his role as his character grows up.

Elizabeth McGovern plays Kristy Briggs, the faithful and doting wife. She seems to be the same throughout the whole film. She puts all of herself into the part, but her character is minor compared to that of Bacon's. Although it could have been played by any young actress, McGovern individualizes the part and makes it her own. It would have been interesting to see more of her thoughts and ideas portrayed.

John Hughes is the writer, director and producer of "She's Having a Baby." Hughes is known for his better-than-the-norm teen films such as "Pretty in Pink," "Sixteen Candles" and "The Breakfast Club." But he also made the movie, "Planes, Trains and Automobiles," a more adult-centered comedy. With "She's Having a Baby," Hughes continues his new found tradition of adult-centered comedies.

The promise, unlike what the title denotes, is not just about having a baby. It is, rather, a portrayal of a marriage in a growing process.

"She's Having a Baby" has its funny moments. Hughes' treatment of suburbia, in-laws and expectant fathers is hysterical. Many scenes are true to life and Hughes satirizes them well. Other scenes are predictable and dull, using the Hollywood approach.

The best part of the entire movie is the music. Customarily, Hughes makes sure that the soundtrack of his movie is the best. Stewart Copeland of the Police wrote the score. Performers on the sound track include Kate Bush, Love and Rockets and Gene Loves Jezebel. The music helps move the film along and makes it more enjoyable to watch.

"She's Having a Baby" proves to be enjoyable and somewhat experimental. The premise, unlike what the title denotes, is not just about having a baby. It is, rather, a portrayal of a marriage in a growing process.

Hollywood is written all over this movie. Hughes dares to be a little different, but could not stay away from the Hollywood image.

"She's Having a Baby" is disappointing in that respect. The movie is well written and has an excellent soundtrack. It probably will do well at the box office, but it will never be critically acclaimed for its style and content.

"Ironweed"
directed by Hector Babenco

"He's my pal, he's my pal, he's my pal," croons a worn-out Meryl Streep to a room full of wealthy, well-dressed people down at the local bar. She's dedicated the tune to her own best pal Jack Nicholson, whose appearance is similarly disheveled. The two have been through a great deal of battles and bottles between them in the past nine years, and a comfortable arrangement has come out of it.

Theirs is the story of so many of our country's hopefuls turned vagrants. He is a former ballplayer and family man, she is a onetime singer; together they now roam the streets in search of a warm place to sleep, or a warm bottle to soothe their souls.

This is the setting of Hector Babenco's "Ironweed," a story about the trials and ironies of life, about the character and nobility of one man in the face of personal tragedy. That one man is Francis Phelan, portrayed with on-target execution by Jack Nicholson in a role that has recently garnered him an Academy Award nomination. Francis has become a man that most of us turn away from in fear and disgust, that we avoid at all costs by crossing to the other side of the street. His dress is old and worn, his appearance slovenly. The tattered coat hanging off his shoulders reeks of last night's bottle, and his eyes are glazed and vacant.

By Fran's side stands Helen Archer, played by Meryl Streep, whose talent as a singer is just one of many long-gone, long-abandoned experiences. She has been with Fran through the worst of the Depression, sharing the small amount of laughter and love that only he can give.

There are many men and women who share the street with Fran and Helen, and one in particular chooses to follow Fran around

Meryl Streep is hardly this glamorous as Helen, a street person in "Ironweed."

Every top television series eventually is cancelled — it is unavoidable. But NBC's Saturday Night Live keeps on disproving this theory. Now in its 13th season, "SNL" is a revitalized show that promises to continue for years to come.

Saturday Night Live is the comedy/satire program, which, over the years, has produced many top movie stars, such as Chevy Chase, Bill Murray and Eddie Murphy. It first tempted fate eight years ago when the entire original cast and producer Lorne Michaels departed the show, leaving it in the hands of a new producer and a cast of unknowns. After a year of floundering, the show hired producer Dick Ebersol, and comedians Eddie Murphy and Joe Piscopo soon followed. Although the supporting cast was weak, the Murphy-Piscopo tandem had the stellar qualities that could draw a large audience.

Three years and many memorable characters later, Murphy and Piscopo left "SNL" to pursue film careers, as Murray and Chase had done before them. Just when everyone was saying that the show was dead, Ebersol brought Billy Crystal and Martin Short on board and once again, SNL depended on the talents of two stars who were standouts, especially Short, who played the hyperactive Ed Grimmley. But this incarnation of the show was short-lived; Crystal and Short left after only one year, and Ebersol also departed.

NBC hired back original producer Lorne Michaels to save the show. Michael's new cast, which included Anthony Michael Hall and Robert Downey, failed miserably and the ratings dropped like a lead balloon.

One the verge of cancellation, SNL pulled off its most spectacular comeback. Michaels fired most of the cast, keeping only Jon Lovitz, Dennis Miller and Nora Dunn. Dana Carvey, Phil Hartman, Jan Hooks, Victoria Jackson and Kevin Nealon were added to round out the cast, and the current version of SNL was born.

This happened about a year and one-half ago, and the new Saturday Night Live rivals the original version in terms of both cast and writing. Unlike the Murphy-Piscopo and Crystal-Short days, the current show does not rely solely on a few players; instead, all the actors are talented and add to the show.

The cast members have created many new, funny characters who appear just enough so the audience does not tire of them. Carvey plays the sanctimonious Church Lady; Kevin Nealon plays Subliminal Man, who gets what he wants through subliminal speech; and Lovitz portrays the devil, a pathological liar, and a conceited actor who calls himself "Master Thespian." Dennis Miller is reminiscent of Chevy Chase with his arrogant "Weekend Update" newscaster.

Unlike the Murphy-Piscopo and Crystal-Short days, the current show does not rely solely on a few players; instead, all the actors are talented and add to the show.

For the first time since Jane Curtin and Gilda Radner, the SNL ladies rival their male counterparts. Nora Dunn is the most noteworthy; she plays characters ranging from insipid talk show hostess Pat Stevens, to Corazon Aquino, to one-half of the lounge-singing Sweeney Sisters (the other half is Jan Hooks). Victoria Jackson also does well, portraying an airhead who is the favorite target of Carvey's Church Lady. In addition to presenting these characters, the SNL crew has managed to bring back the kind of biting political satire that has not been part of the show since the old days. This was never more evident than in the episodes which aired several weeks ago.

The show presented parodies of the Republican and Democratic presidential debates, and the result was hilarious. Alumnus Dan Aykroyd made a special appearance as Bob Dole, and was great. Little-seen writer Al Franken did a surprisingly accurate impression of the gawky Paul Simon one week, and was even better as Pat Robertson the next. Nora Dunn as Pat Schroeder and Dana Carvey as George Bush were equally impressive. The skits were pulled off beautifully and really gave the cast a chance to shine.

Outstanding skits like these are going to establish an identity for the new Saturday Night Live. If you have not looked at the show for a while, tune in one of these days. It is almost a good enough reason to get home early on Saturday nights.

SHORT TAKES: On the heels of the Oscar nominations come the nominations for the Razzies, which are awarded the night before the Oscars and recognize Hollywood's worst. This year's nominees include the movies "Leonard Part 6" and "Ishtar;" actress Madonna ("Who's that Girl") and actors Bill Cosby ("Leonard"), Judd Nelson ("From the Hip") and Bruce the Shark from "Jaws: The Revenge."

town faithfully. As fellow vagrant and friend Rudy, Tom Waits provides the vision of Fran's inevitable fate, should he continue to look blindly into the face of the cruel forces of nature. Rudy is a young man, perhaps in his late thirties or early forties, and he is dying of lung cancer. When he tells Fran that he has only six months to live, Fran sarcastically comments that he, meaning Rudy, is already dead.

The truth is that Rudy is already dead, as are Helen, Fran and every vagrant on the New York street. But even they are not alone; it is 1938, the end of the depression, and nearly every American is feeling the effects of nine years of pain and suffering, of scrimping and saving. Nearly every American is emotionally and spiritually dead, or at least seriously wounded.

Certainly, one would not want to convey the impression that the entire film is depressing and rich with the woes of the downtrodden. There is hope in Fran's family, in his wife from the past, in his son and daughter who desperately want him back. Babenco leaves us with some hope of Fran's salvation, as seen through the eyes of his grandson, whom he meets just once on a rare trip home. Most importantly, the viewer is left with the feeling that all was not lost in the depression, that many men and women thrived and prospered in the face of economic poverty.

Technically, the film is very well done. The makeup necessary to transform Streep and Nicholson into vagrants was certainly impressive, if not entirely convincing in Streep's case. She is simply too beautiful; no one could believe her to be worn and battered, as Helen definitely was. Nicholson and Streep both did a superb job in creating the personalities of Fran and Helen, playing off each others' leads, and timing every line just right. The lighting helped to convey the sense of doom and gloom that the late nights of the streetpeople brought to New York during the depression.

"Ironweed" tells the tale of so many men and women who have lost hope in the world and confidence in themselves, that it is difficult to neglect. And even more difficult to neglect is the knowledge that many more lost men and women will join them in the streets every day.

KNIGHT ORC ½ FIREBIRD C64/128, AMIGA, ST, AP, MAC, IBM

Knight Orc is a graphic adventure that uses high level commands and incredible graphics to present the story of one orc and his quest to regain what mankind has taken away from him. You are that orc, named Grindleguts, and you must travel through three adventures in Knight Orc: Loosed Orc, A Kind of Magic and Hordes of the Mountain King.

Knight Orc is primarily a text adventure with overlaid pictures. The strength of the game lies in the special commands like FOLLOW, RUN TO, GO TO and FIND which allow instant travel to locations and access to objects. The goal of the first game is to tie a rope long enough to reach across a chasm. The goal of the other two are to learn spells, assemble a group of orc followers and escape. Also included in the game package are a novella that acts as copy protection and map.

CARD SHARKS  ACCOLADE C64/128

Card Sharks is a collection of card games that differs from others in that the graphics include a choice of opponents and the opponents have cartoon bubbles and can make comments. The card games to choose from are: Hearts, Blackjack and Poker (Five Card Draw, Seven Card Stud and Texas Hold 'Em). All rules for the card games are explained in the manual and the game play is easy to pick up.

Even more unusual in Card Sharks are the opponents. There are six: Luigi, Milton, Lady Vanderbilt, Ronald Reagan, Margaret Thatcher and Gorbachev (complete with birthmark). The last three are, of course, the best and some of the comments are pretty interesting. Regardless of opponent selection, the three card games in Card Sharks are well-designed and give new life to these classic games. Try playing poker with Ronnie, Maggie and Gorbachev. They might beat you!

PHANTASIE III ½ STRATEGIC SIMULATIONS, INC. C64/128, AMIGA, AP, ST

Phantasie III: The Wrath of Nikademus is the sequel to Phantasie and Phantasie II, but also the final confrontation between your band of six and the Dark Lord Nikademus. You can use characters from the first two games to complete Phantasie III. This is the toughest of the three and there are a lot more things to do.

This role-playing game has a lot of new features that enhance the Phantasie game system. Improved combat options, more monsters, more spells, better movement commands and inclusion of other planes of reality are just a few. In this third installation, you must stop Nikademus' plan to take over the world. There are many twists and turns in the plot of Phantasie III, leaving nothing to be desired. Character statistics are visible on the screen in the wilderness to help in your adventure. The graphics are better than ever before.

GEOPUBLISH  BERKELEY SOFTWORKS C64/128

The latest addition to the GEOS system, geoPublish allows full desktop publishing of newsletters, bulletins and flyers. The program has two modes in which you can work: Page Layout mode and Page Graphics mode. In Page Layout mode, you bring together all of the text and set up the pages to look the way you want them to be printed. In Page Graphics mode, a draw program with special text capabilities takes care of graphics for the project.

In addition to the two modes of working, geoPublish has a lot of features that make it worthwhile for the Commodore computer owner. You can center, crop and scale pictures. Lines can be drawn in multiple widths and patterns. Pages can be viewed in full or in parts. Also, text from other word processors can be incorporated into geoPublish. Finally, geoPublish supports the Apple LaserWriter laser printer.

THE KING OF CHICAGO *½ CINEMAWARE, AMIGA, ST. MAC

You star as Pinky Callahan in this gangster game that takes place in the '30s. Al Capone is in jail and his seat as the kingpin of Chicago's mobs is up for grabs. Standing in your way are Ben and the Old Man, whom you must overtake to gain the leadership. Other characters include Lola, Bull, Tom Malone, Peepers, Tony Santucci, Guido and Jake. All are important in the game and, as Callahan, you must learn how to deal with them.

The King of Chicago uses superb graphics and a game system based entirely on the mouse — no typing is necessary. This game is large and will take a while to complete. The manual included with the game gives a historical background to gangsters, as well as a cinematic treatment of them. The battles for the kingship are many in this game, but if you stay tough, you will win.

THE TRAIN ½ ACCOLADE C64/128

The Train puts you in command of a WWII locomotive that contains all of the plundered art of France, originally headed for Berlin and Hitler. As a member of the Allied Forces, you must capture the train, a station to replenish coal and water and control the train all the way to Normandy. Only then will the art be safe from Hitler's hands. The Germans launch attack upon attack on the train with brutality typical of their fighting.

The graphics are actually pretty good in The Train. Do not expect a lot of time to examine them, for the battle that you will fight is a long one. Keeping the coal furnace full is your primary objective, as well as avoiding German fighter planes and other vehicles of destruction. The Train is a strong challenge that will occupy the average player for a while with its uphill war.

For what it's worth. . . commentary

By MICHAEL AIMETTE AND BILL CARR
Staff Reporters

"This album does not deal with the conventional problems of so-called 'real life' ..." said Robyn Hitchcock in the liner notes of his latest album, Globe of Frogs. Truly, Hitchcock's explanation proves quite accurate as he and his part-time band, the Egyptians, whip through 10 new songs of absurdly unorthodox music, while maintaining the undeniable catchiness prevalent in his first five albums.

"So who is Robyn Hitchcock?" you may be asking. Well, readers, he is currently topping the college charts and has recruited the talents of Peter Buck (R.E.M.) and Glenn Tilbrook (Squeeze) to lend a hand for this latest effort — obviously someone is listening to this guy. The first single, "Balloon Man," is the definition of pop (sorry, George Michael); there are few songs that have been released this year as catchy as this.

Also, Hitchcock's propensity towards curious, sometimes freakish, song titles is sustained with "Tropical Flesh Mandala," "Sleeping With Your Devil Mask" and "Flesh Number One." Clearly, we are dealing with a strange man writing strange songs with strange lyrics for anyone craving brilliant pop music. Hitchcock's concluding invitation, "... loosen your spine, bury your television, and welcome to a Globe of Frogs," is a proposition difficult to refuse.

Epic Records had originally projected that Michael Jackson's latest album Bad would sell 100 million copies and thus, eclipse the record-breaking sales of his previous Thriller LP. After approximately 20 weeks on the charts though, Bad has sold only — and one must use words like "only" when dealing with Michael Jackson — 4 million copies and is no longer in the top 10.

Why is Jackson not drawing the same response this time around? You could start by noticing that Thriller was simply a better album than Bad. Then, you could easily criticize anyone who has the gall or insensibility to predict that any album could possibly sell 100 million copies.

Finally, some of the blame has to fall on Jackson himself. First, he waited too long between albums to fully capitalize on his popularity. Secondly, he just became too bizarre for the public to handle. He garnered much negative publicity for his strange hobbies, his latest adventure with plastic surgery — producing allegations that he and Janet were the same person, and his general aloofness and social ineptitude (he prefers the company of animals to that of humans).

Surprise! Bruce Springsteen has finally made an album, Tunnel of Love, that measures up to his substantial talent. This time around, he sacrifices the predictable arena-rock anthems of Born In The U.S.A. for the sublety and thoughtfulness of Nebraska; yet his latest contains stronger material than its acoustically-oriented predecessor. Although the album is far riskier in terms of commerciality for Springsteen, these provocative songs are perhaps his best to date.

Springsteen's tour has just begun this week, and the Boss has recently revealed his intention to play only songs from his first four albums and Tunnel of Love. This tour should compare favorably to his normally bombastic (and excruciatingly long) live sets.

Paul McCartney has a new album in the works. Elvis Costello and Johnny Marr, former Smiths and new Pretenders guitarist, lend a hand and will, hopefully, help McCartney out of his wimpy musical rut ... Robert Plant's new release, Now And Zen, contains digital samplings from old Led Zeppelin songs, including "Whole Lotta Love" and "Rock And Roll." His former bandmate, Jimmy Page, contributes on two tracks also. Plant, sick of Zeppelin ripoffs (Whitesnake, maybe??) plans to revive the original by performing old Led Zeppelin classics in concert ... Look for new albums by Bob Dylan, The Waterboys and Scruffy the Cat in your record store soon, while new albums by Prince and Talking Heads are still in the works. More on those albums in later issues ...

Chung Sing offers inexpensive dining

By THERESA JONES
Staff Reporter

My friend and I were planning an evening meal at Chung Sing Chinese Restaurant, but as we were discussing what time to go, as well as how long it had been since we had indulged ourselves in delicious cuisine, we realized we were already hungry. So why not go for a late lunch instead?

The outward appearance of an old silver boxcar diner was soon forgotten when we were greeted with the traditional bright red decor, oriental art and music and the wonderful aroma of sweet and sour.

The luncheon menu offers the full range of expected cuisine, from the hot and spicy Szechuan and Hunan, to sweet and sour, with various meats, seafood and vegetables. My friend and I opted for combination platters, which include choice of entree, fried rice and egg roll, all for a very reasonable price.

While waiting for my dumpling soup, my friend and I studied our placemats which describe the Chinese Zodiac and give clues to your character, and that of your most compatible mates, according to the year you were born. At the same time we were devouring the fried noodles and sweet sauce that come complimentary with the tea.

The dumpling soup was a new experience for me in Chinese cuisine, and not one I am likely to repeat. I much prefer the egg drop or vegetable soups. While the dumplings themselves were tasty, the broth was a bit salty for my taste.

Before our orders arrived, I saw other patrons being served what looked to be delicious meals, so I was anticipating my sweet and sour shrimp even more. I must admit that I was somewhat disappointed. The sauce was too heavy, as was the tempura batter, and this was the one instance where I questioned whether all of the cooking really is done on the premises.

My friend and I opted for combination platters, which include choice of entree, fried rice and egg roll, all for a very reasonable price.

On the brighter side, my friend's pepper steak looked, and reportedly tasted, quite good. We were both compelled to comment on the egg rolls, for they were large, fresh and very good.

Chung Sing does not specialize in atmosphere. Nor are they out to win any awards for five-star service, so if you are looking for an elegant evening meal Oriental style, I would not recommend this particular spot. But if you want quick, inexpensive authentic taste of chow mein, lo mein, or moo goo gai pan, the trip to Wynnewood would be worth your time. Chung Sing is easy to find, located on Lancaster Avenue, next to the Super Fresh shopping plaza, and is open seven days a week.

Chung Sing also offers their complete menu, from soups and dried noodles to fortune cookies, for takeout. A number of people have apparently discovered this Chinese treasure, for we saw a steady stream of takeout customers coming in and being served quickly — something to remember if you are ever hungry for Hunan and need a quick fix.

My favorite part of a Chinese meal is always the fortune cookie. "The current year will bring you much happiness," read my message. It may also very well bring me back to Chung Sing.

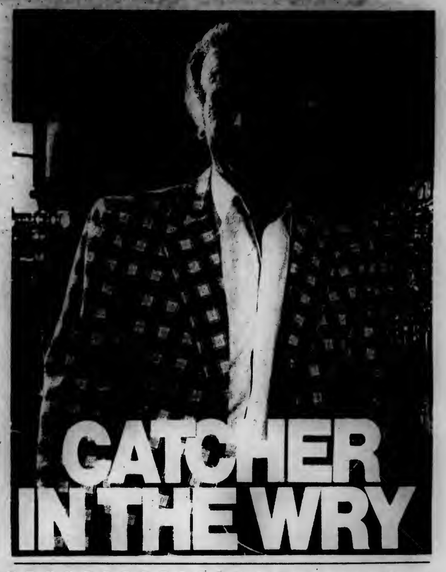
'Catcher In The Wry' called out on strikes

By ALLEN AMBROSINO
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Even if you do not know much about sports, you have probably heard the name Bob Uecker or have seen him on television over the past few years. He is one of the celebrities that is included in all of the Miller Lite Beer commercials shown throughout the United States. You would think that Uecker became famous by excelling during his baseball career, but nothing could be farther from the truth. Actually, he is probably one of the only people who has been able to take an unsuccessful sports career and turn it into fame and fortune.

Uecker is considered by many as one of the worst baseball players ever to play on the major league level. He played for six uneventful years, batting a pathetic .200, without ever hitting a triple or even stealing a base. However, his off-beat sense of humor and articulate manner caused his name to become a household word. During his career, his outlook on baseball was both colorful and humorous.

He makes fun of many of his teammates and opposing players, but the person that he jokes about the most is himself. From his poor hitting to his lack of foot speed, he makes people wonder how he ever made his high school baseball team. However, Uecker's spirit and determination are what allowed him to make it to the "big time" and he is grateful for his chance.



After seeing Uecker's commercials and listening to his broadcasts, you would think that Catcher In The Wry would be comprised of one hilarious antedote after another. Unfortunately, much of the time the book is very boring and dry. Many of Uecker's attempts at humor are unsuccessful, such as the jokes about his fan club and his comments on today's Little League.

Even though Catcher In The Wry has several weaknesses, there are also quite a few parts that deserve special recognition. When Uecker made up his own special all-star team, his humor was apparent as he critiqued each of the players. The shortstop, Ruben Amaro, was selected because he is the only player that Uecker knows that was drafted by both the American and Mexican armies. Superstar Roberto Clemente earned his spot when he said, "I feel better when I am sick."

He was also very impressive when he had the insight to list the 14 events that are guaranteed to happen every spring before baseball's regular season begins. For example, the worst hitter in the league will say that he is going to be more patient and wait for his pitch this year. Uecker knew about this better than anyone because he was this person for the six years that he played.

Uecker also exposed that Howard Cosell, a fellow broadcaster, thought that he was worse at broadcasting than he was at playing baseball. When he had a roast thrown in his honor, Cosell sent a tape telling him to retire. It was supposed to be a joke, but everyone knew of Cosell's hatred for athletes-turned-announcers and felt he was serious.

Once again, Uecker's sense of humor and ability to laugh at himself enabled him to shake off Cosell's comments and treat them as though they were a joke. The reason his life has been so exciting and made him extremely happy is that he does not take himself seriously. Uecker has the gift of making people laugh, whether it be on the baseball field or from the broadcaster's booth. However, I hope that his book writing career has ended so he can concentrate on the things that made him such a popular figure in America.

'School Daze' fails to make the grade

By VICKI DiSTEFANO
Staff Reporter

"School Daze" directed by Spike Lee
Columbia Pictures
½

"School Daze," a film being promoted as a "comedy with music," is an innovative movie with a social conscience. This differentiates it from cinema's current trends. Guys with guns, ladies having babies and dance romances are the supposedly new themes, which have been overused since motion pictures first acquired sound.

The producer, writer and director of "School Daze" is Spike Lee, who also has a starring role. "School Daze," Lee's second film, showcases his multifaceted cinematic talent, but proves the old adage of the problem of having too much of a good thing. The combination of too many creative concepts overloads the movie's circuits. The resultant product is too lengthy and frequently disjointed. Blame is due in part to the editing of the film from two and one-half hours to two, and it can still afford to shed another half hour. The introductory sequences of any film are crucial for audience comprehension, but the beginning scenes of "School Daze" are tedious enough to send viewers to the popcorn counter en masse.

Mission, a predominantly black university, is the symbolic setting for racism among the black community. Two student groups are in constant opposition because of conflicting ideals. The Gamma fraternity is comprised of light-skinned yuppies who are united by common values of materialism and exclusivity. Other students join the Gammas in conforming to Western standards of beauty by straightening and dyeing their hair and wearing blue contact lenses. The darker skinned students refer to them as "Wannabes," short for "wannabe white."

The Gammas are equally resentful of their dark counterparts, who sport African influenced natural appearances. The Gammas disdainfully label them "Jigs," in abbreviation of a racial epithet. The "Jigs" are politicos who strive for brotherhood rather than fraternity. Greek initiation rites strike them as dehumanizing, almost as degrading as Mission's refusal to divest South African funds.

During Homecoming weekend, a showdown takes place between the two factions. An outspoken senior militating against racism symbolizes Mission's conscience. The young man, Dap Dunlap, heads anti-apartheid demonstrations and rails against the black racism which is perpetuated on campus by the coeds who eschew their heritage and pursue a Caucasian resemblance.

The most prominent of those "Wannabe" students is Julian Eaves, the president of the Gamma fraternity. Julian holds Dap's politics in contempt without realizing that his fraternity's light-skin exclusivity is a hypocritical form of black racism.

Initially, the clashing viewpoints are challenged in a dispute between Dap and Julian's girlfriends, Rachel and Jane. Their friends join the feud which instantaneously metamorphoses into a surreal and energetic production number, "Straight and Nappy," about the symbolism of black hair.

Spontaneous musical numbers periodically explode on screen to resolve conflicts and issues which polarize the black community. Lee's father Bill Lee is responsible for the infectious score which rescues portions of the movie from the abysmal black hole of boredom.

"School Daze" addresses its more serious social concerns in tension-filled confrontations and debates between the enemy factions of Dap and Julian. Larry Fishburne and Giancarlo Esposito's respective portrayals of Dap and Julian are impeccable in projecting the angry young man and the class-A narcissist.

Kyme plays the role of Rachel convincingly, if not sentimentally, imparting integrity to the character. The part of Jane is effectively performed by Tisha Campbell. Her fiery Miss Clairol mane and emerald eyes identify her as the epitome of the "Wannabe" prototype. Vanessa Williams was originally offered the role of Jane but declined due to "School Daze's" controversial themes which provoked debate even before its release.

Lee chooses to close the movie with an idealistic ending rife with symbolism. The intention is to impart a message with lasting impact, but the lack of realistic effort on the part of the characters diminished its effectiveness and credibility.

Collegiate escapades provide comic relief and more incarnations of Lee's perceptive humor. Portions of the film which expose ridiculous fraternity hazing techniques draw laughter by lampooning the entire Greek system. Gamma pledge Half-Pint, Lee's character, is the ultimate loser. Half-Pint and his pledge class must publicly perform asinine Gamma chants, wear humiliating space suits and comply with the outlandish requests of the fraternity brothers in order to qualify for initiation.

But these subplots detract from the movie. Overall, the movie is uneven because of the presence of redundant scenes and rapid sequences which vie for domination with the quality sections. Lee is undisputably gifted but would have been wise to have organized his footage into two short, ambitious movies instead of one which wears out its welcome.

Villanova's wrestling team finished the 1988 season with a 34-6 loss to Army.

Wrestlers fall to Orange

By MONICA BYRNE
Staff Reporter

The Villanova wrestling team finished its regular season on Feb. 19, with a dual meet against Syracuse and Army. 'Nova was defeated in both matches, falling 25-14 to Syracuse and 34-6 to Army, who is ranked No. 24 in the country.

After increasing the level and number of their competitors, the Cats improved the 3-10 final record held last year to 5-12 this year.

Considering the many injuries which the wrestlers encountered during the season, they also faced much older and more experienced opponents. Head Coach John E. duPont feels that his team wrestled "very well and did a tremendous job this season despite its youth."

Speaking in reference to the Syracuse and Army meet, duPont said the Cats "went up against primarily junior and senior teams and wrestled very well." Freshman Lyndon Campbell and Tom Rogers posted wins at 134 pounds and 177 pounds, respectively. Freshman Chris Buonopane (158 pounds) beat his Syracuse opponent and freshman Ted Thormodsgaard tied his at 5-5.

Throughout the season, certain individuals have given very solid performances. Campbell currently leads 'Nova with an impressive 22-1-2 record. Greg Allessi stands firm at 15-7 at 118/126 pounds with fingers at 15-5 at his weight.

In addition, Thormodsgaard holds a very fine 14-7-1 record.

Looking ahead, duPont was reserved in making any predictions or assumptions about the Eastern Regionals coming up on March 5-6 at Edinboro State University, but was pleased to say that his team is "learning and wrestling well." He added that, "The program will take a couple of years to build, but give us a few years and we'll be a power to be reckoned with."

Mat Cat coach resigns

By WAYNE CRESSKILL
Staff Reporter

Head wrestling coach John E. duPont announced on Feb. 23 the resignation of assistant coach Mark Schultz.

Schultz, who has been an assistant to duPont since the initiation of Villanova's wrestling program a year ago, is leaving to concentrate on preparation for the 1988 Olympic Games in Seoul, South Korea, in September.

Schultz looks to defend the Gold Medal he claimed at the 1984 Games in Los Angeles and hopes to become the first wrestler in U.S. history to win four world titles (1984 Olympics, 1985 and 1987).

a tenacious full-court pressure defense that produced 13 steals and several easy transition baskets.

"Their best guard (Kathy O'Reilly) was not playing, so we felt we should really pressure them," commented Perretta. "The three seniors played really well, too. There was no reason to keep them in the game once we were up 20."

One player who helped put the game out of reach was junior guard/forward Diane Decker. Upon checking into the game midway through the first half, she provided instant offense with three quick field goals.

"When Diane Decker plays like that, we're a much better team. We need her to score like that to win," said Perretta.

Decker finished with 16 points, tied with Angelotti for the game high. Pasik scored 10, followed by Banfield with eight and Helen Koskinen with seven.

Angelotti

They had so much more talent than we did, but we went out and held our own. We were behind for the majority of the game, but came back and ended up winning by one in overtime. They took a shot at the buzzer which hit every part of the rim and finally bounced out, giving us a highly-emotional and hard-earned victory.

Villanovan: What made you choose Villanova?

Angelotti: Considering how family-oriented I am, the main reason I chose Villanova was because of its location. I also chose Villanova because of its great nursing program. I couldn't have picked a better school in that respect. My teachers and the dean have come to a lot of the games and really supported me here during my career. Naturally, the basketball program was another attraction. Villanova was just a perfect situation for me.

Villanovan: What are your plans when you graduate — have you considered pursuing basketball any further?

Angelotti: I'm open to possibly playing ball overseas, but as of now my plans are to start my nursing career and work somewhere in the Philadelphia area, whether it be a children's, state or local hospital.

14 points while Bekkedam grabbed seven boards. Outside, West scored 18 points.

Villanova played well on defense as they did on offense. The Cats held heralded guard Michael Anderson in check for most of the game. After Plansky drew a charge on Anderson in the first minute of the game Anderson proceeded to commit three more fouls in the first half.

Drexel coach Eddie Burke later said, "We wanted to turn Michael loose but the first play of the game nullified that."

The numerous fouls were called both ways. Villanova was charged with 32 fouls while Drexel committed 31.

"The officiating was questionable at best," commented Plansky.

The Cats now hold an 18-9 record with three games left in the regular season. They will travel north to battle Seton Hall on Saturday and Syracuse on Tuesday to finish up their Big East schedule.

Doug West scored a team-high 21 points against Providence and added 18 in 'Nova's 90-73 victory over Drexel.

Senior star reflects on career

By MICHAEL E. JONES
Staff Reporter

When all-world center Shelly Pennefather became a casualty to graduation last year, people did not expect the women's basketball team to do much this year. Anxious to disprove their critics, the Cats came out clawing and are wrapping up a splendid season, where they are currently 19-6, and 10-4 in the Big East.

Much of this success can be attributed to senior Lisa Angelotti, who played in the shadow of Pennefather her first three years. Angelotti, who is a nursing major and resides in Woodbury, NJ, is having a magnificent season, leading the team in scoring and rebounding, as well as moving into fourth place on the all-time Wildcat scoring list with 1,542 points.

She is third on the Wildcat rebounding list with 821 career boards, and had a career high 36 points against Boston College this season.

Recently, the Villanovan interviewed Angelotti about this season, her career as a Wildcat and her plans for the future.

Villanovan: After last year's graduation casualties, most people wrote you off as a team, but judging from your record, you have obviously proven them wrong. How did you put together such a fantastic season as a team, considering the relative youth and inexperience of the squad?

Angelotti: The fact that nobody expected us to do anything highly motivated us to come out and prove everyone wrong. We knew we would have some big shoes to fill — when you lose Karen Hargadon, Lynn Tighe and Shelly Pennefather, that's 80 percent of your points. We were hesitant in the beginning. We didn't really know how we were going to do it, because we were inexperienced. I was the only one coming in with experience. Each game we played we grew as a team, and at this point in the season, we're playing pretty well.

Villanovan: How have the freshmen and returning players who were inexperienced jelled into such a solid team?

Angelotti: Every year freshmen are slowly worked into the program. Not every freshman can come in and be an immediate starter. I think Helen Koskinen, our point guard, has done a great job of controlling the game. As a sophomore, that's a big position to play. Senior Teresa Pasik has also done a great job.

The players who didn't really get a chance last year because we had so much talent are showing us this year what they can do. That's why we're experiencing so much success this year. We're playing effectively as a cohesive unit. Everybody needs to contribute, and everyone has been.

Villanovan: What is your role? What do coaches and teammates expect from you?

Angelotti: My first three years everything was basically geared around Shelly, considering the caliber of player she was. This year the coaches and team are looking for me to score a little more, play a little smarter than I did in the past and show leadership and better heads-up play, since I was a returning starter.

Villanovan: What was your biggest thrill at Villanova?

Angelotti: Winning the Big East Championships my sophomore and junior year, and also beating Notre Dame this season in our Christmas tournament. We weren't expected to beat Notre Dame.

V.U. finishes fourth

By TERRY KELLY
Staff Reporter

Last weekend the mettle of the men's winter track team was tested. In probably the team's most important meet of the season they lived up to this year's expectations, if not the team's past history.

Since 1981 the team has finished third once (last year) and finished first or second three times apiece. This year all the team could muster was a fourth-place finish. Their score of 56.5 placed them behind Georgetown (149.5), Pittsburgh (126) and Syracuse (93.5).

The Cats got their strongest individual finish from one of the team's brightest future prospects. Freshman Finn Kelly just missed catching John Evans from Providence, while also just barely holding off teammate Jan Friedli. Kelly's time of 2:26.62 had him less than a second off the winner's pace and a mere .08 seconds ahead of Friedli.

The team's only other second place came in the distance medley relay. Despite their second-place finish, the squad of Mark Sullivan, Howard Jackson, Bruce Harris and Finn Kelly has to be a little bit disappointed since they finished a mere seven-hundredths of a second off the winning pace of Syracuse.

The four put times of 1:54.50 in the 800 meters, 49.1 in the 400 meters, 3:03.3 in the 1200 meters and 4:11.78 in the 1600 meters, for a combined time of 9:58.99 compared to Syracuse's 9:58.92.

The meet saw one of the most competitive fields in the 500-meter run. In the race, the top seven positions were separated by a mere 1.6 seconds. The Cats placed three of their runners in that top seven. Mark Rainey (1:04.00) in third led the duo of Jackson (5th) and Aidan O'Reagan (7th) across the finish for 'Nova.

In the 800-meter race the field was almost as close, as first and seventh were separated by a mere 3.2 seconds. Once again, the Cats had a trio in the top seven. This time it was Harris (1:51.23) that led Sullivan (6th) and Jackson (7th) through the tape.

The team also had a pair of thirds in the 4x400-meter and 4x800-meter relays. In the 4x400 the team of Marc Jones, O'Regan, Rainey and Grant Davis finished behind Pittsburgh and Georgetown with a time of 3:16.58.

In the 4x800 it was O'Regan, Sullivan, Harris and Kelly placing third behind Providence and Georgetown with a time of 7:30.81.

In the field events Rainey competed in both the long and triple jumps. His best showing came in the long jump, where he took fourth with a leap of 23'6". In the triple jump he managed to get seventh place with a 43' 10.75" effort.

Also in the field events the Cats had a junior-sophomore duo tie for 5th in the high jump. Junior David Hinkle and teammate Jeff Mousely both managed jumps of 6' 3.5".

In other results, Jones took sixth in the 200-meter dash while teammate Jeffrey Dingle took eighth. In the 400-meter run Jones took sixth.

Coach Jenkins was extremely pleased with the way the team ran. "It's always easier to talk about winning, but we finished fourth. We didn't have the depth, but our runners gave their best efforts."

If you consider that freshmen and sophomores earned (or shared in) all but three of the Cats top eight finishes, it would be hard to say that this team is going anywhere but up.

"I applaud the courage the team showed. With two events left it was clear we weren't going to win, yet our athletes ran those last two relays as if the championship was in the balance," said Jenkins. "That attitude will bring great benefits to us in the future."

Women run to title

with a time of 2:50.88. The distance medley relay team consisting of Moisen, senior Jenny Rahn, sophomore Stephanie Scalessa and freshman Carol Haux also finished second, with a time of 12:06.10.

Third-place finishers for the Cats included freshman Marissa Maggio in the 55-meter dash in 7.20 seconds, DiMuro in the 500 in 1:13.91, Haux in the 800 in 2:16.94 and the 4 x 400-meter relay team of Smith, DiMuro, Bennett and Halliday in an ECAC qualifying time of 3:52.30.

"It was a typical Villanova victory, where everyone gave an outstanding performance," commented Head Coach Marty Stern. "I was pleased to see all of the women accept the challenge and win."

As far as the runners were concerned, it was a satisfying yet exhausting two days. Some had to run up to three races in one afternoon. Said DiMuro, "We were primarily concerned with earning points, and planned to run just fast enough to win. Both Celeste and I had three races within six hours, which was pretty grueling."

She was a bit surprised with her 800 time, because she had not planned on taking out the pace. "There was someone in the race who wanted to qualify for NCAA's, so I figured the best thing to do was let her do it on her own — I wasn't going to help her.

"She did take out the pace, but with a lap to go I got around her, and went on to win. I certainly had not planned on running that fast, because I had two races afterwards. Winning The Most Outstanding Performance award came as a total surprise."

Athlete of the Week

LYNDON CAMPBELL

This week's Saco East Athlete of the Week is Lyndon Campbell.

Campbell is a freshman on the wrestling team who won the 134-pound class against Syracuse University when he topped Mark Muscarella, 3-2. In 'Nova's following meet Campbell downed Trevor Erney of Army to once again win his weight class.

Campbell, a two-time California state high school champion, improved his 1987-88 overall record to 22-1-2 with his two victories last week. He figures to be a force to be reckoned with in the NCAA's at Iowa St.on March 17.

Philly's pro sports scene

Sixers

By MIKE DUDEA
Staff Reporter

The Philadelphia 76ers had a rough week losing five out of their last six games. For the Sixers these losses dropped them to seven games below .500 and 13 games behind the Boston Celtics in the Atlantic Division, and left them wondering what they have to do in order to start winning again.

The problems that the Sixers have been experiencing of late really cannot be blamed on the players. Charles Barkley is having an MVP season, averaging almost 30 points and 11 rebounds per game. Maurice Cheeks and newly-acquired center Mike Gminski both have been playing well, averaging close to 40 points per game between them in recent games.

Despite these lofty offensive figures, though, the Sixers defense has definitely been lacking. It was this lapse in defense that forced the Sixers' front office to make a coaching change from Matt Goukas to Jim Lynam only two weeks ago.

This move, however, did little to boost the defense or morale of the team, and it is the latest indication of the ineptitude of the Sixers' front office. This is the same management that not two years ago dealt away the core of the team.

In two trades the Sixers' front office traded Moses Malone and the first pick in the 1986 draft (Brad Daugherty) as well as Terry Catledge for three players. Of these three only Cliff Robinson is still playing for the Sixers.

With Malone and Dougherty the Sixers could have had a front court of three all-stars, including Barkley. Unfortunately, though, the Sixers are left with a front court of Barkley, Gminski and newly-acquired forward, Ben Coleman.

With this decimated lineup the Sixers have had problems winning against the quality teams of the NBA (Boston, Atlanta, Detroit), as well as the weaker teams (Washington, New York, New Jersey).

Flyers

By JEFF GOSTYLA
Staff Reporter

The Philadelphia Flyers stepped out onto the Spectrum ice last Thursday night leading the Patrick Division of the Wales Conference by two points over the Washington Capitals.

In Thursday's game, it took a goal by Ilkka Sinisalo with only 23 seconds remaining in the third period to notch a 3-3 tie with the New York Islanders. Flyer coach Mike Keenan pulled goalie Ron Hextall with under two minutes remaining in the third period to set up Sinisalo's 17th goal of the season.

The following night, the Flyers traveled to Buffalo, where the Sabres quickly rifled two goals past Ron Hextall in the first four minutes of the first period. Reserve goaltender Mark LaForest was inserted to give Hextall a rest. Hextall later returned to stop 40 out of 44 total Buffalo shots.

This effort, along with Scott Mellanby's second-period goal off a Paul Lawless pass, helped the Flyers win 5-4. Lawless, who had been acquired by Philadelphia from the Hartford Whalers, also scored his first goal in a Flyer uniform on Friday versus Buffalo.

On Sunday, the Flyers came back for their last Spectrum game until March 10. Their opponents were the Norris Division leading Detroit Red Wings, led by high-scoring forward Steve Yzerman.

The star of the game, however, was Rick Tocchet, who chalked up his first NHL hat trick to lead the Flyers to a 5-3 victory.

Tocchet, the scrappy right winger who has been known to drop his gloves for an occasional tussle (270 penalty minutes so far this season), narrowly missed the hat trick Friday in Buffalo. He has been the Flyers' top offensive weapon with six goals and six assists in the last eight games.

The Flyers start this week still atop the division holding a three-point lead over the Washington Capitals and the New York Islanders.

Tim Kerr, the Flyers' powerful scoring threat, is expected to begin full-scale practice on March 8 and play his first game on March 10. Kerr has been out with a shoulder injury which occurred in a playoff game against the Islanders last spring.

Since then, Kerr has gone through five operations and extensive rehabilitation. If he can stay healthy and get back into the offensive flow, he could be the key to the Flyers playoff hopes.

Junior Gary Massey accounted for 16 points and nine steals in Villanova's win over Providence last Saturday.

Following a dismal three-loss week, the men's basketball team rebounded to defeat Providence College and Drexel University this past week.

Last Saturday, in the Providence game, 'Nova shot 85.7 percent from the field in the first half as they raced to a 53-38 halftime advantage. The Wildcats continued to dominate in the second half as they whipped the beleagured Friars 96-68.

"I thought we played very well. It was one of our better games of the year," commented Head Coach Rollie Massimino.

'Nova did play well, especially Gary Massey. Massey, a six-foot-five inch junior, scored 16 points in the contest. However, what really picked up the Cats were Massey's nine steals. One of those steals led to a dunk over Providence center Steve Wright. Massey skied over Wright like he was not even there.

"We needed a spark and Gary Massey gave it to us," stated Massimino.

Also playing well for Villanova were Doug West and Mark Plansky, who were exceptional from the outside. West poured in a team high 21 points while Plansky stuck three out of four three-point shots and scored 15 points. In addition Tom Greis scored 15 points and Barry Bekkedam added 10.

Later, a dejected Providence coach Gordie Chiesa stated, "Villanova shot the ball great and did a nice job on defense. Gary Massey played exceptional basketball."

Bekkedam attributed the team's overall performance to hard work. "It was a team response to a tough week of practice."

Next for Villanova was the Drexel game. It was Plansky's and Pat Enright's last game at the duPont Pavilion and the two seniors responded by leading V.U. to a 90-73 win.

Plansky, whose career includes a national championship, went five for seven from the field for 14 points in his last game. Enright scored five points and dished out a career high 11 assists.

The big men, who enjoyed a distinct height advantage, were also performing wonders for V.U. Greis netted 18 points while Rodney Taylor grabbed a team-high 14 rebounds. The six-foot six-inch power forward also tossed in

Cats drill Seton Hall, 73-57

By JIM BOWMAN
Assistant Sports Editor

The Villanova women's basketball team entered their Feb. 17 contest at St. John's University riding a four-game winning streak, with nine wins in their last 10 games. Hot.

Against St. John's, they yielded 73 points, shot under 42 percent and were outrebounded 38-29, losing 73-69. Cold.

Last Saturday, as seniors Lisa Angelotti, Teresa Pasik and Kristen Banfield played their final home game here at duPont Pavilion, the Cats shipwrecked the Seton Hall Pirates in one of their better efforts of the year, 73-57. Hot, once again.

Head Coach Harry Perretta put the week's events in perspective. "The loss (to St. John's) didn't really hurt us, as far as the conference standings are concerned. If we win one of two (road games against Georgetown and Pittsburgh) this week, we'll be the second seed in the Big East Tournament," he explained, "but we must win both games to have a chance at an at-large bid (to the NCAA Tournament)."

St. John's, a team the Cats defeated 61-57 earlier this year at home, jumped on the Cats early. They built a seven-point first-half lead on 60 percent shooting from the field and 82 percent shooting from the line.

Villanova made up some of the ground in the second half, but the Express held on for the win. Forward Sabrina Johnson led St. John's with 22 points.

"We played bad defense and gave up too many points. We scored 69, which is a good output for us. We just didn't stop them," said Perretta.

Senior forwards Lisa Angelotti and Teresa Pasik led the Cats in the defeat with 25 and 17 points, respectively.

Feb. 20, in the final home game of the season, 'Nova quickly rebounded by trouncing Seton Hall. Seniors Angelotti, Pasik and Kristen Banfield, playing in their final game at duPont Pavilion, led

V.U. wins Big East

By MICHAEL E. JONES
Staff Reporter

As Villanovans flipped through the Philadelphia Inquirer sports section this past Sunday, some may have gasped in horror after reading that the Villanova women's track team was tied for seventh place in the Big East Indoor Championships after the first day of competition. But there was no need to worry.

On the second day of competition, where the bulk of the finals were anyway, the Cats put on their racing spikes and got down to business. They coasted to their sixth consecutive Big East indoor title, far outdistancing second-place Syracuse by 48 points and setting three meet records in the process.

Junior Vicki Huber was named the meet's outstanding performer, grabbing the 3000-meter race in a Big East indoor record of 9:13.11, anchoring the record-setting 3200-meter relay team and finishing a close second in the mile, which was won by teammate and fellow junior Kathy Franey in 4:44.96.

Franey also ran the 3000, finishing runner-up to Huber in 9:26.25.

Franey and Huber were both members of the 3200 relay team, which also consisted of junior Meg Moisen and freshman Terry Smith. Their time of 8:49.59 established a Big East indoor record.

Junior Michelle DiMuro's scorching 800-meter victory in 2:06.91, which pulverized the former Big East indoor record of 2:08.99 set by Villanovan Veronica McIntosh in 1983, was named the meet's outstanding performance. Fellow junior Celeste Halliday had a big day as well, winning both the 1000 and 500-meter races in times of 2:50.51 and 1:12.89, respectively.

Senior Olive Burke added yet another victory to the pile, winning the 55-meter hurdles in 7.99 seconds.

But there was more. Freshman Michelle Bennett secured second place in the 400-meter run in 56.05 seconds, as did Moisen in the 1000,

Volleyball spikes Yale Bulldogs

By ANDREW BULLION

The Villanova men's volleyball team totally dominated every team they faced during last weekend's homestand. On Saturday morning 'Nova swept Yale and, later that evening, went on to defeat a powerful West Point squad three games to one to avenge an early season loss to the Cadets.

Then, on Sunday morning the Wildcats disgruntled to a 3-1 defeat of Eastern College.

Villanova cruised at will against Yale and the match was never close as 'Nova cruised to 15-5, 15-9 and 15-7 victories to close out the contest. Highlights in the Wildcats' victory were the Bulldogs' inability to stop the hard-driving spikes of [illegible] and the [illegible] of the middle blocker [illegible] the Wildcats' consistent serving.

Against Army, however, Villanova was much more challenged. Junior outside-hitter Pat Schloss and senior middle-hitter and team captain Mitch Crawford effectively neutralized the Cadets' heavy-hitting front line, as 'Nova took the first two games 15-10 and 15-5.

But with Villanova leading 9-5 in the third game of this match, Crawford went down with an ankle injury that forced him out of the match. 'Nova turned up the intensity in the fourth game and overcame Army's devastating middle-hitting with a scrappy defense and powerful outside-hitting supplied by Schloss and junior outside-hitter Brian Good, who, according to team captain Crawford, "played a hell of a game."

"Also key was the play of junior middle-hitter Buddy Acobiose, who is continually proving his worth to the team by his all-around athleticism and hard work. The Wildcats took the fourth game 15-[illegible], sealing the match from the floor. Joint Cadets Said Lamy [illegible]

Students to battle budget

Criticize budget process, financial aid situation

By KEVIN C. HEIL and JENNIFER REIDY
Assistant News Editors

Student Government plans to resist the approval of the proposed 1988-89 budget at the March 25 University Senate meeting, said Phil Brach, Student Government president, and John B. Lewis, student senator.

"There are two thrusts to defeating this budget: one is the financial aid issue . . . and [the other is] the budget process," said Brach.

He also announced that Student Government plans to initiate a campus-wide publicity campaign to encourage students to attend the meeting in protest of the proposed budget.

They hope to see a turnout of about 500 students at the meeting in support of the campaign, according to Mark Holobetz, secretary for the academic affairs department of Student Government.

Financial Aid

In regards to financial aid, Brach elaborated that the mission of Christian education is to educate the masses and that the University is not fulfilling this obligation.

The University Mission Statement reads, "Villanova attempts to enroll students with diverse social, geographical, economic and educational backgrounds. Furthermore, in utilizing its financial aid resources to help achieve this diverse student body, Villanova recognizes its responsibility to use part of those resources to assist the economically and educationally disadvantaged."

Brach added that anyone who is accepted to the University

Groundbreaking to begin

By LAURA STEVENS
Staff Reporter

Groundbreaking for the two dormitories which will be built on south campus should occur in the next week, according to Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life.

The two dormitories will be located next to Katherine Hall and across from Donahue Hall. Neville predicted that the project will be completed during summer 1989 and will be available to residents in fall 1989.

There will be no official groundbreaking ceremony, but neighbors in Radnor Township will be invited to the building site in the next few weeks to observe the construction process.

Over $5.3 million has been alloted for the construction of the buildings, said Mark Tupman, who is supervising the project. This figure does not include the furnishings for the dormitories.

Villanova has made several concessions to the Radnor residents in order to build the dormitories. Such compromises included promising to reduce the number of floors in the buildings from four to three and to install soundproof windows that will not open.

The township and the University have also negotiated a "buffer zone" of greenery which will be planted between the buildings and the neighbors' houses.

The two dormitories will provide 246 additional beds for the resident community of the school.

Neville reported that it has not been decided if the spaces will be utilized for male or female housing. "Our options are still open," he said. "We like to keep the sex ratio pretty even both on south campus and on the entire campus."

Neville did, however, indicate that the dorms will be used to fill the need for upperclassman housing rather than freshman housing. "The purpose of these dorms is basically to help the upperclassmen," he concluded.

Greek pledging discussed

By NOEL E. FALCO
News Editor

There will be no changes in Greek organization pledging at Villanova University in response to the Feb. 12 death of a Rutgers Lambda Chi Alpha associate member because of alcohol poisoning, according to Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activites.

Bonas said there have been reported incidents of hazing at Villanova. "We have had some reports. The problem is in substantiating those reports. It's difficult to get enough good, accurate information for us to point the finger at either a group or a person and say, 'Hey, you've done this in violation of University policy,' " he said.

University policy

The University's policy on hazing is basically a restatement of the Pennsylvania state law on hazing that was enacted last April and effected in June. The policy states that hazing is prohibited "as being inconsistent with an association of equals and scholars."

The policy follows the Pennsylvania definition of hazing, which, briefly, is "any action or situation which recklessly or intentionally endangers the mental or physical health or safety of a student or which willfully destroys or removes public or private property."

The policy continues to state that the definition of hazing should include not only forced physical activity, but "extreme mental stress" as well. The willingness of a student to participate in such an activity does not affect its forced nature.

University policy further declares that a hazing violation is a misdemeanor of the third degree, which is punishable by not more than one year in prison and a $2,500 fine.

According to Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, responsibility for handling pledge infractions is shared by Steve McWilliams, Judicial Affairs officer; the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students; and Bonas.

He commented that it is difficult to make a good case or prosecute if all the information available is hearsay, half-shreds of evidence or anonymous phone calls.

Hazing

"There is some hazing, I'm convinced of that. The extent of the hasing and the nature of the hasing it's difficult to tell. I suspect there's more psychological hazing on this campus than there is physical hazing, though there is some of that, too," said Bonas.

Neville said he is not aware of any current incidents of hazing. He did say, however, that the Pi

Both the Villanova men's and women's basketball teams received invitations to the NCAA tournament. The two teams, however, followed different paths to reach the tournament.

As the Big East tournament began March 10, the men's team appeared to be "on the bubble" for a NCAA tournament berth. With a win in the quarterfinals against St. John's, many felt the team could be assured of a spot in the "Field of 64."

The Wildcats accomplished that and then some. 'Nova edged St. John's 71-68 and shocked the top-seeded Pittsburgh Panthers 72-69 before falling to Syracuse in the tournament finale.

The Wildcats received an at-large bid to the tournament and will begin play March 18 in Cincinnati, Ohio as the sixth seed in the Southeast Regional section of the tournament.

Villanova's first-round opponent will be the No. 11-seeded Arkansas, which posted a 21-8 record and finished third in the Southwest Conference.

The women's team finished second in the surprisingly tough Big East this season. But after dropping their final two road games and being bounced from the Big East tournament in the first round, it appeared certain that their season was over. In what was termed a major surprise, the women's basketball team was awarded a berth in the NCAA women's tournament, which consists of 40 teams.

The 'Cats are seeded eighth in the East Regional and they hosted ninth-seeded Wake Forest at the duPont Pavilion Wednesday night.

Brach declines re-election

By PAUL FRATAMICO
Staff Reporter

Student Government President Phil Brach recently said he will not run for re-election.

Brach explained that the job of president requires a great deal of dedication and enthusiasm in order to accomplish the many tedious tasks that go along with the office. If he were re-elected, he said he did not think his enthusiasm level would be as high.

Brach said the primary reason for his decision, however, is his desire to establish a political journal at the University. The amount of dedication needed to accomplish this task would not leave him sufficient time to fulfill the duties of the president's office, he said.

Brach was one of the founders of the Pelican, a fledgling journal which published its first issue last fall.

Potential candidates meet

While Brach took his hat out of the electoral ring, other potential student candidates for the positions of Student Government president and University Senator met March 1 in the Haverford Room of the Connelly Center to gain information on the various posts available.

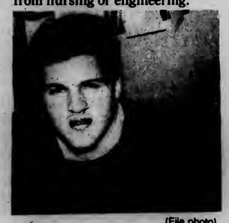
In total, there are 13 offices available. The positions include Student Government president, three senators from arts, one from sciences, three from commerce and finance, one from nursing, engineering, the law school, University College and the graduate school.

The qualifications for Student Government president include a minimum 2.5 cumulative grade point average and the status of being at least a second semester sophomore, or having completed at least as many credits at the time of election.

The nomination procedures for Student Government president include obtaining the signatures of at least 5 percent [588] of the undergraduate, graduate school and law school students on election petitions.

In order to become a candidate for senator, a student must have at least 10 percent of the students of the respective college sign a petition.

Upon completion of this and other nomination forms, a potential candidate becomes an official candidate. The official candidates running for Student Government president must gain over 50 percent of the total votes cast by the undergraduate, graduate, law school and University College students.



In the event that no candidate has received a majority, a run-off election will be held between the two candidates that received the two highest vote totals cast in the initial election.

The University Senate seats will be taken by the candidates who receive the highest number of votes.

The election laws state that there will be a minimum of one week of campaigning for all officers which includes the days of elections and the week prior to the election dates. The election dates are April 12 and 13.

As of immediately after the March 1 meeting, the unofficial count of potential candidates for Student Government president was three.

There were 13 potential candidates for arts senator, three for commerce and finance senator, and one for law school senator. No potential candidates were present from nursing or engineering.

The Women's Studies Society was recently formed to study and create an awareness on the Villanova campus concerning gender issues.

The organization was the idea of students Tracey Burke, Marie Gleason and Martin Kelley. The faculty moderator is Dr. Barbara Wall, O.P., a philosophy professor who also teaches women's studies courses.

The society is currently involved with an awareness-building program for the campus' new fraternity and sorority members. This program will be held in April under the leadership of Edward Sullivan, director of the Center for Peace and Justice Education.

The society is also organizing a series of lectures to be held next fall. This series is designed to confront some of the major gender-related issues of the day, such as the role of women in sports and the role of women in politics.

South campus locks replaced

By SHARON A. WATERS
Assistant News Editor

The locks on the doors to every resident's room and the outside doors into each dormitory on south campus were changed over spring break because a set of keys, including a master key to all south campus dormitories and rooms, was lost, according to Thomas N. Trucks, director of Maintenance.

Trucks said Maintenance was afraid the master key could have been found and used over spring break. He said Maintenance hoped the keys would turn up, and when they did not, the locks were replaced.

The replacement cost was $10,000 and was paid by the University, according to Trucks.

A south campus resident assistant [R.A.] said that Residence Life told the R.A.s not to speak about the incident and to refer all questions to Residence Life.

Christopher M. Janosik, director of Residence Life, and Jeaneen Riely, south area coordinator, refused to comment on the incident.

Program considers honor code

By DIANE A. CILIONE
Staff Reporter

Students from the honors program and Student Government are working together with Dr. Michael E. Burke, director of the honors program, and other faculty to formulate an honor code which will possibly be implemented by the program.

Kristin Switala, chairperson of the honor code committee, said that the group is committed to designing an honor code for the honors program written by honors students.

"Our main purposes are to increase the community of trust among faculty and students to allow for a less structured, more open style of class testing and paper writing," she said.

"Also, we hope to clarify what constitutes cheating and plagiarism since they are not defined explicitly by the University," said Switala.

"Presently the committee is studying the policies of different colleges and universities like Haverford, Bryn Mawr and William and Mary," explained Switala.

She added, "Our goal is to finish the honor code this semester and to have it in place in the honors program by next semester."

Switala said that the honor code is still in a developmental stage. "Controversy is centered on issues such as what happens when one knows that someone has cheated or plagiarized," noted Switala.

Once the honor code has been completed, it must be voted on by the Honors Council and then approved by Burke, said Switala.

The issue of an honor code at Villanova was brought to attention by extensive cheating on a biology final last semester, which was reported in the Feb. 12 issue of the Villanovan.

The University's formal policy on cheating was criticized as being "unclear and ambiguous" by Dr. R. William Marks, biology professor. According to Switala, the honor code is an attempt to deter incidents of dishonesty like the one last semester.

"As a member of the faculty, I think the widespread dishonesty is a very corruptive influence for effective faculty/student relations," said Burke.

"I'm not certain if a formal honor code is a solution . . . I'm not sure if an honor code itself can create a consensus in a group of students not to cheat or if that consensus must be there from the start," he said.

Burke said he thought the decision of the students in the honors program to develop an honor code might set a precedent for the University as a whole.

"I would not assert that honors students are significantly more or less honest than anyone else. The special character of the program does allow the experimentation an honor code would require," he said.

Arms race to be discussed

Conference to be held on campus

University Press Release

A conference addressing "The Nuclear Arms Race and Strategies for Peace" will be held at the Connelly Center March 26 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The conference's purpose is to "update the American Catholic response to the American bishops' pastoral on the arms raace," according to Daniel T. Regan, director of Villanova's Center for Peace and Justice Education, which is co-sponsoring the conference with the department of philosophy.

Regan, an assistant professor of philosophy, explained that the day-long program will endeavor to represent the spectrum of contemporary Catholic opinion.

Henriot, S.J., director of the Center of Concern in Washington, D.C., will deliver the morning address, titled "Building the Structure for a Future of Peace on Earth."

Henriot is engaged in research and educational efforts focusing on political economy and social value issues and participates in the promotion of Church response to international justice issues.

Four speakers will lead concurrent sessions from 10:45 a.m. to 12 p.m.

Dr. Kevin J. Cassidy, instructor in political science at Fairfield University, will discuss "Disarmament and the Economy: Catholic Social Thought and Economic Conversion."

Nancy Sylvester, I.H.M., national coordinator of the Catholic social justice lobby NETWORK in Washington, D.C., will address "The Nuclear Arms Race and the 1988 Presidential Election."

Dr. Jeffrey W. Hahn, professor of political science at Villanova and Soviet political system and foreign policy expert, will discuss "Cooperation and Competition in Soviet-American Relations."

Democratic Senator Paul Simon

By G.J. DONNELLY
Staff Reporter

Democratic Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois won the presidential primary in his home state Tuesday, but appears very unlikely to be able to use his victory to propel his campaign forward, according to a report in the New York Times.

"Despite his strength here [in Illinois], Simon has virtually no chance to win a majority of the 2,082 delegates needed for nomination at the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta in July," according to a Times report.

Simon's main program to attract voters is his guaranteed job opportunity program, an idea similiar to the Works Progress Administration of Franklin Roosevelt's "New Deal." His plan is to set up local councils of appointed officials to create public work projects for people who have been out of work for five weeks or longer.

The projects would range from cleaning graffiti and light construction to planting trees. The workers would be paid minimum wage or 10 percent over their welfare benefit, whichever is higher. The workers would be limited to a 30-hour work week as an incentive to hunt for a 40-hour week job in the private sector.

Although this idea would require great government expenditures, Simon promises to balance the budget within three years. He would also spur job creation through tax incentives for business.

On foreign policy, Simon is considered a dove. He supports the INF [Intermediate range Nuclear Forces] treaty formulated by the Reagan Administration but opposes such Reagan programs as the Strategic Defense Initiative and aid to the Nicaraguan contras, who are attempting to overthrow the Sandinista regime.

He also plans to cut $10 to $20 billion off the defense budget, channelling it instead to social spending. This and his aforementioned work program platform have characterized Simon as a traditional Democrat.

His political career began in 1954, when he was elected in an upset to his town's representative seat in the state assembly. He later advanced to the state senate in 1960 and eight years later climbed to lieutenant governor, despite a statewide Republican landslide.

In 1972 Simon was upset in the Democratic primary in the race for the statehouse. Two years later, he gravitated to the U.S. House of Representatives, where he gave 10 years of distinguished service before upending incumbent Charles Percy in a bitter fight for the Senate in 1984.

Originally, Simon was not going to run for the White House and supported Arkansas Sen. Dale Bumpers for the presidency. When Bumpers declined to run, Simon took the plunge himself and took a respectable second-place showing in Iowa. In New Hampshire, however, his message fell on few ears, and he limped to a third-place showing.

Although he did not campaign for Super Tuesday, Simon did concentrate his efforts in Illinois and was leading in the polls days before the March 15 primary.

Despite not being a college graduate, Simon has written 11 books and published his own paper, the Troy Tribune, at the age of 18.

Super Tuesday summarized

By G.J. DONNELLY
Staff Reporter

As expected, the Super Tuesday primaries were super for some presidential candidates but not so super for others. Vice President George Bush was one of the former, sweeping the board of 20 states and increasing his delegate total to over 700, more than half of what he needs to garner the Republican nomination.

On the Democratic side, a three-way gridlock occurred between Massachusetts Gov. Mike Dukakis, the Rev. Jesse Jackson and Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore. Dukakis won in Texas and Florida and touted his drive for the presidency as a "national candidacy." He finished the day with 459 delegates to lead the field.

Jackson's "Rainbow Coalition" gained delegates for its leader in each of the 20 Super Tuesday states, finishing with 400 overall.

Also, Gore's decision to ignore early contests such as Iowa and to campaign heavily in the South paid off. He won six victories in the South, ending the day with 346 delegates.

The big losers: for the Republicans, Kansas Sen. Bob Dole, who won no states and was nudged out of a victory in nearby Missouri; Pat Robertson, who finished third everywhere he polled while losing much of his early support in the South; and New York Rep. Jack Kemp, whose uexpectedly poor-showing campaign ended with a press conference in Washington the following day.

For the Democrats, Rep. Richard Gephardt won only his home state of Missouri and only increased his delegate total to 145. Paul Simon, the Illinois senator with the bow tie, did not participate in Super Tuesday.

Finally, Gary Hart, whose return to the Democratic race surprised many, did not translate that surprise into votes. His campaign unceremoniously ended for good the next day.

For Buah, the romp on Tuesday represented the largest victory ever for a Republican in a primary contest. He collected the most delegates ever, 564, in one day's polling. His hold on the nomination seems tight.

"The kinds of conservatives who were Reagan rebels in 1976 are now comfortable with being part of the establishment," said Ed Rollins, Kemp's campaign chairman. "Bush has done a good job persuading these people that he'll protect the Reagan agenda and that they can trust him," he added.

Dole, despite claims of being more appealing to independents and Democrats, had no luck at all with the conservative electorate.

Robertson's prospects also look bleak; a national poll of GOP voters showed that 58 percent of them thought negatively of him.

Kemp not only dropped out of the race, but also out of the House, announcing that he would not run for another term.

Meanwhile, the Democrats were running a horse race with Dukakis in the lead. Although he did win convincingly in Texas and Florida, he failed to poll more than 10 percent of the vote in either Alabama or Mississippi. Thus, he aroused doubt as to whether he was truly a "national candidate."

Gore upended Gephardt with a 72-hour media blitz, presenting himself as a one-of-us Southerner. He has to translate that regional appeal to a national level, and so far it has not materialized.

"People voted for Gore because he was viewed in the end as a Southern candidate," explained Dukakis supporter John Henry Anderson, the Democratic party chairperson in Georgia. "No one else caught on," he said.

Jackson was the only Democratic candidate to win delegates in each Super Tuesday contest, a phenomenal achievement for a black candidate who is generally viewed as unelectable. He attracts unanimous black support and has slightly improved his share of the white vote.

For all his accomplishments and contribution to the Villanova community, the Order of Omega is proud to honor Joe Zaller of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity as Greek of the Week.

New professors to be hired

By DANIEL MORIARTY
Staff Reporter

As many as 39 new full-time professors may be joining the undergraduate faculty in the fall because of contract terminations and an unusually large number of retirements, according to the Office of Academic Affairs.

Thirty-six openings are the combined result of the termination of faculty contracts and the retirements of professors such as Dr. Joseph Goldberg, engineering; Dr. Robert Whiting and Dr. August A. Sardinas, mathematical sciences; Dr. John J. Mulligan, modern languages; Dr. Hsiu Huo Yuen, chemical engineering; Dr. Raymond Cummings, history; and James J. Mitchell, English.

According to the Office of Academic Affairs, 34 of the positions are tenure-tracked, enabling professors to obtain tenure after six years. Sixty-six percent of all Villanova teachers are currently tenured.

Space limitations

A lack of office space is the greatest obstacle to the hiring of more full-time faculty members, according to the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs.

As a result, "two of every seven professors are part-time," said Dr. Charles Cherry, associate vice president for Academic Affairs.

"There are too many part-time faculty members in some instances," Gallen noted, pointing out that they are not responsible for doing research or committee work.

Dr. Sterling Delano, chairperson of the English department, praised the cooperation of the administration during the hiring process, but expressed a need to overcome space limitations.

Details on new professors

Several other departments also expressed a need for additional faculty and space.

Because of the new openings, the average age of the faculty is decreasing, a factor which "challenges the status quo at Villanova in positive ways," said Delano.

The hirings precede an expected shortage of new professors in five to 10 years, Gallen said.

The distribution of new professors is as follows: five in the College of Nursing, three in economics, three in mechanical engineering, two in English and two in physics. Most other departments had one replacement.

The departments of economics, English, mechanical engineering and physics noted generally excellent applicant pools, in terms of number and quality.

Dr. Joan Large, chairperson of the search committee for the College of Nursing, said, "We received 20 highly qualified applications for the five available positions. We are fortunate to be able to select the cream of the crop."

Villanova is competing with schools such as Princeton, Penn and the University of Virginia for prospective professors, according to Gallen.

All prospective teachers must possess doctorates or be near completion of their dissertations. Exceptions are only made for applicants to the naval science and nursing departments, Gallen said.

He also noted that while prospective faculty members are attracted by Villanova's Mission Statement and the caliber of its students, they are discouraged by the absence of a doctorate program.

Visiting scholars to lecture

By BARBARA KRESCH
Staff Reporter

Six of the nation's outstanding teaching scholars on political philosophy are scheduled to participate in a philosophy program at Villanova, according to department chairperson Dr. John A. Doody.

The theme of the program is the examination of the contrast between political theory and prudence or practical reason, said Doody.

He reported that while the professors are here, they will each give an open lecture and a faculty-graduate student colloquium. Some will teach both graduate and undergraduate classes, said Doody.

The idea of the program is based on the fact that the visiting professors will be on campus for several days rather than just the day they are scheduled to speak, said Doody.

He continued that repeated meetings with a visiting professor will "open up a dialogue, with each meeting building on the previous [one]."

Some of the visiting professors will give lectures for two courses that are structured around the program.

Fred Dallmayr of the University of Notre Dame's department of government came Wednesday and is leaving today. He dealt with the combination of the Marxist political view with the concept of religion.

Allen Buchanan, a member of the University of Arizona's philosophy department, will deliver the lecture, "Communitarian Criticisms of Liberalism," April 5.

Another visiting professor, John Finn, is from the philosophy department of Oxford University and is "widely acknowledged as a leading scholar on St. Thomas Aquinas," said Doody. His lecture, "Aristotle, Aquinas and Moral Absolutes," will be held April 18.

The last speaker of this semester will be Thomas McCarthy, from the philosophy department of Northwestern University, who is the primary translator of German philosopher Jurgen Habermas. He will be dealing with the subject of the existence and place of philosophy in society and will give the lecture, "Philosophy and Critical Theory," April 21.

Next fall, Dr. Martha Nussbaum, professor of philosophy at Brown University, will conclude the series on the topic of Aristotle.

Tom West, from the University of Dallas, was here through this program earlier this semester.

Deaf students revolt

The board of trustees at Gallaudet University, a school for the deaf in Washington, D.C., selected I. King Jordan, dean of the college of arts and sciences, to be the school's first deaf president Monday in response to a week of student protests, according to a recent New York Times article.

Students at the university protested last week in reaction to the appointment of Dr. Elisabeth Ann Zinser, who was not hearing-impaired, as the university's new president, according to a recent Newsweek article.

Jordan, one of three finalists for the position, was not chosen last week when the board picked Zinser.

One-thousand and eight-hundred students and faculty marched on the Capitol calling for Zinser's resignation and the appointment of a deaf president. Zinser resigned after four days of a general strike of faculty and students in respect "to this extraordinary social movement of deaf people."

The students' demands also included the appointment of a majority of deaf trustees, and the resignation of the chairperson of the board, Jane Bassett Spilman. Spilman resigned Sunday and a commission was set up to study methods of restructuring the board.

Gallaudet, which is charted and funded by the federal government, produces approximately 95 percent of the nation's deaf professionals.

Campus racial dissent persists

Dartmouth College was the site of recent student demonstrations against racism on campus. Students rallied in protest of verbal attacks on a black professor and in support of dismissal of charges against Dartmouth by three students who had destroyed anti-apartheid shanties.

Charges were filed by Dartmouth against members of the conservative journal, "The Review," for harassing a black music professor and for destroying shanties built by anti-apartheid demonstrators in January 1986.

Minority students also held week-long sit-ins at Hampshire College and at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst during February. Marches and protests were also held at the universities of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Texas, Ohio State and Yale.

In a Feb. 26 article on the selection committee for the new University president, "Search for new president begins," the position of the Rev. Duffey, O.S.A., is the Provincial of the province of St. Thomas of Villanova.

FBI, private groups monitor campus dissent

By the College Press Service

Stanford University student Susan Poff returned from a 1984 trip to Nicaragua upset and wanting to tell the world about what she saw.

Across the country in Virginia, Michael Boos read a news story about Poff's feelings.

So Poff's name ended up on Boos's list of people who oppose the Reagan administration's policies in Central America and some of his lists ended up in the Federal Bureau of Investigation [F.B.I.] files of dissenters who might bear watching.

Poff found the process of being made into some sort of potential traitor "unnerving."

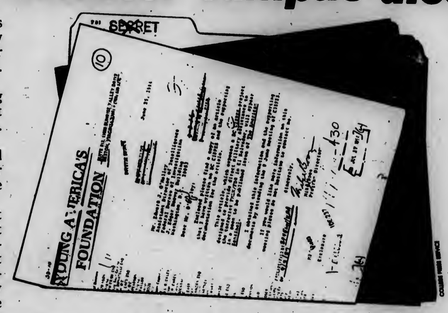
Boos, who heads a national student group called Young America's Foundation, called her "naive."

She is, in any case, an unwitting player in the widespread spying on campus activists that came to light in a late-January release of FBI documents.

The papers reveal that FBI "monitored" students at Florida State, Wichita State, Tennessee State, the universities of Oklahoma, Kansas, Minnesota and Pennsylvania, and other students who worked with any of the campus chapters around the country of United Campuses Against Nuclear War.

Most of the students being watched, however, were members of the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador [CISPES], a group opposed to U.S. policy in Central America.

"We aren't doing anything illegal," said Poff, "I shouldn't have to be accountable to anyone. This makes me angry."



In the four years it followed CISPES members, the FBI never did uncover any wrongdoing, the documents suggest.

The documents also suggest "the right to dissent, a basic tenet of a democratic society, is increasingly encumbered," said Maragret Ratner of the Center for Constitutional Rights [CCR], the New York group which obtained the FBI papers through the Freedom of Information Act.

While the FBI's spying on campus dissenters recalled the extensive Nixon-era sabotaging of the Freedom of Information Act as a way to control future administrations — the document indicated a well-organized unofficial network of people who watched campuses for the government.

"The Constitution," charged Chip Berlet, a Cambridge, Mass., journalist and investigator who monitor right-wing groups, "is being short-circuited by a private spy network."

Berlet names Boos's group, along with the Council for Inter-American Security and the Capital Research Center, among others, as part of the network.

The groups clip newpapers, scan cables, compile lists, gather memos from campus friends and then forward them to the FBI and other federal agencies, the documents reveal.

The FBI accepts such information — which may or may not be true — because the laws passed after the Nixon administration's domestic spying scandal restrict it from doing much campus monitoring on its own, Ratner speculated.

She noted the documents include a memo telling FBI agents "specifically not to question how 'individuals acting on their own initiative' obtain information."

"Just because articles are kept in a file doesn't mean we're working with outside sources," said FBI spokeswomen Sue Schnitzer. "Our mandate is to follow up on allegations we receive, but it doesn't mean a full-blown investigation is taking place."

The private groups, in fact, boast that they monitor campus dissenters. Lynn Bouchey, president of the Council for Inter-American Security [CIAS], said in a recent fundraising letter.

Boos, in turn, claims to have the biggest "campus information network in the nation."

Whatever it is, CIAS's Michael Waller said, "It's not spying. All our information comes from their literature or from defectors. We don't have secret agents infiltrating their organizations."

His group watches the left, he adds, because "the FBI doesn't watch these groups" and because someone should.

CISPES, for example, raises "money for communist terrorists trying to overthrow a government the U.S. Congress supports," said Waller, whose allegation was not supported by the material released in the documents.

Waller also claimed congressmen Ted Weiss of New York, Ron Fellums of California and John Conyers of Michigan have worked with the KGB, the Soviet Union's spy agency.

Berlet said CIAS and the other groups often issue reports "calling everyone to the left of Teddy Kennedy a commie who should be shot," which then end up at the FBI and even the White House.

For instance, one of Boos's CISPES reports — gleaned from newspaper reports like the one reporting Poff's return from Nicaragua — was classified as "secret" by the FBI and distributed to FBI bureaus around the country.

Some critics fear even unsubstantiated reports like Boos's enjoy special clout in agencies that should know better because the private groups have impressive ties to the nation's leaders.

Bonas, Neville discuss Greek hazing, pledging

Kappa Phi fraternity is under investigation for an incident which occurred last semester, in which sophomore pledge Douglas Kelleher was struck by a car at the Lancaster-Ithan avenues intersection.

There is also the difficulty of getting the pledge to come forward and confirm incidents of hazing because of loyalty to the group and the fact that the pledge wants to be accepted into the group. Bonas said peer pressure and potential reprisals might be other factors that dissuade a pledge from speaking out.

Neville's response to a question of whether there is pressure placed on a pledge not to report incidents of hazing was, "I think that's always a concern ... it's hard always to know what happens in these kinds of groups.

"You almost need a catastrophe in order to be aware of situations that are very undesirable or questionable," he added.

Alcohol abuse

Bonas said he hoped groups would be more cautious with alcohol since the Rutgers incident. As to any alcohol problems in the Greek system, he explained, "The last and most important thing was the removal of Delta Kappa Epsilon's recognition on campus for a period of three years and that was for a number of things, some of which revolved around hazing or hazing-like incidences."

He and Neville confirmed the investigation of the Sigma Nu fraternity by its national chapter for alcohol violations, which did not concern hazing.

Bonas pointed out, "[Alcohol] is in all activities. It's the necessary root of evil in student activities on this campus and throughout the country ... We would like to see our fraternities and sororities become extremely responsible, and many of them are. All of them are not careless," he said.

Neville said, "I think underage drinking is prevalent throughout the University, not simply where fraternities are. People don't just drink in fraternity types of events. Underage drinking is in many, many places, and the University's position has to be [that] we do not encourage that. We do all we can to prevent and control that is in our power."

Bonas said that Villanova's problem with alcohol is relatively the same as most universities. There are differences because of location, housing and interest of local law enforcement agencies in enforcing the law.

"Penn State's had a problem, Pitt's had a problem, some other schools in Philadelphia [as well], so it's happening everywhere," he explained.

Liability

Villanova was the site of a 1982 automobile accident involving an underage student who was served alcohol at a Delta Kappa Epsilon party. Of the two passengers, one was killed and the other was rendered a parapalegic. This case has had an impact on social host liability in both the state and nation and is regarded as a landmark case.

(photo by Corcoran)

Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president of student life, said he felt Villanova makes every effort to educate Greek organizations as to what is expected from them.

The scope of potential liability was broadened by this case and "students and others who aid, agree or attempt to aid in a substantial fashion persons in the violation of the underage drinking statute run a considerable liability risk," according to a Dec. 12, 1986 communication released by the Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president of Student Life.

According to Bonas, liability differs with the situations. "Every time we have new officers elected in Greek organizations we try to get an attorney in here to discuss liability with them in alcohol situations. [Recently] we had a training meeting for all the new presidents of fraternities and sororities. Father Martin brought an attorney in to explain the situation to them.... they got an awful lot of good information," he said.

Emphasis of pledging

According to Bonas, the emphasis of pledging should be personal development and personal growth.

"My philosophy about pledging is it's kind of an intense developmental period ... the goal is to get you a little higher in your developmental level, to be a better woman or man, to be a better sister or brother in the group, to know more about the group, to develop your leadership style, your inter-personal skills," he explained.

He added, "If you look at it that way, there is absolutely no room philosophically for hazing. It doesn't make any sense. Unfortunately, I think there are some groups that view pledging as a time of proof or trial, to prove yourself worthy to be in 'XYZ' sorority or fraternity."

According to Neville, "Pledging is simply a process of seeing if you want to join this particular group. It's an 'engagement' period, if you will. According to their [the Greek organizations'] constitutions, it's an education period to see if the potential member is really the kind of person that would fit with the group and their ideals and vice versa."

Neville said he felt Villanova makes every effort to educate Greek organizations as to what is expected from them. "We're very active at pledging time to educate the leadership of the fraternities, the pledge masters' meeting ... there are clear expectations of the University's position on hazing and alcohol abuse. I'm sure many of the fraternities will observe them carefully."

Neville concluded, "I think on the overall they [Greek organizations] can serve a good purpose. It's when any abuse takes place that the good that they do has to be measured against the damage that can also occur. And when the negative aspects clearly outweigh whatever potential for good then it's time for them to go."

Sorority adds new members

By CAROLYN R. MIRABILE
Staff Reporter

On Feb. 19, Alpha Omicron Pi [AOPi] gave prospective sorority members another chance to rush. According to Elke Jones, former president of AOPi, "about 100 girls showed up at our meeting."

At the beginning of rush, the number of women participating is divided by the seven sororities, thereby setting quotas. But during rush, there was a rumor that there would be a new sorority. About 150 women dropped out of this rush as a result of either this rumor, missed bids or missing rush.

Later, Gary Bonas, assistant director of student activities, announced that there would be no new sororities for at least one and one-half to two years.

According to Jones, "We [AOPi] felt that we couldn't be competitive because we have about 40 members, and 20 of them are seniors. Therefore, we wanted to offer another rush for those who weren't a part of the formal rush."

AOPi sent letters to the 150 women who did not complete the formal rush, inviting them to the rush meeting. The letters offered the women the opportunity to start a "new sorority."

Those who attended the meeting were told to fill out forms. About 70 women were selected, based on several requirements.

Jones said, "Other AOPi chapters have done this, and we were pleased that we were over our 53-person quota."

Jones said, "We have gained a lot of support from the alumnae and other sororities, and we are really excited that we will be able to strengthen our group."

Increased '89 budget proposed

By the College Press Service

About 250,000 more college students will receive grant money from the federal government if Congress approves President Ronald Reagan's 1989 budget.

The Reagan administration's proposed 1989 budget includes a 4 percent increase in U.S. Department of Education spending, a dramatic turnaround from past funding proposals that sought to decrease it.

A hefty jump for student aid was included in the proposal, which the president sent to Congress Feb. 18.

"We welcome the 9 percent increase in student aid," said Becky Timmons of the American Council on Education. "Last year the administration sought to cut student aid by 46 percent. This is a remarkable election year turnaround," she said.

The administration, which for seven years has sought to cut education department spending, agreed to increase funding during December's budget "summit" with Democratic congressional leaders.

Also, amendments to last year's Gramm-Hollings-Rudman deficit reduction law canceled a low fiscal 1989 deficit ceiling that would have required deep cuts.

Although most observers applauded the proposal — which Congress now must approve — Jerry Roschwalb of the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges said the budget reflects a president who is "treading water.

"Nothing will happen this year. The summit locked things in," said Roschwalb. "Nobody is moving. The atmosphere in Washington is paralyzed," he commented.

He had hoped for a budget that attacked loan defaults, which Roschwalb said are fueled by loaning money to unprepared students and a lack of adequate postsecondary tutoring, but got one he feels throws good money after bad.

Yet Roschwalb's objections were uncommon, as most campus lobbyists grudgingly approved of the proposals from a president they still could not bring themselves to praise.

"It represents congressional priorities more than the administration's priorities," said Mary Preston of the United States Student Association [USSA]. "It's the first time the president has not requested deep cuts. He decided to make a politically good move to keep Republicans in the White House. Nevertheless, we welcome the change."

"The president has made education a priority for this administration and in this budget," Secretary of Education William Bennett said at a Feb. 18 press conference. "Our budget for 1989 does spend more, but it also spends better."

The administration proposes increasing aid to college students from $15.6 billion this year to $16.5 billion in 1989. Some $751 million of the increase would go to the Pell Grant program. The maximum grant would rise $100 to $2,300, and the number of grant recipients would climb by about 250,000, to 3.4 million students.

Education department officials also hope to see the Income Contingent Loans [ICL] program — which students at the 10 campuses where it is now on trial have shunned — grow, but abandoned last year's $600 million request for a $50 million proposal for 1989.

"We'd like to see ICLs replace Perkins Loans," said Tripp.

The administration, while increasing direct aid to students, would de-emphasize the Perkins Loan program, which each campus administers for its own students. Perkins funding would drop from $211 million to $22 million. The deep cut would have little impact, the Education Department says, because the program uses a revolving fund in which $718 million is now available for higher education.

Also slated for deep cuts is the State Student Incentive Grants [SSIG] program. Campus aid officials like SSIGs, a federal matching fund program, because they can be flexible in awarding the grants.

"There's more money in those funds than is needed to meet their needs," Tripp maintained.

College work-study funding would increase by $12 million to $600 million, and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants would rise by $8 million to $416 million.

"That barely meets inflation," said Preston.

Citing the budget's proposal to freeze Trio programs for disadvantaged students at their 1988 levels, Roschwalb complained, "If the administration were serious about solving higher education's problems, it would deal with those problems. Universities should be helping us deal with our problems instead of just fighting to stay alive."

USSA's Preston, though, was willing to concede, "There are things we'd do differently, but increasing education funding is a totally new idea for Ronald Reagan."

Loan defaulters studied

By the College Press Service

Students who tend to default on their Guaranteed Student Loans [GSL] are not dishonorable, they are just poor, a General Accounting Office [GAO] report issued last week claimed.

The GAO — which audits federal spending programs — is trying to draw a "profile" of a typical GSL defaulter, agency official William Gainer told the House Postsecondary Education Subcommittee, and is finding so far that dropouts, students who support themselves and students who are stuck in lower-paying jobs make up the bulk of the nation's defaulters.

More than half — 56 percent — of the former students in default did not graduate, Gainer said.

He added that the GAO's "preliminary results" agreed with the testimony at a January loan default "summit" of student aid officials from around the country, organized by Rep. Pat Williams (D-Mont).

Many campus aid directors asserted defaulters were not deadbeats, but people who were simply unable to afford to repay their loans.

The GAO's emerging profile of the typical defaulter "raises serious concerns about forcing needy students to take out loans, rather than [get] grants" that do not have to be repaid, American Council on Education official Charles Saunders said.

In its prior seven proposals, the administration had sought to reduce students' reliance on grants, which are much more expensive for the government, in favor of loans.

Students plan campaign to defeat budget should be able to attend and that Villanova should make the resources available to them.

"It seems like we're becoming in some ways elitist and in some ways Robin Hood-like, in that we get the rich people, suck some cash out of them and give it to the poor," Lewis asserted.

"There's no question our socio-economic standing has changed — we're definitely attracting students with more affluent families. But this is not unusual — it is happening across the nation at many universities," said Gary B. Fenner, vice president of Financial Affairs.

"Everyone is willing to admit we're in a financial aid crisis, and everyone knows the solution is endowment, and that you can't raise the endowment through tuition money," Brach explained, referring to the proposed average tuition increase of over 10.5 percent.

"We're a tuition-driven University," said John A. Doody, philosophy department chairperson and chairperson of the faculty council. He said that a high priority of the University is to significantly increase the endowment.

"Endowment is the single most outstanding problem with financial aid. At the present time, there is no other choice than to raise tuition, for it is our major source of endowment," Fenner explained.

Fenner added that the administration has a long-term plan to increase the University endowment, primarily through the developing Covenant III campaign. "The emphasis [of Covenant III] will definitely be on the need for endowment for financial aid," he said.

The Budget Process

Addressing the alleged faults of the budget process, Brach observed that "everything around here [University programs] gets increased [in funds], just like the federal government . . . there's no place where there's student or administrative input to say that there is a program at the University that should be cut."

Lewis added, "There are programs that don't meet their goal. Case in point is the Common Heritage think-tank. It is a favorite of mine, but it is [worth] a good $50,000."

"They [Brach and Lewis] don't have enough information to make such a judgment, and it's not their responsibility. Just because they feel a program isn't appropriate and should be cut — well, that's their opinion," commented Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance and chairperson of the Senate budget committee.

According to Brach, the central flaw of the budget process is a lack of effective priority establishment.

Brach and Lewis said they oppose the practice of across-the-board spending increases for all University programs. "We say that this is a higher priority than this, but then they both get money in the end," Brach noted.

Clay responded that "not all priorities receive money."

He continued, "Yes, overall I support the proposed budget. But of course there are always places where it may not be as efficient as it could be, and there are many different personal opinions about what should be trimmed or cut. However, this is not within the power of the budget committee — it is the responsibility of the administration and the Board of Trustees."

Brach advocates an annual evaluation of University programs to assist the budget committee in effective prioritization. "This isn't something that should be done every ten years when we have the Middle States evaluation — it is something that should be done every year when the budget is planned," he said.

Clay said that "There is always a continuing evaluation within the school to complement such programs as the PEC [Program Evaluation Committee] report. As dean of Commerce and Finance, I, as well as my associates, are always monitoring and evaluating our internal processes."

University Growth

In response to alleged overspending by the administration, Lewis commented, "Things have exploded. The University is growing so fast that in the process, we think that we can keep raising tuition because the students are willing to pay for it. We think that we can do that because our prestige is so high, that we're such a great school and that other great schools charge higher tuitions.

"Things are moving fast at the University. We're growing so fast that along the way we're trying to carry a lot of dead wood — things that don't work, programs that cost money . . . Some of that dead wood has to be cast aside," he illustrated.

Lewis continued, "In the process, people's feet will be trampled on [and] power domains will be crushed."

Student Government Strategy

Student Government must obtain more than 50 percent of the Senate vote in order to defeat the budget. Brach said that he assumes he has the support of the 13 student senators. Therefore, he requires seven additional votes from the remaining faculty and administrative senators.

(File Photo)

Phil Brach, Student Government president, said he feels he has the support of the 13 student senators in rejecting the budget proposal.

A student-faculty-administration coalition may be the solution to defeating the budget, according to Brach.

He said he hopes a large student attendance at the meeting will be an impetus for the Senate to think twice about the issue.

Budget moves toward Senate

according to Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance.

The budget also include a 4 percent increase in room and board costs, an 8 percent increase in faculty salaries, a 33 percent increase in athletic scholarships resulting in a $497,000 increment and a 20 percent increase in financial aid which will result in a $492,000 increment, according to the minutes of the committee's Feb. 22 meeting.

There are also various increases for part-time students, Clay said.

Phil Brach, Student Government president, said the increase in financial aid is proportional to the increase in student tuition. "I am more than pleased with the report. We put a lot of hours into it," he said.

Later that afternoon Brach criticized the budget process and the University's position on the financial aid issue, saying that Student Government plans to resist the approval of the budget at the Senate meeting March 25.

At the Feb. 22 meeting, the committee members reviewed the budget proposal and discussed expenditures, including Food Services, expenses of the administrations of the individual colleges, the University's auxiliary enterprises and various student programs, Clay said.

"We're not in a position to comment on programs as they are, but when we look at the overall budget, we do wonder why some things are out of line. All of us are working on priorities, and we do check on those priorities," he said.

Brach said he feels that there should be a place in the future where the committee has the ability to comment on the University's programs.

According to Clay, the increase in student tuition is necessary due to an increase in the quality of the University. He added that it is also needed in order to make principal and interest payments on the duPont Pavilion.

"We also have academic programs that are rather prestigious now. If you go through engineering, nursing, arts and sciences . . . you're talking about a completely different program than we used to have," he said.

"It means, very frankly, more expensive faculty. I think the students are getting more than they used to get, and it costs more," he added.

According to Brach, the long-term financial picture for the University is weak. He added that he feels the University needs a large endowment but "it's hard to raise money for an endowment," he said.

All priorities were to have been discussed and voted on Monday as to whether they have been met, Clay said.

"When we've finished all of that, we take the budget as a whole and vote to approve or not approve it," he added.

According to Brach, he and Lewis voted not to accept the budget. Terri Vu, a student member of the committee, abstained.

Clay said that the committee's report will be presented to the Senate at its March 25 meeting.

Seminars will continue

By KRISTEN FALLAN
Staff Reporter

The freshman humanities seminars will be required of all incoming freshmen, according to Dr. Helen K. Lafferty, assistant to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Lafferty attributes the continuation of the seminars to their threefold success. Because of the college's commitment to the objectives and goals of the seminars, the faculty's cooperation and the positive feedback from the freshmen, she said the seminars will continue with little change in their format.

Currently, guidelines for the humanities seminars include written expression, a working relationship between the professor and the student, substantial reading and active class discussions. Ultimately the seminar's steering committee wishes to deepen the student's understanding of a "just and humane society."

Lafferty said that Dr. John M. Kelley, associate director of the Human Organization Science Institute, is now working with the faculty to "evaluate the format and effectiveness of the seminars as related to the students' learning."

One humanities course including English, philosophy, religious studies, or Western civilization, must be taken each semester by all freshman arts students. However, Lafferty added that by the fall of 1989 the seminars might also be required of the science students.

The seminars are offered only to freshmen because of the foundation they create for better learning and study habits. Lafferty said that the seminars "intensify further study in the students' other courses."

Dr. Helen K. Lafferty, assistant to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said the humanities seminars for freshmen will continue during the 1988-89 academic year.

Dr. Fred J. Carrier, a history professor who has been at Villanova for 20 years, said he feels that "the seminars are an exciting and promising innovation . . . for quality education" and "the studying and learning habits they create are essential."

Some of my upperclass students have difficulty writing," added Carrier. He said he trusts that the seminars will alleviate such problems.

Carrier noted that more expectations and responsibilities are placed on the students through the seminars. The students must read, discuss and write, utilizing their resources. Therefore, he said, "students come to an understanding through raising the important questions."

Because the classes are small, Carrier said he feels he can know individuals, their individual problems and as a result, offer the students individual attention and encouragement.

Apparently, the freshmen realize the added responsibilities involved in the seminars and understand that they "must be prepared because [they] cannot hide in the class," according to Carrier.

Freshman Kerrin McCormick, who is now taking her second seminar, thinks that "the class gives the student a general understanding rather than giving isolated facts that must be memorized."

Teresa Kavanaugh, a freshman also taking her second seminar, said she believes "the student interaction increases the understanding of the material." Therefore, students retain the knowledge and can discuss it at length, she added.

Gregory speaks

By SHARON M. NEUBAUER
Staff Reporter

Dick Gregory, entertainer, lecturer and political activist, gave a lecture on a number of various political and controversial issues in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center Feb. 28.

The lecture was jointly sponsored by the Black Cultural Society and the Villanova Union as the finale to the activities held in recognition of Black History Month.

According to Karen Peterkin, president of the Black Cultural Society, "I was surprised at the number of people who attended, we had expected more. We planned for about 350, and only about 150 showed up. The majority of those who attended were from other local colleges and universities."

According to Peterkin, "Gregory said that we as young people, both black and white, have a lot of work ahead of us. There is so much racism and sexism in the world that it is up to us to work to change it. Malcolm X, Martin Luther King and Gregory have opened up the door, now it is up to us to get in the door."

The lecture lasted approximately two hours, followed by a question and answer period. Gregory spoke on issues which affect both blacks and whites.

After the lecture, one student was quoted as saying, "I was really impressed. Dick Gregory made me think of things I never would have thought of. His sense of humor had me laughing, yet it also had me thinking."

Rick Johnson, chairperson for the lecture, felt differently about the outcome of the lecture.

"I felt it went fairly well, but I was not as pleased as I thought I would be. I felt a bitterness in the quality of his lecture. The emphasis was more negative, rather than positive or creative."

Underdogs beat odds

Once again the Villanova Wildcats can be called the successful underdogs. We applaud the men's and women's basketball programs for their outstanding efforts and recent bids to the NCAA tournaments.

Although the men's and women's basketball teams ended their 1986-87 seasons worlds apart, they shared a common bond entering their 1987-88 campaigns: both teams were expected to finish no higher than fifth in the Big East Conference.

For the men; 1987 was a disaster. From the Gary McLain revelations to the first-round loss in the National Invitation Tournament, 1987 was a rough experience. With no incoming help and an improved conference ahead, the fans and critics had the Cats buried in November.

On the women's side, 1987 was a season of great achievements. The team won a Big East Championship and a tournament berth, and Shelley Pennefather won the Wade Trophy as the Player of the Year. However, like the men's team, coaches, critics and fans expected the worst from the young and untested women's basketball team.

Surprise, surprise.

Villanova is one of only nine Division 1 schools to place both men's and women's teams in the NCAA Tournament. Whether the players and coaches ignored the gloomy predictions or used them to motivate themselves, it is not certain.

What is certain is that both Villanova basketball teams displayed great courage and perserverance under adverse circumstances.

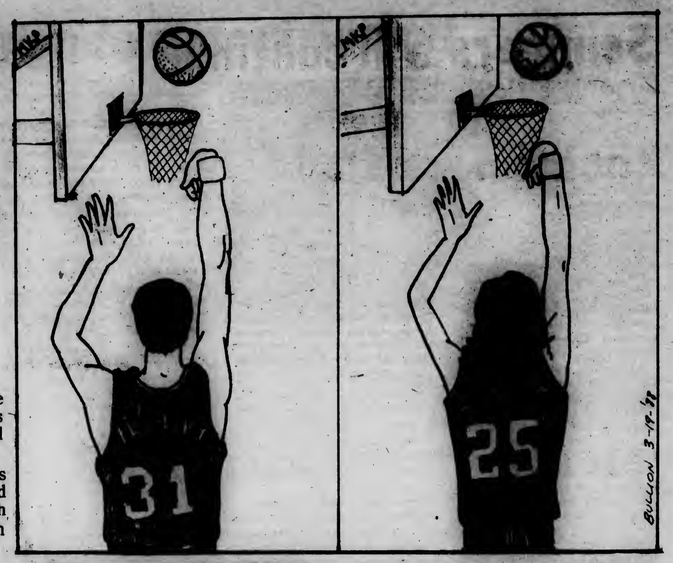
Since early successes for the men in tournaments in Hawaii and Philadelphia did not convince everyone in the country that the Cats were back, they decided to go out and ambush Syracuse University, St. John's University and Georgetown University for good measure.

Victories last week over the Redmen and Pittsburgh University in New York served as icing for an already sweetened season.

The women's squad, led by Big East Player of the Year Lisa Angelotti, racked up 20 wins and toppled Syracuse, St. John's and LaSalle University, all tournament teams. All those "untested" players finally received quality playing time and developed into quality players.

Head coaches Roland V. Massimino and Harry Perretta, the coaching staffs and the basketball players should be commended for a great year of Villanova basketball.

Pressure senators to defeat budget



Villanova students have the perfect opportunity next Friday to make their voices heard at the University Senate meeting.

Some signs of student life and movement from the apathetic attitude have been detected earlier this year, but now is the time to really show your concern about the proposed budget which includes an average 10.5 percent tuition increase across the boards.

Pressure the University senators to defeat the budget with your presence at the March 25 meeting.

The future is now in your hands. You can make a difference.

Support Student Government and utilize the power of numbers. If you don't, the tuition increases will only come out of your pockets.

Letters to the Editor

Op-ed outrages student

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to the 'beggars' article printed in the Feb. 26 issue of the Villanovan. I am now giving myself many a 'coup au derrier' for deciding to stay here and not transfer to Rutgers University.

Even with my cynical attitude toward "Vanillanova," I never thought I would see an article written with such contempt toward people and organizations who do not deserve such abuse.

Perhaps the time that went into writing this article would have been much better spent if the writer told the reader how to recognize a scam instead of implying that anyone who asks for something from you is some kind of a crackpot.

I must express my sympathy though, to the guy who had to endure all of these "beggars and so-called non-profit organizations." Imagine the torture of having to stand while the Jehovah's Witnesses made you listen to them. I would have been infuriated to miss the last few minutes of Donahue!

I sure hope that none of your friends saw you next to that deaf bum. He would definitely clash with your loafers. I am so sorry you had to part with two hard-earned quarters to get rid of him.

How were you able to stand that interrogation by the Red Cross? You must have had to use all of your wit to get out of that one.

Maybe the author would be more sympathetic if he was told the old proverb about standing in someone else's shoes. Take, for instance, the "greasy, sick-looking guy" in the airport. If I were a con artist, I would not do my job fuming in my own body odor.

That person is called a homeless, and smells like he does for obvious reasons. He is a strange creature that is for the most part ignored by the public when the media does not call attention to his problem.

Thousands of his kind can be found in New York subways during the winter. Unfortunately, they cannot go back to mommy and daddy like the rest of us when the going gets rough.

How many times have you lost a dangerous amount of blood in an accident? None? Whoever would have guessed! You obviously do not suffer from AIDS or hemophelia either. Next time I need a heart transplant, do not worry, I will not come looking for you.

As for religious organizations, I would not care to stand in the shoes of Falwell, but wouldn't Sally Struthers be a bit upset that someone wrote an article telling people not to give to the kids in Cambodia?

The writer of the article in question claims that he is sticking up for the "little guy," caught in the middle of "a world of pain, suffering, drugs, crime and other unpleasant things."

Anyone who can afford to go to Villanova has no right to portray himself as a victim of the times.

Until we wake up and smell the proverbial "coffee," we are all mere spectators in a country that has not yet emerged from the "Me" generation. As for his doctrine of apathy and despondence, I'll just say "No."

Abolish Apartheid

By KIM HOWZE

What are we to think about a society in which a minority government restricts and oppresses the native majority simply because of the color of their skin. I certainly cannot agree with it, and I am sure that the rest of the Villanova community shares my sentiment. I cannot look past the depravity to find anything beneficial in a government system that is so warped.

Do we not realize that Apartheid is the militaristic and violent suppression of a peoplehood? The armed regime of South Africa heavily guards the lands on which it forces the crowded natives to reside.

These living areas are barren with almost nonexistent vegetation. These are places that we would all consider uninhabitable. There is almost no running water, and whole communities must share a well.

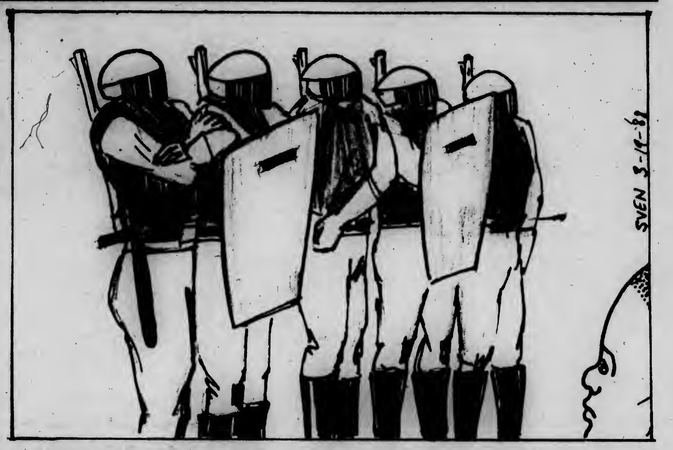
Even large families live in make-shift aluminum shacks and sometimes have only insects to eat.

It is not only a matter of the government not intervening to improve the situation. It is much more than that. This is a government established situation and one that the government, seemingly, prefers.

The South African government practices strict censorship of the media. It even prohibits the traditional journalistic response to censorship, which is to leave blank spaces where the banned material would have been.

This government forbids foreign press to film in many black townships. It goes to the extremes of confiscating the equipment of uncooperative press and of jailing stubborn journalists. South Africans, black and white, get most of the information about their country's racial unrest from visitors and foreign radio broadcasts.

This is a government that makes political arrests in excess of 40,000 each year. It detains thousands of people without trial, hundreds of whom are children under 16.



This government finds it necessary to extend its state of emergency, indefinitely, by the permanent institution of the Internal Securities Act. This government suspended pass laws, two years ago, only because "Apartheid can survive longer if the overstretched police and army ignore pass law violators and concentrate on the armed" black revolutionists.

There is so much more to be told. This racist regime forces blacks to do hard labor, but refuses to give even slightly sufficient pay; deprives the majority of the right to vote and all other political rights; and refuses to allow black children the same level and type of education as the white children.

The government allows, and probably wants, religion to reinforce the idea of white supremacy, for there are Afrikaner faiths that teach scripture-based race purity.

I do not understand the rationalization behind Apartheid, and I am appalled by the immorality of those who wish to preserve it. Since the black South Africans are without the tools to accomplish a revolution by themselves, we, as members of the international community, must continue to voice our protest. Only with the help of outsiders, will the 200-year-old system of Apartheid be destroyed.

Protests can make changes

To the Editor:

I am a student at Fordham University in the Bronx and recently had the pleasure of visiting Villanova. At that time I was struck by the amazing similarity between the two, even for two medium-sized Catholic universities; but what struck me most was the 10 percent hike in tuition recently announced, which is just what Fordham's administration announced to us three months ago.

For us this is the fourth such raise in four years, and students here finally said that they had enough.

Last December an ad hoc group of students here began to plan actions to protest the tuition hike. These started with a student strike four weeks ago. Over half the campus boycotted classes on the Thursday of the strike, and several hundred people came to a rally that afternoon.

The following day 131 students engaged in a two-hour "study-in" in the halls of the administration building because "there was no room to study" in Fordham's woefully inadequate library.

Two weeks later 56 students stayed in the library for two hours after it is 8 p.m. closing time in further protest of Fordham's student services, all of which remain abysmal despite the rapidly increasing tuition. These students are now being brought up on university judicial charges as a result of their action.

This Tuesday there will be a peaceful protest at the Board of Trustees meeting. We at Fordham are sick of being ignored by the rich corporate heads on our Board of Trustees who continually hike tuition beyond the means of many students to pay.

We are going to be heard whether the trustees wants to hear us or not; and whatever it takes, we are going to win. Students are already talking about a mass refusal to pay the extra tuition next year, and other plans are being discussed.

At Villanova you seem to be in much the same situation as we were faced with three months ago. You too can act to prevent these unjust increases.

Like Fordham's, your student government seems to believe that it has no business leading student protests that might jeopardize their letters of recommendations from Villanova administrators. John Lewis, student senator and member of the budget committee has said "If the students don't care to protest this issue it will be their fault, not ours."

Apparently Lewis does not think that he qualifies as either a student or a student leader. Fine. We organized without student government help and laughed as they hurriedly ran behind their constituency trying to catch up.

You can too. All it takes is a few people to put up signs announcing an initial organizational meeting. Student anger will provide the momentum from there on.

In four years of campus activism here I have never seen any issue come close to generating the amount of interest and activity the student strike has. This is a serious conflict which students have the power and determination to win.

I urge you at Villanova not to allow the Board of Trustees to act safe in the knowledge that students will not act, will not speak up for their rights, and will not oppose them no matter how obnoxious their edicts.

The Board of Trustees honestly does not care about you as an individual, only about some amorphous entity called Villanova that to them does not mean people but rather pretty building, a winning basketball team, a good reputation instead of a good reality and a student body too complacent to interfere with their schemes.

The time has come for students to speak up and speak loud. Make them hear you. Organize, demonstrate and protest. You've got nothing to lose and a university to gain.

Fight for rights

By TERISE FUSCO

Something exciting has made the news lately because it reflects the powerful feelings of college students toward their universities. It demonstrates the power of a student body, their perception of what their leaders' qualifications should be, and how the combination of these two can elicit change.

At Gallaudet University, a college for the hearing impaired, the student body president led the protest for a very sensitive issue.

After the Board of Trustees' appointment of a non-hearing impaired University president the students demonstrated, claiming that while qualified in every other respect, their appointee lacked the fundamental knowledge that each of the students share, the knowledge of a hearing impaired life.

The board evidentally has been consistently not meeting the priorities of the students. Hence, the protest was conducted, not against the newly appointed University president, but against the board's nomination of that person. The president resigned, and the board succumbed. Even the chairman of the Board of Trustees resigned.

What an enlightening statement this makes for all students. When people feel like they cannot fight the system; when they find working within that system is not effective, there are indeed possibilities.

In this situation at Gallaudet, the student leader recognized the board's choice of neglecting the student's interests. Rather than rashly attacking the president, he went to the source and solved the problem. The students banded together, not because of some trivial or remote cause, but for something necessary and sensitive to their lives.

To Villanova a message can be drawn from this exemplary situation; when selecting our new University president, care must be taken to evaluate each candidate's awareness of the issues crucial to the students' educational experience.

The candidate's stance on and commitment to resolving the crucial problems of the neglect of financial aid, the failure to offer adequate academic scholarships and the seemingly unreasonable but very consistent tuition increases, should be top considerations for the presidency.

Let the successful demonstration at Gallaudet be exemplary for us. We must always work with the system and we must never despair when those concerns that we hold dearest are being ignored, because carefully executed actions, in support of what is truly correct, will result in the progress that is necessary.

Terise Fusco is a junior political science major and student body vice president.

Letters policy

The Villanovan will print "Letters to the Editor" received at its offices in 201 Dougherty prior to the weekly deadline, Tuesday at 2 p.m. All letters must be typed and double spaced. The editors will withhold a name upon request, but all letters must be signed and should include the writer's telephone number. Because of limited space, not all letters can be printed. Others may be edited. Letters may be sent by mail to: the Villanovan, Villanova University, Villanova, Pa. 19085.

Editor's Note

The letter to the editor appearing in the Feb. 26 issue of the Villanovan regarding Villanova University Shop's book ordering and stocking practices, should have been cited as a reprinted letter addressed to the bookstore director from Philip V. McLaughlin, Jr., professor in the department of mechanical engineering, it was not a letter to the editor.

Catholic values should be taught

To the Editor:

Toe student responses in the Feb. 5 issue of the Villanovan to my remarks regarding "Academic freedom debated" and "V.U. surveyed on Catholic issues," both featured on the front page of the Nov. 6, 1987 issue of the Villanovan, require further comment.

I am pleased that I stimulated the thoughts of at least two of your readers, and I congratulate both for offering their thoughts.

For the record, I do not question Villanova University's excellence in secular education or, for that matter, inquiry into all thought. I do insist that a Catholic university be in concert with Rome. When in doubt seek Rome first when one claims to be Catholic.

As previously described, the war-imposed courses on the faith were bare-boned. Out of this truncated curriculum we came away faithful to the teachings of the Church in the framework of "Veritas." My Jan. 29 letter made no mention relating objective truth, as used in the sacred, to the physical sciences as Stan Carroll suggests. Whimsically, I suppose the case could be made, but who would wish to walk across a bridge designed with "subjective" stress analyses?

Carroll charged that I "attacked the concept of 'academic freedom'." In the Nov. 6, 1987 issue, the Villanovan ran a story reporting that the executive director of the Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities, Sister Alice Gallin, O.S.U., assesrted that the pontifical schema on higher education is "contrary to the American value of academic freedom."

If Gallin is correct, that is soothing comfort, personally, to be identified on Rome's side. If she is correct, Rome knows why Rom is "contrary to the American (underscore) value of academic freedom."

Why are 110 college presidents hassling Rome on this issue of academic freedom?

Notre Dame's ex-President Hesburgh characterized the schema as "unrealistic." According to Villanova's Charles L. Cherry, vice president of Academic Affairs, "[it] has a chilling effect" and "[is] an intrusion by the church in appointment of faculty." According to Michael E. Burke, director of the honors program, the firing of the Rev. Charles Curran of the Catholic University of America has a "dampening effect" on theology professors. Cherry continues that the disciplining of Curran "is a negative blow to academic freedom."

One is "chilled?" Another is "dampened?" Both because of a "negative blow" to a concept that has not been defined in any of the Villanovan copy on this subject from Nov. 6 to date?

I adjure the parties concerned to come forth and tell us, "What do you mean by academic freedom?" I really cannot find fault with, much less acceptance of, a concept the definition of which is not on the table as we enter debate on its merit.

Once, however, the parties referred to spell it out in reasonable detail, we shall all be able to weigh and opine. Until this is done, a big fuss is made over an unspecified term, and my limited educational background calls the situation "silly"; not a very technical term, nonetheless: "silly."

It is laudable that Kristin A. Switala expresses a desire to go into the world after graduation and to bring peace and justice to the oppressed, hungry and naked.

In the process of changing the world, we all ned to prepare ourselves leest the world change us — change us by the odious percentages contained in the mini-poll revealing student attitudes toward Rome, and lack of regard for guidelines of conduct fully spelled out by Rome.

Finally, what correlation can be accurately drawn between what we are taught, the attitude of our teachers toward Church authority, and the answers given to the mini-poll which revealed that 94 percent believe that pre-marital sex is not "wrong in all circumstances"; nearly 93 percent believe that artificial birth control is not wrong; (only) 14.3 percent believe that abortion should be made illegal. Is practice taking a back seat to teaching? Or is teaching also in the back seat? Will anyone field this one?

Artwork is sexist

To the Editor:

Recently we visited your campus to take part in an intercollegiate competition. During a break we read the Feb. 26 issue of the Villanovan.

We take extreme exception to Andrew Bullion's "Meet Johnny Hoon" cartoon. Because of its sexist content, we think it violates your stated editorial policy of "responsible freedom of expression."

The cartoon is not funny. It degrades women. It is heterosexist.

Bekkedam praised

To the Editor:

It was with great pleasure that I and other Villanova basketball fans witnessed the encouraging play of Barry Bekkedam in the Georgetown game on Feb. 15.

I am sure that Bekkedam will continue to develop as a contributing team member. However, I hope that the coaching staff does not consider his development to mean that they can now "back-off" the recruitment of at least one of the three big-men recruits presently under consideration.

The Perry Carter fiasco of last year should not be repeated since recruiting disasters, as we have seen, can and do happen (for example, Bobby Martin, Delino DeShields).

We in the Villanova basketball community look forward to the fielding of full-manned teams in the coming seasons; teams which will not be affected by injury or player exit.

Fraternity wants to serve V.U.

To the Editor:

As we approach the last half of the 1987-88 school year, the members of the suspended Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity would like to express their desire once again to be recognised as an integral part of the Villanova Greek community.

Throughout our misfortune, the spirit of this fraternity has remained high, as examplified by our members participation in the Special Olympics, Hunger Awareness Week, Radnor township community service projects, as well as a number of individual service projects.

In addition, we have the support of the Greek community behind us, along with other members of the student body. Considering all that has happened, having another strong international fraternity on campus can only benefit the Greek community and Villanova as a whole.

Although we regret any past negative behavior, the members of the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity look forward to serving our school's community again.

Boisjoly condemns Challenger crash

By KAREN IOVINO
Staff Reporter

On Feb. 24, Villanova students and faculty had the privilege of meeting and hearing the story of Roger Boisjoly. Boisjoly, once a senior scientist and manager of applied mechanics at Morton Thoikol (the corporation which supplied the failed rocket booster to the space shuttle Challenger) was subject to mental anguish from his company after he made NASA and Morton Thoikol aware of the defect in the boosters, or O-rings, included in the makeup of the Challenger and tried to deter the launch.

Boisjoly has since left Morton Thoikol, filed lawsuits against both NASA and his former company, and is using his experience as a basis for lectures on ethics in the workplace at college campuses across the country.

With a Bachelor of Science in mechanical engineering from the Lowell Technological Institute in Lowell, MA, Boisjoly was well equipped to work closely with the joints, which had failed previous postflight tests in March 1985. It was discovered that, in cold temperatures (50 degrees at the time of the test), the O-rings had a hard time sealing the booster joints, thereby impairing the performance of the shuttle and making the launch itself extremely dangerous.

NASA knew about these failed joints but, according to Boisjoly, made no attempts to stop flights until the joints were fixed. Boisjoly was part of the seal engineering team at Thoikol, trying to fix the O-rings, but claims that the team received virtually no managerial support.

On Jan 27, 1986, the night before the launch, Thoikol and NASA officials sat down at a meeting to hear Thoikol's flight recommendations for Challenger. The thermometer read 18 degrees with a temperature in the 30 degree range predicted for launch time. Thoikol presented their report, noting test results at the previously coldest launch were 51 degrees. The test showed seal impairment at this temperature.

However, further findings drawn from tests done with a machine without the flaws in the booster joint design showd no problems at 30 degrees. Thoikol put all of its information together and concluded that a launching below 53 degrees put Thoikol outside of its data base and that the shuttle should fly only at higher temperatures. When NASA pressed Thoikol for a decision, the company spokesperson responded that he could not recommend a launch.

NASA seemed appalled by this decision, and a distressed Thoikol called for a five-minute conference to review their flight decision. Boisjoly, desperate that the decision not be overturned, replated the date with a colleague, but the two were discouraged from commenting further by angry looks from Thoikol officials.

Morton Thoikol then made a list of data supporting a launch, ignoring the fact that they had never experienced a launch below 50 degrees. Thoikol reversed their decision and gave NASA a go-ahead for the flight, though Boisjoly asserted his feeling that there was an "extremely high risk of failure," and predicted loss of lives, if the Challenger were allowed to launch.

Boisjoly had not planned to watch the launch the next day, Jan. 28, 1986, but was encouraged to do so by colleague Bob Ebeling. After watching the Challenger make a clean lift-off, then explode 73 seconds into the flight, Boisjoly described himself as being in a "state of shock. I went back to my office and stared at the walls. It was devastating. I couldn't speak."

As a result of making the faulty rocket boosters known to NASA and the Presidential Commission, and fighting against a launch, Boisjoly experienced "extreme hostile treatment (from Morton Thoikol) due to telling the truth." Thoikol led him and the public to believe that he still held an important position in the company while, behind his back, telling NASA to keep him isolated from all aspects of the space program.

Boisjoly was devastated at this exclusion and in July 1986 took an extended sick leave from Thoikol. During this time he received professional help for a condition called post-traumatic stress disorder. As a result of the anguish and exclusion suffered at his company, Boisjoly (as well as Ebeling) resigned from Morton Thoikol.

Boisjoly states that he is saddened by the present state of affairs at NASA. Business at NASA is being conducted in the same manner as it was before the disaster. For instance, Boisjoly cites the example that NASA had stated that they would fix the ring that had failed in the previous flight. The newly fixed ring failed again in tests last December.

NASA then published that they would go back to using a previous design that had been okay in previous tests. In Boisjoly's opinion, NASA has made "a conscious decision to fly with something that is still a little bit broken. NASA is working within a broken system."

Boisjoly, generally a fan of the space program, is also saddened

Ex-Salvadoran student shuns governments

By JOE McGOWAN
Senior Reporter

In places such as Santa Marta and Las Vueltas the drone of A-37 planes precedes the release of the bombs, thousands of tons of which fall daily upon the hills of El Salvador. The death squads returned in 1987 (many people say that they never went away) and the names of such groups as Blanco Mano and ORDEN once more inspire terror.

On Oct. 26 of the past fall, Herbert Anaya, president of CDHES, the largest Salvadoran human rights organization, was assassinated as he was about to drive his children to school. Two months earlier Dr. Antonio Menjivar Flores, an economics professor, was assassinated on the campus of the University of El Salvador. Only a few months before, at the same campus, university student Rafael Cuellar was gunned down in his dormitory room.

All of these incidents are pieces of a war few acknowledge or care about. It is a civil war that each side is losing. And it is a war paid for by the United States.

The war in El Salvador and the American connection was what Rene Hernandez spoke about to students in Stanford Hall's fourth-floor lounge on Feb. 29 in a talk sponsored by Villanovans Concerned About Central America. Hernandez, a former student at the University of El Savador, left the country as a result of his activity with AGEUS (the General Association of Salvadoran Students) and has been traveling through the United States to speak to American college students about the plight of their Salvadoran peers.

Hernandez began his work with AGEUS in 1975, early in his undergraduate career. This was shortly after the second military invasion of the campus of UES (the University of El Salvador) by government forces. There would be a third invasion in June 1980. As Hernandez explained, college life is different in El Salvador. Books and blackboards are rare commodities — most classes do without both. And after the 1980 assault on UES, most classes were held in tents while the charred remains of the campus awaited rebuilding.

The government's antipathy toward college students stems from the work of such student groups as AGEUS — the demonstrations they stage, their calls for reform, and the protests that end with stone-throwing students chased across campus by tear gas cannisters and bullets. One such encounter in 1980 left 40 teachers and students dead.

Hernandez spoke to the students in the Stanford lounge about what American students can do to help. This included contacting congressman on the matter of military aid to the Salvadoran government and material aid campaigns to resupply UES and other campuses. He also spoke of the difficult choices that face Salvadoran students.

Although AGEUS is a student network independent of the major Salvadoran rebel organization, the FMLN (Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front), Hernandez said that some students choose to go with the rebels. He stated that for many of his peers the matter is one of whether to "leave the country, or join the armed struggle. Many students go with the FMLN. The majority of the people recognize and identify with the FMLN, but are not part of it. They [the FMLN] are out in the mountains."

Hernandez did not opt for the armed struggle, but has chosen to make contact with American college students and to urge them to make a show of solidarity with their peers in El Salvador.

It is a cause for which some Salvadoran students have died and are dying, while others, such as Hernandez, are in exile from their native land. Of a return to his homeland, Hernandez remarked, "It's dangerous, but I came back."

Dating when love is blind

By JACQUELINE GENTILE
Assistant Features Editor

The blind date: everyone claims that is how at least one of their aunts and uncles met, and that they have the perfect marriage. "Oh, that's how my Aunt Carmella met my Uncle Geunther and they couldn't be happier."

My instant reaction is that Carmella and Geunther were either the class nerds who could not get dates on their own, or they were just plain lucky. After all, for every blind date success story, there are probably hundreds of disasterous blind dates whose stories are better left untold.

But when my sister mentioned that one of her classmates from the culinary institute wanted to go out with me, I figured I might as well give it a try. After all, I was not going anywhere except home for spring break. My sister assured me that he was a nice person whom I would probably hit it off with, and if I could not trust my own sister, whom could I trust?

After I had given her my okay to be relayed back to her classmate, I said to my sister, "Wait a minute. How did he even know you had a sister?"

Her reply nearly put me in the hospital with a cardiac arrest. "Oh, I showed him your high school senior portrait."

I think it is nearly every girl's nightmare that someone should see a picture of her taken three years ago. But the fact that this guy asked to go out with me after he saw the picture really triggered some doubts in my mind about his character.

I stuck to my word though, and awaited the phone call as I lounged around my house and attempted none of the work I promised myself I would do during break.

One night, while I was in the middle of a James Bond movie and a Fosters Lager, the phone rang. I knew it was him — the date. Call it luck or intuition, but I was right.

The instant I heard his voice, suspicion overcame me. His voice was so deep that I was sure his name was really Vinny, he was in the Mafia and he really did not want to take me out on a date but was going to use me as a ploy in a big drug scam. My sister was probably involved in it, making a few grand from the deal. Or maybe he was really a spy, and the deep voice was just to cover up his Russian accent. But then again, maybe I had just been watching too many spy movies.

Of course, he seemed nice enough once the small talk got started. He said he had garde-manger. I asked him if it was serious or contagious. He told me it was a class in food arrangement and display.

I told him I was studying to be an English teacher. He said he got straight Ds through high school English.

After a conversation that ended awkwardly, he said he would call me later in the week. I figured there was about as much of a chance of his calling me back as there was of my doing the school-

Murphy's theory becomes law

By KRISTINE RYAN
Staff Reporter

Throughout history, numerous men have been hailed as geniuses because of their ability to observe, record and apply the laws of nature. Men such as Galileo, Newton and Einstein, as a result of their theories and observances, built the foundations upon which modern science is grounded. One man, however, rarely receives the recognition he deserves. His name is Edward Murphy and he coined the numerous maxim that bears his name. Murphy's Law is a strange and extraordinary phenomenon that plagues people of every culture and class.

The profound proverb boldly states: "If anything can go wrong, it will." It was divulged in the historic year of 1949 when Captain Murphy, an aircraft engineer, said in reference to a technician, "If there is any way to do it wrong, he will." The project manager, George E. Nichols, assigned the name Murphy's Law to that and statements of similar truths such as "Nothing is as easy as it looks," and "Everything will take longer than you think it will."

Today an abundance of adages fall beneath the category of Murphy's Law that describe the ironic quirks of nature, so bizarre yet so real. Taking a look around campus, one sees that Murphy's Law is very evident at Villanova University. Here are a few of the maxims that should be added to Murphy's Law to make it complete:

"The most beautiful day of the week will fall on the day prior to your most difficult exam."

"The one parking space available in the main lot is the one farthest from your class."

"The only day you see your professor outside of class walking through campus is the day you have cut his class."

"There is never a line for the shower room except on the day you wake up a half an hour late."

"Invitations for dinner are offered by family and friends only on the nights when the Pit serves the meals you like."

"The perfect class schedule, arranged so that it contains only the most convenient times, has you running from St. Mary's to Bartley halls in a span of 10 minutes."

As one can see, Murphy's influence still lives on. Through an extensive collection of evidence based upon experience and hypothesis, Murphy's Law has been found to withstand the test of time.

What is it that makes things happen at the least convenient times? No one knows exactly why what Murphy postulated is so precise; however, no one can deny the situations that point to its truth and accuracy.

Perhaps it is caused by something that needs to be researched based on an unknown, underdeveloped science called Murphonian physics.

Or maybe its cause is simply because we are human. Whatever the reason, Murphy's Law is a reality, especially for the college student at Villanova University.

For your health. . .

Are you tired after lunch or feeling groggy by 3 p.m.? You are not the only one. Researchers have shown that people, when given the chance, will sleep at least twice a day.

Many people in other cultures return home at mid-day to eat and nap before returning to work again. In addition, some animals have similar biological sleep-wake cycles.

Research suggests that naps might make people more efficient in their afternoon work because their sleeping clocks are in sync.

In Munich, West Germany, the Max Planck Institute tested subjects in an underground bunker for days with no music, writing, reading, alcohol, coffee or tea. They had no way to judge time and were asked to fall asleep whenever they felt the urge. The study found there were four-hour rhythm periods of increased readiness to sleep, in addition to night sleep. Daytime sleeping occured mostly at 1 p.m.

The purpose of this short siesta may be the body's way of conserving energy, a form of temperature regulation. Many people take naps in hot climates where the mid-day sun forces the body to use up more energy. In addition, night, the coldest time of the day, is another period that requires more energy to perform activities.

We should take naps, but in the work-oriented twentieth century it is difficult. Industrialization has broken our natural cycle.

Keep in mind that sleep is believed to help our bodies regain energy for concentrating. Without enough sleep, mental concentration and memory recall are reduced; the person becomes irritable and less able to deal with psychological stressors. Perhaps you may work more efficiently if you try a catnap after classes.

Advice from BUTCH BAXTER

Dear Butch,
Yo, homeboy my name is Trapper, and until lately I've been the world's greatest rapper. It seems my old lady thought I was fresh no longer, so she dished me for some stud who was richer and stronger. Now is the time that this dude confessed, since my squeeze busted out I've been a man distressed. Since I make my living rocking the mike, if I don't bag a gig soon I will be quite dismayed. See what I mean, I've lost it bro. Please help me recap my rap.
Signed,

Some people call me Butch, some people call me dude. I'm gonna tell you straight, I don't mean to be rude. You lost your way of talking when your babe went walking, and now you feel yourself illin'. Well I'll tell you friend you're nowhere near the end, and you yourself are the villain. So stop actin' blue and reach inside of you; 86 this trap and you'll regain your rap. Remember home bee there's other fish in the sea; find another hot mamma, although you may not wanna, and dish this attitude on the count of three.

Dear Butch,
I am a 58 year-old member of the clergy. I have devoted my life to serving my fellow-man and the Catholic Church. I have always been a model clergyman and have never had any difficulties with my superiors in the heirarchy- at least not until recently. My problem is that Rome objects to my latest hobby. After watching "First Blood" and "Rambo First Blood Part II" last month on the VCR, I have become very intrigued with the Rambo mystique. Some would even say obsessed. It all started innocently with my conducting mass in my fatigues, then I moved on to using Rambo analogies in my homily and replacing Bingo Night with Mercenary Night, finally culminating last week when I found myself dispensing holy water via an ouzi squirt gun instead of more conventional means. If this goes on much longer I could be in serious trouble. Please help me Mr. Ex-con before I'm excommunicated!
Signed,
A Fatigued Father

Hey Father Rambo,
You probably didn't know this, but "Rambo" was my favorite movie. When I saw it I cried very hard. (I must have gone through seven rolls of Brawny.) It is easy to see how such a moving picture could affect you so deeply. My advice to you is to stick to your guns (literally). After all, they started the war, you didn't. And by the way, I would appreciate it if you would move Mercenary Night to Thursday, I haven't been able to watch "Jake and the Fatman" in weeks.

Dear Butch,
I am respectfully inquiring about your professional opinion regarding a matter of a psychological nature. It seems that over the years I have developed what is referred to as a multiple personality, and I have been having difficulty self-coexisting. You dig? I don't know why I'm telling you this though, you incompetent slug. I guess I was just wondering if you would be kind enough to help me with your incredibly wise insight and great advice. You know, I'm one of your biggest fans. So if you're not busy stealing United Way collection boxes or beating up small children, I expect your cooperation, you excruciatingly ugly ex-con! I really must be going, I have to put the finishing touches on the Butch Baxter voodo doll. There is no rush on your reply, so take your time and think about it pal. And remember, it is crucial that you respond immediately! Did I tell you I'm one of your biggest fans? See ya later loser.
